Mixon said the Freshman Forum was initially designed with two primary purposes in mind: 1. to be an introduction to creative arts, and 2. to be a bane to "Mickey-Mouseism."

Jordan, in explaining the organization and accomplishments of the Freshman Forum, emphasized that it was not a committee for freshmen only, but that participation from other classes was needed.

The Present Freshman Forum evolved from discussions at Freshman Camp last year headed by Jordan. There it was decided to give the freshmen a definite program during their initial year at the University.

The second series of programs began with a discussion on "Beat Generation."

Since then, the program has included a week-end trip to New York City which was taken by 41 freshmen boys and girls. Visits were made to Carnegie Hall, Broadway, the United Nations buildings, and the Museum of Modern Art.

The Freshman Forum's future programs include a "Poetry and Jazz" series March 12 and a performance of "End Game" by Samuel Beckett to be managed by freshman with Carolina playmakers assisting.

A creative workshop has been scheduled for May 12 and 13 at Cherry Grove Beach, S. C., the final program of the year.

Mixon, in relating the hopes of the forum, said, "We are trying to have a higher level of programs to stimulate students in every field.

"Next year we want to reach more freshmen because they felt they gained so much from it this year. We also want this committee of freshmen to continue to work next year and to publicize and get it off to a good start at Freshman Camp."

Playmaker Production Is Sold Out

Standing room only!

This is the situation at the Playmakers Theatre for the performances of "The Would-Be Gentleman" tonight through Sunday.

Standing room tickets will go on sale each night for the rest of the week at 7 p.m. at the theatre box office.

Curtain for the production is at 8:30 p.m.

Directed by Russell B. Graves, of the Department of Dramatic Art, the cast features James Poteat as M. Jourdain; Margaret Starnes as Mme. Jourdain; Barbara Hicks as Dorimene; Robert Ketler as Dorante; and Lore Schuller as Nicole.

The production will not be held over, according to Dave Peterson of the Playmakers business office, because try-outs will start Monday for another production.

Honor Council Will Hear Traffic Case

The Traffic Council sent one case to the honor council recently as a result of their hearings on student traffic violations.

During the last two weeks the Traffic Council took action on 19 cases.

Indefinite suspension of motor vehicle privileges was rendered in one case, and six students received probations for one semester.

Other action included giving seven warnings.

Only four cases were dismissed.

'TACTIC'—Comedian Steven Allen joins other show business personalities on "Tactic," a new series on cancer control beginning Friday at 9:30 on WUNC-TV, channel 4. "Tactic" is produced by NBC in cooperation with the American Cancer Society and the National Educational Television and Radio Center, and will be televised by WUNC-TV every Friday at 9:30 p.m.

Junior Wins $100 Student Writing Award

Bobby G. Cahoon, a junior geology major, has been named North Carolina winner of a $100 Student Writing Award given by the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

Cahoon, whose home is in Harbinger, Curituck County, was chosen for his article on mining in North Carolina. The North Carolina subsection of AIMME gives the annual award.

State Affairs Committee Opens Drive At Budget

The Committee on State Affairs, a student organization to promote the needs of the campus in the state's General Assembly, has launched a letter-writing campaign to impress on legislators the student interest in the University budget.

Cooperating with the committee are numerous campus activities, includng the IDC, IFC, Young Democrats, Young Republicans, Women's Residence Council, class officers, and church groups.

These organizations will distribute names and districts of the state senators and representatives to members, urging them to write a short note to their representatives in the Assembly supporting agreed points of the budget.

The committee stresses the following as necessary items in the upcoming budget: increased faculty salaries; increased number of faculty and researchers; movement towards a new student union; more acquisitions for the library; and more tools of teaching—necessary supplies and equipment presently missing from many classroom buildings.

Members of the committee plan to spend afternoons in Raleigh speaking with the state legislators and to meet with the Appropriations Committee of the Assembly the third week in March.

Continuing its all-out effort, the committee will invite legislators who are fraternity men to visit their fraternity houses here.

Chairman Norman Smith urges all students to help the committee in its present campaign. "We're going to exert every effort to present an informed student view on the needs of the University to the members of the General Assembly," he said.

He expressed the belief of the committee that a great expression of interest on the part of students in the affairs of the University could influence the state Legislators.

Colonel Catt To Address Air Society

Col Harold J. Catt of Seymour Johnson Air Force Base at Goldsboro will be the featured speaker at the open general meeting for the Arnold Air Society Conclave being held here.

Catt will present his address on "American Preparedness" in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. today.

In the meeting open to the public, Colonel Catt will present an address on the state of the United States' military preparedness as to its ability to effectively cope with the present state of the world and any future developments that may arise in international affairs.

Catt is presently director of operations for the Tactical Air Command's Nineteenth Air Force at Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, Goldsboro, and Foster AFB, Texas. He previously served as group commander with the 312th Fighter-Bomber Wing at Cannon Air Force Base, N. M.

The speech is presented as the keynote address to delegate attending the Area C-2 Conclave of Arnold Air Society. Arnold Air Society is a national honorary organization of Air Force ROTC cadets with exceptional potentials as Air Force officers.

Jim Kelly, a senior from Flemingsburg, Ky., was recently named batallion commander of the local Naval ROTC unit. Kelly is also president of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. He plans to enter the U. S. Navy in June after graduation.

Spring 'Y' Conference Features Noted Writer

He will discuss United States foreign policy in relation to the contemporary world situation in his three addresses.

Harrington visited UNC at a summer school Y-night and during the 1958 Carolina Symposium, speaking then on a special concern of his, the Communist party in the United States and its connection with the party in Moscow.

"Mr. Harrington is an intelligent, effective speaker with a viewpoint which is critical, yet at the same time challenging," commented former Cosmopolitan Club president Sipra Bose. "I have been highly impressed with his awareness of world affairs."

YWCA staff secretary Anne Queen cited the width of Harrington's knowledge in the field of literature, politics, and religion, his excellence as a writer, and the sensitive way in which he deals with the questions

Free lance writer Michael Harrington will make his third appearance before Carolina students at the spring 'Y' Conference at Bricks on the week-end of March 6-8.

A graduate of Yale Law School, Harrington is currently engaged in research for Fund for the Republic.

Last Day To Order Graduation Invitations

This is the final day for seniors to order commencement invitations. These will be the only invitations available for commencement.

Members of the Order of the Grail will accept orders from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Y building lobby today.

Alpha Kappa Psi Pledges Elect Class Officers

Other officers elected in the regular weekly meeting were Bill Hoover, vice president; Edward Jennings, treasurer; Jerry Cauley, secretary; and Claude Herndon, social chairman.

These officers will serve during the current pledge period.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled in Graham Memorial today include:

Budget Committee, 3-5 p.m., Grail Room; Morehead interviews, 2-2:30 p.m., Grail Room; GMAB, 1:30-3 p.m., Roland Parker I; Campus Chest, 4-5 p.m., Roland Parker I; Campus Chest, 4-5 p.m., Roland Parker II, Orientation interviews, 2-5 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; free dance with combo, 8-12 p.m., Rendezvous Room; Publications Board, 4-5:30 p.m., APO Room.

Student Legislature Backs McGuire's Sportsmanship

'Lost Weekend' Offers Challenge To Students

The event is the GMAB Lost Weekend, to be staged March 6, and the competition fee is only $2.50 per couple, which may be paid at the Graham Memorial Information Office any time prior to the duel.

The battle of ears promises to be an enhancing one as Dave Brubeck is scheduled to be the prize for all to hear from 3-5 p.m. next Friday. The feet, too, are in for a treat. They can perform the same night to the rhythm of the Gladiolas and Shadows.

The winner of the third section of battle—wits—will be handsomely rewarded with a tangible prize. The problem? Simply submit the best name for the Lost Weekend.

DAVE BRUBECK
. . . a treat for the feet

BUDGET MEETING

Four budget-attack mobilization meetings will be held today in the Library Assembly Room in the basement of Louis Round Wilson Library.

The short meetings will discuss various phases of the UNC budget.

Dean James Godfrey will explain the operations budget at 3 p.m. Salary increases and additional personnel will be discussed by J. Carlyle Sitterson at 3:20 p.m.

University Librarian, Jerrold Orne, will explain the Library's request at the 3:40 p.m. meeting.

The last meeting during the afternoon will be the discussion of the Division of Health Affairs featuring Henry T. Clark Jr.

Conference Begins Today

The fourth annual North Carolina Conference on Handicapped Children will be held at N. C. Memorial Hospital today and Saturday.

The program will be devoted to the whole field of rehabilitation, but there will be special emphasis on rehabilitation needs of children and on special problems created by prolonged illness and diability in the growing child.

Everyone who has an interest, personal or professional, in the rehabilitation of disabled children and adults is invited to attend the conference.

The sponsoring agencies for the conference are the Coordinating Committee On Handicapped Children of the North Carolina Health Council and the Nemours Foundation.

The main purposes of the conference are:

1. To study the diseases and disabilities which provide the need and opportunity of rehabilitation.

2. To study the special problems related to long term disability and rehabilitation in children.

Publications Board Group Starts Study

The Publications Board study group met Wednesday to discuss recommendations to be submitted to the Student Legislature March 4. The group will meet again March 3 for further discussion.

Items under study at the Wednesday meeting were the present composition of the board, selection of officers, relationship to other student government agencies, powers in financial policy, and means of selecting editors and business managers of the publications.

Ballot Boxes Increased In Certain Areas

By STAN BLACK

A vote of confidence in Coach Frank McGuire and the UNC basketball team was unanimously passed by the Student Legislature in its meeting last night.

The resolution passed affirmed the Legislature's "utmost confidence in the efforts of Coach McGuire to maintain order and good conduct at Wake Forest." It further declared that "Commissioner Weaver's reprimand be considered degrading to the fine efforts of Coach McGuire and the basketball team."

There was only highly favorable comment from the body when the resolution was introduced under special orders by Ira Hardy (UP) and Dave Jones (SP).

Also included in the resolution was recognition that Coach McGuire's action were in the interest of curbing violence rather than promoting it." A final provision called for next year's home game with Wake Forest be played at Woollen Gym as scheduled.

The Legislature also passed several revisions in the General Election Law dealing with the placement of ballot boxes in certain town and dorm districts.

Under the law as it now reads, residents of Town Men's I will be able to vote in both the Carolina Inn and the Naval Armory. In Town Men's III boxes will be placed in Graham Memorial and the Western Union office. An amendment to the bill made from the floor last night sets up boxes for Town Men's IV at Gerard Hall, and at sites to be chosen by the Elections Board in Glen Lennox and Victory Village.

Another bill introduced by Dave Jones (SP) provides that ballot boxes will be placed in Connor, Kenan, and Teague Dorms, with the added provision that these polls will be kept open from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.

The membership of the Campus Orientation Committee was increased from 18 to 22 by a bill introduced by David Grigg and passed under special orders.

A study committee was established to look into the possibilities of a recreational and picnic area near Victory Village by the passage of a bill introduced by Bill Miller and Troy Blanton. The area, if obtained, would be primarily intended for the use of the residents of Victory Village, but would be open to all students.

The Legislature also passed a bill to appropriate $75 to the University Art League to enable it to complete its second year of operations. The money will be used to finance the Sidewalk Art Show and the presentation of several films on art and painting to be shown during the spring semester.

Civil War Centennial Conference Here Sat.

A Civil War Centennial Conference will be held here Saturday sponsored jointly by the UNC, the State Department of Archives and History, and the North Carolina Literary and Historical Association.

The States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana are expected to be represented. An attendance of one hundred is anticipated.

The purpose of the conference is to make preliminary plans for commemorating the approaching Centennial of the War Between the States. Various positive steps to be taken will be discussed.

At 12:30 there will be a luncheon at the Carolina Inn, presided over by Dr. Robert B. House, former chancellor of the University. A welcome will be extended by William B. Aycock, present chancellor, and a word of appreciation will be spoken by Col. Hugh Dortch of Goldsboro, chairman of the North Carolina Civil War Centennial Committee.

Dr. Bell I. Wiley, professor of history at Emory University and a member of the United States Civil War Centennial Commission, will speak on the significance of the Centennial.

At 2:30 p.m. a panel discussion in the assembly room of the library will be moderated by Dr. Christopher Crittenden, director of the State Department of Archives and History.

Among the leading participants, with their subjects, will be collecting and preserving manuscripts, Dr. James W. Patton, University of North Carolina; preserving books and archives, Mrs. Mary G. Bryan Georgia Department of Archives and History; publishing, Lambert Davis, UNC Press; museum participation, E. Milby Burton, Charleston Museum; preserving and marking historic sites, J. C. Harrington, National Park Service; the Drama, Paul Green, playwright and author, Chapel Hill; what the State of Virginia plans to do, James J. Geary, Virginia Civil War Centennial Commission, Richmond; the program of the United States Civil War Centennial Commission, Edmund Gass, of that commission, Washington.

An exhibit of Civil War manuscripts and other source material is being shown in the Southern Historical Collection of the library.

Chi Omegas Name Elder As President

Jenny Elder is the new president of the Chi Omega sorority. She and seven other officers were recently elected to serve from March this yar to March 1960.

The Big Issue

One candidate in the Spring elections has come out strongly in saying that the most major issue facing the University at the present time is the need for money. While the editor agrees with the candidate that the issue of money for this University is of very major concern, it is not the central issue before the University. Indeed, as fundamental as funds are to this University, it could well win every budget battle and still lose the main war—the preservation of its own integrity as a community of individuals committed to the pursuit of truth.

The big issue is on what basis is the University asking for money and what does the State conceive of the role of the University at Chapel Hill. One of the basic underlying issues in this problem is the issue of growth—increase in numbers of the student body.

It may not be clear to some that if the University grows beyond a certain number, it will cease to be and has no hope of ever being what it should be—a community of persons committed to the pursuit of truth.

Already there is a horizontal fragmentation of the University community into the professional or trade schools on the undergraduate and graduate level, and if this growth continues there will be further fragmentation depending on which floor of which dormitory a student may live.

It is clear that the University is presently committed to this growth. The University prospectus, "Planning For The Future," upon which the majority of the budget request was sold is little more than a statistical projection of enrollment and a report of needs per student or thousand student increase. Surely, it contains such interesting facts as there are 147 students on athletic scholarships totalling in revenue $145,000, while there are 550 students on scholarships that are non-athletic totalling approximately $125,000. It contains certain new programs the University plans to undertake, but still in all it contains very little more than a growth projection.

On the basis of this growth projection the University will have a student population of 15,000 in the year 1970 (this figure approximates the mean between fall enrollment and lower periods during the year). However, by the time the University climbs over the 10,000 mark, the University will have already radically changed in nature.

Many people have pointed out that this is a state university and has an obligation to serve the graduates of the state high schools. Yet, it is these same people who fail to realize that this state possesses a statewide system of education including several institutions of higher learning, and with proper planning the standards of the University could be bettered at all levels while the others could prosper.

There is much more included in this concept than just limitation of enrollment. There are problems raised concerning other schools in the state system, and concerned with the structure of UNC at Chapel Hill, however, it is basic to the future of the University for it to decide where its progress lies—whether it is toward a community of individuals committed to the pursuit of truth or whether it is toward a high caliber undergraduate educational factory where the student is to all intents and purposes a number rather than an individual. The country needs more of the former and less of the latter if it is going to make its brain power tell in the coming years.

The University is approaching the age of the eight-story dormitory. There is still time to change direction.

Labor

From recent reports it seems that the violence in Henderson is now a two-way proposition in that strikers are currently doing a little throwing of bottles and other miscellaneous objects around the vicinity of their employer's establishment.

Before the situation gets any worse, it is time for state authorities to step in and set up some mediation. If not, this particular strike could get even further out of hand.

"Words are not words except when they are said by someone to someone . . . Only then, functioning as concrete action, as living action of one human being, do they possess verbal reality." —Senor Ortega y Gasset

The art of conversation is dying.

It is getting more and more difficult to sit down with a group of people and TALK.

One of several things happens. The people have nothing in common, find it out, and resort to further activities to keep from getting bored. They disperse, and there is no further conversation.

Or the group finds its members mutually attractive and the group keeps talking. (This group may be said to consist of any number of persons over one.)

Now, what is happening is this: people are becoming very adept at talking for hours—without saying anything. Many are the occasions when two people can leave each other after a conversation and neither of them will have the faintest knowledge of the other's' personality.

Or else, each will leave the other carrying away with him a totally distorted picture of his companion's real SELF.

What is killing conversation?

Clifton Fadiman says that overavailability of authority is one of the main culprits.

Today, conversation is all too often an extended bout between two or more opponents who try to exceed each other in: quoting books, magazines, newspapers, pamphlets, TV programs, Broadway plays, and other people; parrying and saying extremely clever things; narrating personal travelogues of past trips to Uusikaupunki, Transoxiana, or southern Alabama. Each person strives to stop or top his conversational comrades.

Last week I asked a friend of mine to have a cup of coffee with me.

"I'd love to, but I can't, he replied. "I have to get ready for a party tonight."

"But it's only two o'clock," I said.

"Oh, but you don't understand," he said earnestly. "There's going to be some very intelligent people at this party and I've got to read up on things so I can talk with them." He shuffled off towards the bookshop with this apology.

I can just imagine what brilliant bits of conversation my friend held out that night in his hot little hands for the others to pounce upon or to devour for their own later use.

By starting his preparations so early in the day, I am sure that by party time he was able to quote the opinions of Norman Cousins, Eric Fromm, Jonathan Daniels, F. Scott Fitzgerald, and Pascal. What is more, I am willing to bet that he did not preface all these conversational offerings with "I just happened to read that . . ." More likely, he was prone to say: "I think that . . ." and continue an oral plagarism.

And after he left the party, only his conversation remained. Out of the things he said the others fashioned their estimate of him. How many at the party would ever guess that he cared and cared desperately what they thought of him? Cared so much that he spent his whole afternoon snatching bits and pieces of information just so that he could talk to them? Who would guess that after the party he went home completely exhausted and fell asleep muttering "damn people." They probably all felt sure that he had gone right home and switched on a record by his favroite symphony (actually, he had just read about it that afternoon) and plunged enthusiastically into some erudite book.

Who is the better conversationalist? The man who has just finished reading every available source on the Berlin situation and who spends his conversation time telling his listeners about the Berlin situation?

Or, the man who, upon tasting his Scotch and finding it utterly satisfying, proceeds to tell those around him that he enjoys his Scotch?

I think I would much prefer the man who liked his Scotch. Because he said something he felt when he said he enjoyed it. And I would be inclined to think that anything else he said would also be based on sincere and personal observation.

Conversation is the translation of one's personality into words. If the personality fails to come through, then the words are lying. And if enough people say the wrong words, then we will all be talking to non-existent personalities, to shells of people who don't like themselves the way they are and who compensate by dipping themselves in a supperficial shellac.

The Real Issue

A University Community

Bill Bailey

"University: An institution organized for teaching and study in the higher branches of learning, and empowered to confer degrees in special departments." So says Webster. But sometimes this definition bothers me, for as I scrutinize my surroundings here, I find not only disagreement and wonder, but disgust. The University, better defined, is but a gear in the social machine, designed to crank out of its bowels an animal adjusted mentally and physically for . . . business, medicine, theology, and other such organized chicaneries. Everyone has his little slot; the University only lets him slip in more easily. Individualism is barked at us from the classroom and the pulpit from the time we first enter school until senility pulls a veil over our intellect: hands grab you up intermittently through life, shake you and say, "Be somebody! . . . Think!"; then they gently lay you back on the conveyer belt, turning the switch that feeds you into the machine.

The University, then, is merely a finishing school for human uniformity . . . a little scaled-down republic to blind the schoolboy, through its own pettiness, to the obsenities that follow. Meticulously the fellows with the Christian-democratic qualifications are picked to rule. Next comes the faculty, who are patriarchly looked up to, and selected for their Learning and Integrity. The Ivies follow: frat men, campus queens, politicians, and similar lice . . . these are the Accepted that step only in their leader's shallow footsteps. Then the Playmakers; the odd birds who are the Unaccepted and step only in their leader's shallow footsteps. Now we turn to the last catageory: the do-nuts and black coffee set that take their work seriously and strive for the heights of knowledge, pouring over tomes and frequenting the neighborhood library . . . who question everything but their own opinion.

And as soon as these yearlings have been weaned and carefully groomed, they are sent to pasture with the human herd, each going to his separate group to munch upon the crabgrass of his particular environmental ego. The human is the most domesticated of all animals, and he never fails to invent a new gear in his social machine to print a finer pattern with rounder corners and smoother surfaces. And the chance of rejects are lessened each day. Yet the real paradox of the whole affair is that the human secretly realizes this, but pacifies himself by suckling at the teat of free will, insisting that he can change at any time. This, I feel, is the height of boobery . . . and the trademark of civilization. It is this that contributes most to his doltishness; and it is this that most disgusts me.

But . . . no fear. Society is not in danger, for it has successfully stuffed rags into every escape crack in its framework. It actually makes one nervous to contemplate fleeing. I suppose then, I can but wave a handkerchief as I disappear into the mouth of the machine, shouting, "I forgive thee.

'Breakfast At Tiffany's': A Worthwhile Book

Anthony Wolff

BREAKFAST AT TIFFANY'S. By Truman Capote. 179pp. New York: Random House. $3.50

In a recent televised discussion on Beat Generation literature — or the lack therof - Mr. Capote found himself without words to express his feeling on the subject. He struggled for a few moments, and finally came out with the most apt remark to date on the subject of this new writing (Kerouac, Holmes, et al): "It isn't writing . . . (agonized pause) . . . It simply is not writing . . . (pause again) . . . It's just typing!"

In this classic one-sentence critique, Truman Capote identifies his own allegiance by implication: he is one of those all-too-rare modern writers who has a healthy respect for the rudiments of sixth-grade English prose, combined with a sure sense of the altogether magical uses to which such prose can be put (by union-magicians only).

If all art involves magic in the sense that something is "created" which has a very special relationship to "reality" as we commonly experience it, then Mr. Capote's art is remarkable for the tenuousness of that relationship. Not only does he enjoy creating a reality of his own: his reality lacks that privileged quality in relation to universal experience which is the hallmark of great art.

In BREAKFAST AT TIFFANY'S, Mr. Capote flaunts his shortcoming with unforgivable sass: he gets away with it by the skillful charm with which he is associated even in his most inconsequential work.

The title novella in this book is an excellent example of Mr. Capote's entertaining specialty. An unembroidered review of the plot serves only to damn the whole thing: a teen-ager from Texas comes to the big city and sets herself up as a high-class prostitute, her one steady job being that of a well-paid visitor to a lonely old man at Sing-Sing; in which capacity, rather than her more steady employment, she gets in trouble with the law and skips town; this whole tale being told as a nostalgic bit of gossip by a writer who lived in the same New York brownstone with this heroine (whose improbable name, by the way, is Holly Golightly - Lolita's big sister of sorts) during her heyday.

There are of course complications: Miss Golightly has run out on an unbelievable hick of a husband, who shows up in New York looking for her; and more of same.

The point is not, however, that this brief bit of chicanery fails, but that it succeeds in spite of its transparency. Miss Golightly and her cooky crowd may have only curiosity value, and the reader may completely break his acquaintance with them upon closing the book, but for the time that the book is open the whole motley crew is most ingratiating.

Along with the title story go three short selections which have appeared elsewhere but are collected together for the first time in this volume; included among them is "House of Flowers," which Mr. Capote developed into a successful Broadway musical about five years ago. It is the old story of the prostitute with a pure heart, who finally finds true love and lives happily ever after. But told in the delicate style of a Haitian folk-tale, the old story takes on a new, refreshing sweetness: again, Mr. Capote works magic.

The second short story, "A Diamond Guitar," is the least of the three. It concerns the friendship between two convicts, and the death of one in an attempted escape. The story turns on the relationship between the two: a relationship which has the aura of homosexuality, albeit latent. While the feelings of the older convict for the younger, pretty one are tenderly described, and the undeniable attractiveness of freedom shines forth like freedom pure from the printed page, it is still difficult to get past the effete and pitiable romance to the idea of freedom which is the mainspring of the piece.

After these three stories, each more-or-less exquisite in its prose but lacking in substance, comes "A Christmas Memory," whose eighteen pages are worth the price of the whole book and the attention of repeated readings. It is a first-person narrative, written from the point of view of a young child whose constant and beloved companion is an ancient distant cousin who is herself in a second childhood. Through the clear eyes of the little boy and his cousin, Mr. Capote describes the sights and smells of Christmas. The boy and his ancient female relative perform the elaborate annual ritual of baking thirty Christmas pies for people who live far away and are almost strangers, and yet who seem to be their best friends; they go to the woods to gather holly and cut a tree, which they decorate. All this takes place against the briefly sketched background of a family which isolates the two children - young and old- and leaves them to their own devices.

Mr. Capote describes the relationship between the two, and the events of their partnership against aloneness without sentimentality: by using the boy as the narrator, and registering the story on the boy's sensibility, Mr. Capote reproduces first-hand the love and the underlying sadness of the two.

Obviously, Mr. Capote's relationship to childhood is problematical; likewise his relationship to sexuality: this much may be inferred from this slim volume alone, even without the memory of Truman Capote as the recumbent enfant terrible of delicate features and silken blond bangs. Without trespassing the proper bounds of criticism, it may be said that Mr. Capote's writing is confused about sex, clear about childhood. Perhaps these qualities do not promise great art, and certainly Mr. Capote has produced no art of any great pretensions, despite his promising debut in 1948 with OTHER VOICES, OTHER ROOMS.

What he has produced is a small body of work in a day when writers seem to weigh their worth by the pound; and he has proven himself an exquisite craftsman in a day when craft is held in low estate by the sex and sadism writers who predominate, as well as by the Beat writers, the realists, naturalists, etc. Given time, Mr. Capote may produce a "major" work of fiction; certainly he has as great a gift for English prose as any living American writer. All too often, however, the substance of art is lacking.

For the time being, however, this little volume needs no defense: for sheer reading pleasure and as an example of the possibilities of English prose, BREAKFAST AT TIFFANY'S is properly cherished. "A Christmas Memory" is a perfect short story, just to add to the delight.

Visiting Report

PART II

Students are keenly aware and rightfully concerned over this situation, and over what will surely occur at Chapel Hill if the problem is not soon remedied. They selflessly give to high faculty salaries an even higher priority than to those of their own important needs. For such a spirit we are indeed proud, as it augues well for the kind of young people we are educating at the University today.

The Administration is gravely concerned with the situation, and places higher faculty salaries as the number one item on its agenda. It has defended its position before both the Board of Higher Education and the Advisory Budget Commission with resourcefulness and vigor. It plans every effort to persuade the current General Assembly of the urgency of this need.

We are persuaded that no more improtant problem than faculty salaries faces the Board of Trustees.

II. THE STUDENT BODY

At the close of registration on September 24, 1958, the number of students at Chapel Hill was 7,513. Of this number 5,979 are men and 1,534 are women; 20.12 per cent of the men and 3.10 per cent of the women are married, as against 23.02 per cent of the student body married in 1957-58. The Committee visited with and interviewed representative student leaders on several occasions. We were both pleased and impressed with their maturity and sincerity of purpose. They evidenced a keen interest in and appreciation of the more crucial problems now confronting the University. We found a strong and well-functioning student government and many other allied campus activities. This sphere of college life is to be encouraged as a necessary adjunct to the academic in the finishing of well-rounded citizens. For a case in point, it may be recalled that twenty-eight of the forty-five governors of North Carolina have studied at Chapel Hill. The invaluable experience which they and countless other statesmen gained there by participation in campus affairs is reflected in the sound leadership which has always been ours in this state.

Transition from the sheltered and supervised life of home and high school to the vastness and freedom of a great university is not easy. Much is needed at Chapel Hill to help the early undergraduate, and particularly the incoming freshman, bridge this gap. That such a gap exists is evidenced by the large number of underclassmen who fail to maintain the basic academic standards of the University. These student casualties, it should be remembered, were admitted on the basis of College Board Examinations which supposedly reflected adequate inherent ability and preparation. Reasonable measures should be taken to prevent these casualties. Failure to do so is not only tragic to those youths concerned, but is patently costly to the people of North Carolina.

An environment conducive to reasonable comfort, study and minimum recreational and social needs would contribute much to the general welfare of the student body at Chapel Hill, and, we believe, would be reflected in better academic performance of the student. Crowded and bleak men's dormitories deny students adequate facilities beyond those required for existence. Study halls, typing rooms, recreational and reception rooms for family and friends are all lacking. Some of the newer dormitories are better equipped; however, the $2,500 per capita state restriction placed upon the construction of new dormitories will not provide what we believe to be the desirable accouterments. We feel it is time that more emphasis be placed upon making the residence hall a positive factor in the educational program rather than a mere place of lodging.

If the facilities listed in this section are not to be found in the dormitories, it would be logical to ask where on the campus they might be found. Library space allows only a maximum of 600 students, or 8 per cent of the student body, to study there at any one time; therefore, much study must be done in the dormitory room. And it should be remembered that many of these rooms are crowded by housing three students!

It would seem appropriate here to consider the status of housing for the myriad student activities which we believe to be such an important part of university life. Graham Memorial, the present student activity center, was built 27 years ago. It was built entirely by private subscription, without cost to the state, to accommodate a student body of 2,600. Due to a scarity of funds, only one-third of the building proposed was completed. This woefully inadequate structure must house all student publication (including a daily newspaper), student government and every like activity, including a host of committees. Added to these uses it is the sole building on the campus for social and recreational pursuits. Its deficiency is further accentuated by its geographical location on the northernmost perimeter of the campus, almost a mile distant from the new dormitories south of Kenan Stadium. The majority of students do not belong to fraternities and are thus denied virtually any healthful social or recreational outlet!

From the basic facts of this Report may be seen the great need for a modern, physical adequate and centrally located student union.

On the brighter side of student welfare we are pleased to report that the administration introduced a special counseling program in five dormitories in the fall of 1958. The program is intended primarily for freshmen and sophomores. To quote from the report of the Dean of Student Affairs: "The aim of the program is to reduce the number of academic failures by assisting students to make a sound beginning of their college careers. The Resident Counselors may contribute to this aim by promoting a generally better atmosphere in the dormitories . . ." Counselors are graduate students, and each is responsible for thirty students. It is believed that this program constiutes a forward step in fulfilling a real need. We anxiously await a report on its progress. Should it prove fruitful, every effort should be made toward its expansion, to the end that every underclassman might avail himself of its benefits.

Vick Chemical Co. Offers Summer Jobs

Vick Chemical Co. is offering summer positions for undergraduate male students planning careers in advertising, merchandising and sales. A company representative will be on the campus March 4 and 5 to interview qualified and interested students.

Men selected will be assigned to work in one or more northeast, midwest, southwest, central or southern states under direction of the Division Sales Manager and his staff. Their job will be to sell Vick products to retail outlets. Travel within the area to be worked will be continuous for the 12-week period of employment.

In addition to the selling work, the men will be required to place Vick advertising and point-of-sale displays.

The salary offered is $200 per month plus all expenses. These expenses include meals, hotel, rooms, car, laundry, valet and tips. A car will be furnished by the company and all expenses paid for its operation.

A bonus of $100 will be given upon successful completion of the 12-week program.

To qualify for this position the applicant must have marked ability to conceive new and better ways of solving problems, above average facility in oral and written expression and the ability to lead and direct the activities of others as demonstrated by leadership in past activities.

Good health and necessary ruggedness and stamina to perform vigorous physical work and travel are also necessary.

Further information may be obtained and interviews arranged by contacting the Placement Service in 204 Gardner Hall.

King Is Named Faculty Of School Of Dentistry

Dr. James B. King Jr. of Pittsboro has been appointed to the faculty of the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry.

that the adoption of a revised calendar could stabilize the date of Easter on April 8. That would be only one day removed from the true anniversary of the Resurrection.

So that all adults and school children who desire may see the tribute to Easter, the program will be given 26 times a week. Additional programs will be presented upon request by large school, civic or religious groups.

Campus To Get 'Old' Look

By JOAN BROCK

Some 1,200 high school "gladiators" and their lovely ladies will transform the campus into a Roman arena of 700 B.C. when the eighth annual Junior Classical League convention convenes on Saturday, March 7.

A highlight of the day-long conference will be a Roman fashion show featuring togas, swords, shields, and laurels. Other events will include special discussion sessions and Planetarium viewings.

Registration will begin at 9 a.m. in Memorial Hall, where the opening session is set for 10 a.m. Kenan Professor B. . Ullman, chairman of the UNC Classics Department and coordinator for the event, will welcome the students. Paddison Professor Robert J. Getty will address the group.

The N. C. Junior Classical League is composed of students of Latin from 30 schools throughout the state. It is a chapter of the national Junior Classical League, a daughter organization of the American Classical League, which Dr. Ullman headed for 10 years as president.

Officers of the organization for 1957-58 have been Pat Walker of Henderson, president; Scott Summers of Morganton, vice-president; David Brunson of Charlotte, secretary; and Gordon Mattocks of Jacksonville, treasurer.

State sponsor for the league is Mrs. Mae C. Satterwhite of Oxford. New state officers will be elected at the close of the conference.

(By the Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and, "Barefoot Boy with Cheek.")

HUSBANDS, ANYONE?

It has been alleged that coeds go to college for the sole purpose of finding husbands. This is, of course, an infamous canard, and I give fair warning that, small and spongy as I am, anybody who says such a dastardly thing when I am around had better be prepared for a sound thrashing!

Girls go to college for precisely the same reasons as men do: to broaden their horizons, to lengthen their vistas, to drink at the fount of wisdom. But if, by pure chance, while a girl is engaged in these meritorious pursuits, a likely looking husband should pop into view, why, what's wrong with that? Eh? What's wrong with that?

The question now arises, what should a girl look for in a husband? A great deal has been written on this subject. Some say character is most important, some say background, some say appearance, some say education. All are wrong.

The most important thing—bar none—in a husband is health. Though he be handsome as Apollo and rich as Croesus, what good is he if he just lies around all day accumulating bedsores?

The most important thing in a husband is health

The very first thing to do upon meeting a man is to make sure he is sound of wind and limb. Before he has a chance to sweet-talk you, slap a thermometer in his mouth, roll back his eyelids, yank out his tongue, rap his patella, palpate his thorax, ask him to straighten out a horseshoe with his teeth. If he fails these simple tests, phone for an ambulance and go on to the next prospect.

If, however, he turns out to be physically fit, proceed to the second most important requirement in a husband. I refer to a sense of humor.

A man who can't take a joke is a man to be avoided. There are several simple tests to find out whether your prospect can take a joke or not. You can, for example, slash his tires. Or burn his "Mad" comics. Or steal his switchblade. Or turn loose his pet raccoon. Or shave his head.

After each of these good-natured pranks, laugh gaily and shout "April Fool!" If he replies, "But this is February nineteenth," or something equally churlish, cross him off your list and give thanks you found out in time.

But if he laughs silverly and calls you "Little minx!" put him to the next test. Find out whether he is kindly.

The quickest way to ascertain his kindliness is, of course, to look at the cigarette he smokes. Is it mild? Is it clement? Is it humane? Does it minister tenderly to the psyche? Does it coddle the synapses? Is it a good companion? Is it genial? Is it bright and friendly and full of dulcet pleasure from cockcrow till the heart of darkness?

Is it, in short, Philip Morris?

If Philip Morris it be, then clasp the man to your bosom with hoops of steel, for you may be sure that he is kindly as a summer breeze, kindly as a mother's kiss, kindly to his very marrow.

And now, having found a man who is kindly and healthy and blessed with a sense of humor, the only thing that remains is to make sure he will always earn a handsome living. That, fortunately, is easy. Just enroll him in engineering. © 1959, Max Shulman

One week ago yesterday Carolina was sitting at the top of the basketball world. The night before they had beaten arch-rival N. C. State. They were undefeated in the ACC with an 11-0 record and ranked number one in the nation by both major polls.

Now, only one week later, they have absorbed two straight lickings at the hands of teams they had easily defeated earlier in the season. They have dropped like a plummet in the national rankings. They have dropped to second place in the conference.

One week ago it looked like the Tar Heels were in the driver's seat to stay. With three conference games left, all they had to do was win one to tie and two to be home free. Now the complexion of things has changed drastically. The Tar Heels must beat Duke in order to even tie for the title.

If the Heels beat Duke, and it must be phrased as a question at this stage, a drawing would be necessitated between Carolina and State to determine the top seeding in the ACC tournament.

How can a team fall so far in just one short week? There is probably no one answer. For one thing, the Tar Heels have run into two "hot" teams who were "up" for the game. For another thing, Carolina has not been playing the kind of basketball it is capable of playing.

We still maintain that Carolina has not cracked, that the Tar Heels have just had two bad games. We feel they will come around and play as well as they have shown they can. But the time is running out for the Heels to come around. This Saturday they must produce or else

Maryland shot a phenomenal 53% from the floor while Carolina could manage but 37%. Obviously, it is almost impossible to beat a team that shoots such a percentage. Also, the Heels lost sparkplug Harvey Salz right in the midst of a rally.

At Virginia, it would almost seem that Carolina was simply beaten by a better team. The Carolinians had chances to win but didn't take advantage of them. The Cavaliers could do no wrong all night. Perhaps the sleeping Virginians have finally begun to perform up to the potential everyone predicted they had.

Should Carolina lose to Duke Saturday, it will be placed in the lower bracket, and that could be costly. It would mean that the Heels will be facing tougher foes in attempting to gain the final round of the tourney.

So, for the first time in two weeks, the Carolina fans can look for themselves Saturday and see if the Tar Heels have flopped or if they still have the great team that vaulted to the number one position in the country. We think that they will not be disappointed.

ON WEAVER'S RULING

Commissioner Weaver's ruling on the Wake-Carolina brawl had good and bad points. His calling Coach Frank McGuire down for poor bench discipline was a little out of line. Recommending that Lee Shaffer be reprimanded was even more out of line.

The ruling that no basketball game will be played between the two teams at Winston-Salem next season was a good one, but prohibiting students to attend through their student tickets will accomplish little, if anything.

Chancellor William B. Aycock deserves a pat on the back for his stand on the issue. Aycock released a statement Tuesday which said, "We are not prepared to reprimand Shaffer." The Chancellor went on to explain that he did not believe Shaffer had done anything to be reprimanded for.

He also refused to reprimand McGuire for his bench discipline. Aycock was right in both instances, and Weaver was wrong.

Weaver's presentation of the facts was not tied together as it should have been—it distorted the thing from what actually happened. He said he had determined that the fight started between Lee Shaffer and Charlie Forte. Well, that is true in a sense, but Shaffer didn't have much to say about whether a fight started or not since he didn't have a chance to start it or stop it.

ACC Swimming Finals Get Rolling Here Today

By JOHN JUSTICE

The ACC Swimming and Diving Championships get into full swing today at 1 p.m. Eight events will be run, with the finals beginning at 7 p.m.

On Thursday afternoon, Tar Heel Coach Pat Earey singled out some men likely to be outstanding. In the 100 or 200 yard fly a tight race is expected between Mast of Virginia and Carolina's Randy Dodson, with Smith of Duke pressing both boys.

Bob Hunter of Carolina is picked by Coach Earey to win the 100 yard back going away. However, in the 200 backstroke, Mills of Maryland, who has been rapidly improving, will be tough competition for Hunter.

There are tri-favorites in the 440 yard free style race. Carolina, with Vinny Simonton and Harry Bloom, or Maryland, with Baeth, will probably take the event.

Bloom May Lower Records

Bloom is also favored in the two races which he will defimtely swim, the 220 and the 200 individual medley relay. Not only is he favored, but Earey figures that with enough competition, the Tar Heel ace stands a good chance of setting a new record for the two events. The most likely man to press Bloom is Sinclair of Maryland.

A Terrapin is also expected to win the diving crown. Kohl, who took top honors in Maryland's meet with the Heels, is heavily favored to sweep the field in the tournament also.

In the 400 medley relay Carolina almost certainly will win. Duke is given a chance to take the 400 free style relay.

ACC Race Already Decided

Unlike most conferences in the country, the ACC tournament means nothing, as far as the Conference championship is concerned. Carolina, being undefeated, has already wrapped up the title, and gains nothing except prestige from piling up points. This situation is disapproved of by Earey, who favors determining the championship by tournament meets.

In a tournament the strength (or weakness) of a squad is shown by its depth, whereas in dual meets, a team with a few good boys can win. A tournament deciding the championship would not only be fairer, according to Earey, but would also create more spectator interest, since the championship meet would really have meaning for the teams. Earey hopes to get the ball rolling for the change by sending his suggestions, discussed at the coaches meeting Thursday night, in to the ACC Commissioner's office.

meet any time today or tomorrow Tar Heel mermen, who have lost in Bowman-Gray Pool. The meet is to only one team in the last three the final home appearance for the years.

1500 Meters Won By Vaeth

The first event in the Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming and Diving Championships ran pretty much to form as Mike Vaeth, a husky distance man took the 1500 meters race. Vaeth covered the long (almost a mile) distance in 20 minutes, 50.5 seconds.

Swimming against Vaeth in the second of two heats, Soule of Duke had the second best time. Vinnie Simonton of Carolina captured the third position, as he swam in the slower first heat.

Vaeth captured the lead early in the race, which consists of over 65 laps, and paced the field most of the way. The battle for the runner up spot was close with Soule's time of 21:14.5 edging Simonton's 21:47.9.

On tap tomorrow is the low board diving at 1 p.m., followed by the preliminaries in seven events in the afternoon and by the finals in these same races beginning at 7:30 tonight.

Tracksters To Entertain Pack Here Today In Practice Meet

By BING SOMERS

The N. C. State Wolfpack track team invades the Tin Can this afternoon for a dual practice meet with the Tar Heels beginning at 4 o'clock. Both varsity and freshman squads will compete.

Highlighting the affair will be the talented Tar Heel twosome of Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop. Scurlock, probably the country's finest half-miler when he wants to be, won last week's Big 4 Invitational half with a 1:51 which shook the foundations of the world's indoor mark missing it by a merger .7 of a second.

Bishop In Mile

Bishop, winner of the two mile in the same meet with a 9:11.9 (possibly the finest ever run indoors in the South), will go down to the mile today.

Five others of the UNC team deserve close attention. They are John Sylvester (440), Lyndon DeBorde (high hurdles), Ward Sims (pole vault and broad jump), Don Kemper (shot), and Cowles Liipfert (two mile). The first four won their events in the Big 4 meet and Liipfert, running his fastest mile (a fleet 4:17), came in third in a disputed finish.

Frosh To Compete

The freshmen, who amassed 81½ points in completely butchering their opposition in last week's meet, will be led by Dennis Rash, who won the quarter in 51.2; Barry Tiedemann who vaulted 13' for another first; Jim Whicker, who jumped 6' for another; Dave Peltz, who ran a 2:02 half for still another; and Wilfred Turner, who ended the massacre at around 9 that night by gobbling up both hurdle events.

Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton are expecting full participation of both varsity and freshmen teams.

INTRAMURAL WRESTLING PROGRESSES

The Intramural Wrestling Tournament in now in full swing. However, the wrestlers are reminded that they must weigh-in again for the semi-final events, and also for the final matches.

Each contestant must have been weighed in 10 min. before their scheduled match. The contestants may weigh in earlier, however, they must be made within 24 hours before the match.

The contestants should call the Intramural Office to arrange a time to weigh in. An official will be on duty once the matches have begun.

Schedules will be mailed to all Intramural managers, and the schedules for the matches will be posted on all Intramural bulletin boards in Woollen Gym.

Final matches will be one, two and two minutes periods instead of the three one minute periods that were held in the first rounds.

Zetes Handball Champs

The Zeta Psi's won a decisive victory over DKE Wednesday and were crowned undesputed champion of the handball division. Also, on Wednesday the SAE's won a table tennis game over ZBT which was in regular play.

TAR HEELS FACE DUKE TODAY AT 2

Tie With N. C. State In Standings At Stake

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels entertain Duke's young Blue Devils here this afternoon at 2 o'clock with a first place tie in the ACC at stake.

The Heels must win in order to tie N. C. State for first place honors in the league. The Tar Heels are currently 11-2 in the loop while State is 12-2. A win by Carolina today would necessitate a drawing for first place seeding in the ACC tourney.

Duke is in third place in the ACC with a 7-6 league record and a 12-10 mark overall.

Lost Last Two

The Tar Heels, after running off 11 straight victories and climbing to the number one spot in the nation, have dropped two straight contests. Maryland completely whipped them 69-51, then Virginia turned the trick 69-68.

Duke owns victories over both the Terps and the Cavaliers, but Carolina beat the Devils the first game in Durham by 89-80. In that one the Heels came from 11 points behind and on Doug Moe's sensational playing from the pivot won going away. Moe scored 32 points.

The Devils have won three straight contests, beating Navy (64-63), Wake Forest (85-78) and Virginia (71-63).

Led by Hurt, Youngkin

Duke, which won only four of its first 12 games, has a starting lineup composed completely of sophomores. Leading the Devils are guard Howard Hurt and center Carroll Youngkin. Hurt is hitting at a 15.9 pace while Youngkin is right on his heels at 15.8. Doug Kistler is the only other man in double figures with 10.1. The starting lineup is rounded out by guard John Frye (8.6) and forward Fred Kast (6.1).

In spite of two straight losses, Carolina's entire starting five is still averaging in double figures. York Larese remains high with 16.2, followed by Lee Shaffer (13.2), Doug Moe (12.7), Harvey Salz (11.8) and Dick Kepley (10.3).

The Blue Devils would like nothing better than to avenge their previous loss and at the same time accomplish a similary thing that they did last year. Last season the two teams went down to the wire with identical 10-3 records. Duke beat Carolina in the last game of the regular season to take first place and drop the Tar Heels into a second place tie with State.

Limited AM Transmission Begun By WUNC Radio

By CARL CAPPS

Residents of Joyner, Conner, Alexander and Winston dormitories can now receive WUNC Radio programs at 645 Kilocycles on their AM radios through a carrier current transmission sytaem.

WUNC Radio has now added an AM frequency to its broadcasting services. The initial broadcast of this new addition to its broadcast service will be this afternoon at 1:25.

On the initial broadcast the radio voice of the University will present a play-by-play account of the Duke Carolina basketball game. Dave Wegerek will be the play-by-play announcer, with John Moore providing color.

This will be a simulcast broadcast on WUNC-FM at 91.5 on the FM dial, and on the carrier current AM frequency, 645 Kilocycles.

All programs which are now being broadcast on the FM frequency will be available to the carrier current audience.

Carrier current radio transmission, as the name implies, is the process through which the program signal is carried to the individual receiver along with the AC power.

This transmission is presently on an experimental basis and will be received in only the four dorms. WUNC Station Manager Jack Mayo said he hopes the operation will be expanded to other dormitories in the near future. Mayo holds the highet student position on the staff of the student-operated station.

Programs will be carried from radio studios in Swain Hall to Joyner dormitory on telephone lines. At that point the signal will be added to the electric power.

Residents of all four dormitories can be thus assured of good, clear reception, Mayo said should anyone experience reception difficulties, they can correct them, in most cases, by reversing the plug in their well sockets. Portable battery-operated radios will also receive the station if they are in one of the four designated dorms.

The programming of the station on both frequencies will be the same, Mayo said. As of March 1 the programming will be: from 6-7 p.m., dinner music consisting largly of the familiar classical composers: from 7-8 p.m., drama, discussions, and news features; from 8-10:15 p.m., favorite classical works by the world's best known artists; at 10:15 p.m. each day, a 15 minute summary of local, University and state news. The newcast is followed by "Soliloquy," a program of lighter music and show tunes as played by the more prominent orchestras of the day, such as Mantovani, Melachrino, Jackie Gleason, Paul Weston and Andre Kostelantez.

Program Director Ted Harrison considers that "the programs this year have reached a new high."

WUNC (FM) was started as an experiment. A 1955 publication of the station described the station: "WUNC began broadcasting in the fall of 1952 as an experiment. Many universities and colleges have 'campus stations' with student staffs and programs designed for campus audiences. Others have stations with professional staffs which broadcast mainly to the public. WUNC attempts to provide a broadcast service which represents the University to the people of North Carolina and to do it with a student staff."

It has been a policy of the station to attempt to provide a broadcasting service that is not generally available and does not pattern its programs after the schedule of most existing stations.

The addition of a carrier current frequency now makes this unique programmings service available to an even larger audience.

The entire staff of WUNC is made up of students. Staff positions range from announcing, engineering, news writing and reporting to promotion-publicity, programming, and management.

With the exception of government-licensed transmitter operators none of the students receives any pay.

Noted Pianist To Perform Monday

Pianist Louis Kentner will present a concert here Monday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. His performance concludes this season's Chapel Hill Concert Series.

Carolina students may attend the Kentner concert free upon admission of Identification Cards. Co-sponsor of the concert is the UNC Student Entertainment Series.

Kentner will perform these selections during his concert Monday: Fantasia in C Minor by Mozart, Sonata in E Major by Beethoven, G Minor and A-flat Major ballades by Chopin, Arabesque, Opus 18 and Toccata, Opus 7, by Schumann;

Kentner was a well known pianist in Europe for many years before he first made his appearance in the United State in 1956. Since 1956 he has toured many states and Canada.

Concluding the Chapel Hill Concert Series, Kentner will follow performances by baritone Leonard Warren, violinist Berl Senofsky and the New Orleans Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

The next major concert this season will be pianist Roger Williams, who is being brought here by the Student Entertainment Committee.

Legislature May End Permanent Jurors

Permanent jurors for Honor Code violation trials may be abolished in the near future.

A bill introduced in the Student Legislature by Bill Porter (SP) would delete all mention of permanent jurors from the bill passed last year setting up the jury system. The bill will be voted on at next week's meeting.

In the past, two of the four permanent jurors have been designated to sit with seven temporary jurors in consideration of each Honor Council case. This provision was to guarantee that someone familiar with the judicial system and the law would serve on each jury.

At the time the system was established, it was hoped that the permanent juror feature could be dispensed with after the student body gained experience in serving on juries.

Norman B. Smith (SP) and Bob Pierce (SP) introduced a resolution declaring support for the UNC budget requests to the General Asembly.

Another bill introduced by Norman B. Smith would establish a committee to study the pay, employment and working time of several classes of University employees.

Jim Scott (SP) introduced a bill to establish a committee to administer the television repair fund.

An article in yesterday's Raleigh "News and Observer" assured statewide publicity for the resolution passed Thursday night by the Student Legislature commending Coach Frank McGuire and the basketball team for their restraint at the Wake Forest game.

The resolution followed a ruling of "strict probation" for both the Wake Forest and UNC basketball teams and coaches by ACC Commissioner James H. Weaver. On Thursday UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock made public his own disagreement with Weaver's reprimand.

Dave Jones (SP) and Ira Hardy (UP) co-authored the resolution, which included recognition that Coach McGuire's actions at the game were in the interest of "curbing violence, rather than promoting it."

'Challenge' Speech Postponed Till Wed.

The speech by Fayetteville attorney J. O. Tally Jr. has been postponed until Wednesday, March 18, at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Tally was originally scheduled to speak on the Y-sponsored "Challenge of 1959" series Monday night.

Party Plans Party Mar. 9 For Support

The Democrats and Republicans aren't the only ones who can hold $100-a-plate dinners to drum up party support.

It won't cost University Party members $100, but the UP is planning a cocktail party and dinner for Monday, March 9, at the Carolina Inn Ballroom.

Special party members will begin selling tickets Tuesday, Party Chairman John Minter said Friday.

A guest speaker will be present for the dinner.

The UP isn't trying to raise money necessarily, Minter said, but is sponsoring the party and dinner to advance the UP's cause and get more active support.

UNC Budget Needs Defined, Explained In Library Meeting

Four University administrative leaders urged full faculty support for the original University budget request at four meetings held yesterday for the purpose of explaining the budget and ways of mobolizing the faculty.

The meeting, held in the Library Assembly Room, discussed four phases of the budget—non-personnel, library, personnel salary and health affairs — and how the professors could help to get an increase in the appropriations for the coming year.

The professors were asked to talk with citizen groups and alumni. The purpose of these talks will be to try to show the citizens where and how budget money is spent. Although a total sum may seem large enough for for its intended purpose, broken down the sum may fall quite short, stated Dean of the Faculty James L. Godfrey.

Godfrey cited the example of the appropriation for the non-personnel group. (This group includes supplies, printing, general expenses and equipment.) $855,000 is available for this group. Of this amount, $395,000 is spent for food for Lenoir Hall. Similarily, food for Spencer Hall comes from this sum. The result is that only one fourth of the total appropriation is actually spent for academic supplies.

In another phase of the budget, that of personnel salaries, only a 2.1 per cent increase has been granted. "If the University is to teach more students without lowering the quality of instruction, it must have additional faculty in the next biennium," J. Carlyle Sitterson, dean of the college of Arts and Sciences stated in a prepared speech.

Dean Sitterson pointed out that Carolina, in comparison with a survey of salaries at 23 state universities made in 1958, fell below in professor, associate professor, assistant professor and instructor sal-

Campus Chest Aids Retarded Children

A cerebral palsy victim builds strength in his left arm, and children of low intelligence quotients learn how to live in society with self confidence — all in the Orange County Class for Mentally Retarded Children.

The importance of what is being accomplished in the special class for mentally retarded children influenced members of the UNC Campus Chest Board to include this class in its budget.

If the 1959 Campus Chest goal of $3,000 is reached, 20 per cent (or $600) will be turned over to the class. The drive to raise the necessary $3,000 will be held on campus beginning Monday for a week.

In addition to the mentally retarded children, the Campus Chest will aid the World University Service and the Goettingen Scholarship Exchange Program. Each of these latter two will receive $1,200 from the Campus Chest.

In electing the mentally retarded children's class as one of its agencies, the Campus Chest Board noted the need of the children for special equipment. This need was reported by Board members who visited the school.

John Whitaker, a board member who observed the class, said Friday that the $600 from the Campus Chest could fill equipment needs of the children for several years. These needs are not being fulfilled now because federal grants and state aid are ued to subsidize the teacher's salary.

As it is, Whitaker reported that Mrs. Thelma Brummett (the teacher for the class) often uses her own money to purchase equipment needs for the children.

Some of these needs as pointed out to Board members by Mrs. Brummett include: special typewriters, a small practice stove for the girls, tools for the boys, special books with high interest but low word difficulty and a record player and records.

RETARDED

Because the purpose of the mentally retarded children's class is to make these students valuable members of society, Mrs. Brummett told Board members that special equipment is necessary to meet the special needs of each child.

Even with 13 students in the class, a great deal of individual attention must be given to the children who range in age from 9 to 16 and from 50 to 70 in intelligence. One student may be of third grade ability in arithmetic and of first grade ability in reading. The other students vary in their abilities and special needs also.

HUNGRY PHOTOGRAPHER TELLS IT

It Takes Guts To Beat This Guy

By PETER NESS

Thursday night at La Pizza was the scene of the pizza eatin' championship of Orange County. Chuck Gerke, owner of La Pizza in Carrboro, decided that it was time to find out how many pizzas a pizza eater could eat, so he offered a prize of $10 to the man who could eat the most. What follows is a true blow by blow narrative of the hijinks that occurred during the course of the evening.

I entered La Pizza at 7:15, camera in hand, and glanced around the room. At one table sat Lester Fisher—looking hungry enough to eat the silverware. (He and several other contestants had fasted all day in anticipation of the event of the evening.) Fifteen minutes later the first pizzas were on the tables, with the starving contestants busily devouring them.

At 8:30 the champ-to-be walked in, sat down and immediately ordered two pizzas and another two in reserve. This brave young man was Benjamin Gallagher, a freshman football player. Spectators looked on with awe as he polished off his first two and started in on the third. The other contestants watched with dismay as their hour and four pizza lead rapidly disappeared.

In one corner Lester Fisher sat staring at a slice—in another corner Charlie Webb was chewing a bite with no apparent pleasure. Fisher, with the look of a full man upon his face, finally gave up.

The 10:30 finish line finally arrived with Gallagher and Webb deadlocked for first place at five pies each. The manager decided that a run-off was needed, so another pizza was placed before each contestant. Webb just sat there staring at his, looked at Gallagher eating away, decided he had reached his limit and threw in the napkin.

The final score was Ben Gallagher, first place; Charlie Webb, second place; and Lester Fisher, third. For eating his way to second place, Webb got $5. And the special award for the third place winner was—a pizza dinner for two.

Berlin

For the second time in a year the United States finds itself working with a deck of cards with the full knowledge that all the aces are being held by the Soviet Union.

The situation is Berlin, and the time is now. The possibility of grave trouble—even war—is imminent.

The Western World is faced with a situation whereby Russia can offer German unification and the West cannot, and at present the Russians are playing the trump card to the hilt..

The lakest development is the fairly strong rebuff given by the Russian government to British Prime Minister MacMillan, the result of which is to throw such papers as The Charlotte Observer in such a state of fear that an eight column banner appears pointing out the increasing possibility of war.

The Observer is only partially right, for at the present Russia has very little to profit from an all-out war, while it may have a great deal to profit from a limited war.

At the present time Russia is trying to build up and consolidate its power and acreage in the face of a double threat. The overt threat is the threat of the West to its designs for world domination. The second threat which is no less real is the threat of the ascendant China whose potential power is already being brought to bear on the Soviet policymakers.

With this in mind, despite MacMillan's rebuff, the United States and other western powers have not lost the chance for negotiations. The negotiations must come and must come quickly if there is not to be an open war of if Berlin is not to be handed over to the Russians.

The fault lies back in World War II with the decision to let the Russians go ahead into Germany while the rest of the allies fought a holding action, but whatever the fault, the fruits are being placed unpleasantly before the West now.

It is a bitter fruit to eat if it means surrender of Berlin, and with it another promise unkept. It is a sour one, if the product is limited combat. Thus, at present, there is a real need for a negotiated reapproachment, before either Russia or the West commits themselves too far, and the people of the world are left to be buried by the reward.

Reporters

There hasn't been much of a howl put up lately about reporters being refused by the United States State Department to go to Communist China, but there ought to be..

At present, reports are coming from China telling of the most important social and political developments in many years. These developments include the most revolutionary design in communal living and economic centralization.

China at the present time is going through a period of great change, a change, though forced, which will probably make the country one of the leading industrial powers and perhaps eliminate much of the poverty that has beset the country.

Through this fragmented society divided in communes of approximately 10,000, the Chinese will be virtually impregnable.

Yet, Americans are not able to know even the success of the Chinese endeavors, because American reporters are not allowed to go to that country.

The freedom of all Americans to travel is a right that should have been in the Bill of Rights, and although absent, it remains one of the most fundamental of all unwritten rights in a democratic society. It would seem that the American government is afraid of letting the people of the United States know the truth. However, only an informed public can govern iself wisely. It is up to the government of the United States to open its restrictive doors and let the press of the United States out. The U. S. has no corner on truth

Epistolary Vitriol By Many Readers

Editor:

The current battle of the budget sounds like the "Old Refrain" as far as the Univerity of North Carolina is concerned, and it doesn't make good listening.

When two acts of the General Assembly of 1789 brought into being the University of North Carolina the only provisions made for buildings or maintenance was through escheats and through debts due the State for maintenance until after the University reopened in 1775 following the Civil War. This was $7.500 interet on a Land Grant Fund which Governor Swain obtained from the Federal Government in 1867.

In 1905, one hundred and ten years after the opening of the University, the State appropriated $45.000 for a Chemistry Laboratory, the first appropriation the State had ever made for the erection of a building at the University, except for a loan of $10.000 in 1791 to finish Old East, later converted into a gift. This was in President Venable's administraton.

Since the founding of the University every President has had to work himself to death, begging and fighting for insufficient funds to enable the University to meet the increasing demands made upon it by the times.

But poor as it was, for two decades before 1925, the University had its own budget, (up to that time it seems to have had no money to budget), and the administratin and the Trustees had some discression in deciding that most advantagious way of spending the money. For example, if the University had a discritionary fund it could often retain a top ranking faculty man in a number of ways- by raising his salary, by giving him better equipment to work with, building up a great library, increasing fringe benefits such as retirement pay, tuition grants to his children to attend the University. (Yale gives $1.400 tuition grants to children of the faculty).

After the Advisory Budget Commission took upon itself much of the policy making of the University. It forced the University to increase its income by raising tuition, fees, and room rent to students, and by raising the rates of utilities and services to a high level. (I remember when it cost ten cents to call Chapel Hill from Durham. It now costs fifty cents). Money collected this way was included by the commission as part of the appropriation for operating income, and "unless the University carries out the authorization the Commission can withhold funds from purposes to which the income would apply.

This "line" budget has inevitably resulted in ham-stringing the agencies at the University in spending the money. Moreover, any money that was saved must be returned to the State, and if there was a surplus at the end of the biennium it was not returned to the University.

What incentive, may one ask, is there to work to make and save money if you have got to give the savings to somebody else?

The question has been asked why an all out fight wasn't waged to limit the bill in 1925? There were several reasons among which were Governor McLean's economy-minded administration, "make it do, do without," opposition to taxes, etc, but the main reason was that the University was in the thick of the fight over the "Pool Bill," commonly known as the monkey bill, to outlaw the teaching of evolution in State institutions. Since this bill would have struck at the heart of the University, freedom to search for and to teach the truth, all other fights had to be subordinated to this issue. The division was so close in the Educational Committee of the House of Representatives that a tie of 11 to 11 was broken by the chairman voting against the bill.

Recently, the contest between the Board of Higher Education and the Trustees has been resolved. It is time to lay the ax to the Advisory Budget Commission and the Budget committee, the later doles out the money between biennium meetings.

The University exists today because the alumni have always been willing to go down the line for the University when it was necesary to protect its vital interests. The time has come to rally around it again.

"Rest Easy, Sire – There Are No Signs Of A Mass Uprising"

Editor:

Sidney Dakar's verbal onslaught against Davis Young, Tar Heel editor candidate, raises several interesting questions, not least of which is how it managed to be printed in defiance of the present editor's elaborate set of regulations governing election news coverage.

I was especially struck by Dakar's violent opposition to Young's proposal to restore certain comic strip — Peanuts, Pogo, et al — to the editorial page. Dakar takes the standard "intellectual" position that the real question is whether these strips should go on any page. And with the typical arrogance of the alienated intellectual he writes that "these people" who are attracted by Young's promise will not be "even remotely concerned with budgets and fiscal policies." The implication is clear: budgets and fiscal policie are beyond the comprehension of us ordinary slobs who happen to like certain comic strips. We should leave these high level matters to our betters — to Sidney Dakar and the other members (all five of them) of the intellectual elite.

In taking this position I suspect that Mr. Dakar has walked into a carefully laid trap. The underlying theme of Young's campaign to date has been his attempt to redefine the role and the image of the campus intellectual and by so doing to recast the shape of campus politics. With great gusto, and some skill, Young has been chipping away at the stereotype of the campus intellectual. His grounds would seem to be that this old style of intellectual leadership has made campus affairs the exclusive (and therefore meaningless) property of an elite handful of student "leaders."

Young's theme, if I have caught it correctly, is certainly arguable. But it is no argument to accuse him, as Dakar does, of appealing to "those who think sex is dirty, the DAR, the women's temperance unions and the like." This is smear, not reasoned argument.

So, Young goes his merry way slowly and patiently enunciating the "platitudes" which have roused Dakar (and others) to fury. He intends to run a newspaper, not a political poop sheet. He has indicated that his standards of "good taste" are different from those of the present editor. (Surely this is no crime, or is it?) Young thinks that such despicable categories of humanity as fraternity men, athletes, coeds, and residents of the lower quad are fully capable of active, adult participation in campus life. He has actually stated that the Chancellor is "at least as smart as the editor of The Tar Heel." And Young even admits to a genuine liking and enthusiasm for intercollegiate athletics.

What heresy!

I strongly suggest that all campus intellectuals (all five of them) meet at once to expel Young from The Club. This short of dangerous subversion cannot be tolerated. Where would UNC be without a crusade a day to keep reality away?

These "platitudes" reflect a whole new orientation to the problem of student leadership. The day of the rootless intellectual — sneering contemptously at (ugh) comic strips, (ugh) athletics, (ugh) fraternities, and (ugh) the Chancellor — is drawing to a close. We have learned on the national level that leadership which is irrevocably separated from those who are led is no leadership at all.

Young is making a real effort to come to grips with this problem. The measure of his success is that he has touched some painfully sensitive nerves.

Editor:

Last spring we campaigned for you because we felt that you presented the most outstanding qualities necessary for editorship. We still feel that you possess latent journalistics talent. We appreciate your attempts at enlightening the student population in the intellectual spheres which you inhabit and your constant efforts to improve your paper. We respect your endeavors to create and perpetuate a critical and analytical attitude toward all facets of university life and a constant striving to satisfy Chapel Hill advertizers and, thereby, make your publication self-sufficient.

We do not appreciate, however, your ommission of the crossword puzzle and comics so regularly. May we remind you, Mr. Gans, that the DTH is a student publication, paid for and staffed by the same, and should therefore satisfy the needs and wants of its financiers. We do not feel that the advertizing of vegetables, articles of intimate apparel, etc., are of interest to the majority of students in contrast to the comics and crossword puzzle which are of universal appeal. No one enjoys reading a consumer's guide over morning coffee at Lenoir. We do not feel that long-range goals should be sacrificed to present, transient whims; but would it not be easier to strive for these long-term goals with a little momentary pleasure from Peanuts? As we sit here bemoaning the loss of Peanuts and the crossword puzzle, we beg you not to tell us where to buy Kleenex—we can read that in your paper. If you would include the comics and the crossword puzzle, you paper would be topdrawer; as it is now your publication is strictly on the bottom shelf.

We wish you a successful career in advertizing, an area in which you have shown remarkable talent (But isn't your field journalism?).

AL RANKIN

Norman B. Smith

Early one summer morning I walked through Grant Park in Chicago. The grass, probably some tenacious hybrid developed for just such a purpose, has managed to cling to the ground despite the trampings of the multitudes who cross over it, the constant probing at its roots by park attendants armed with spears who pick from it tons on paper, and the dirty Chicago soot that settles on it, clogging its pores and turning it to a morbidly dark green.

The trees there are scarred with the initials of sailors and their liberty weekend lovers and with demonstrations of civic pride that people from Hoboken and Kansas City insist on leaving in public places. Their smaller branches are stripped away by the smudgy-faced urchins who play in the park.

It seemed almost hypocritical to me, this pretense of nature that could be kept there only by constant replanting, repairs, and guarding, that even without the dangers of urchins, initial carvers, and soot couldn't be the same as the harem-scarem, virile, tangled profusion you find in a woodland or prairie that has grown up of its own accord, for everything in Grant Park was set out in rows and squares and circles, and sides and corners balanced.

Maybe it would be better to send bulldozers into the park and then extend the skyscrapers out to the lake shore. This at least would be a frank admission that things were being changed. No crude facsmile of nature is here attempted when original materials are gouged from the ground, smelted or melted, molded, pressed or shaped, then hammered, weilded, glued, bound into a form and shape that clearly, unapologetically expresses a departure from nature.

But if that were done, there would be no place for them to go. The ones who in the early morning can be seen lying limp newspaper-covered out in the park. I don't know much about them, except that they have nowhere else to go, and that they get up when they feel the sun on their faces because they know it is almost time for the park attendants to come on duty and make them leave. I don't know where they go when the weather turns cold, although I have seen people who look like they do (You can speak of their looks collectively because there is no individuality of expression in those bleak, evasive eyes or on those chapped, down-turned lips set in the uneven stubble covering unwashed skin and beneath tangled, much too long hair.) standing by the side of the highway in dejected resignation holding out a listless hand with thumb extended: they appear to move in a general northerly direction in the spring and the retrace their routes in the fall.

"I caught some fish and have to buy some lard to fry them in," said one. "It will only cost 15c. I haven't eaten in a long time. Please, mister."

"I know mister, you can smell it on my breath. I quit trying to give it up long ago. I have to have it now. There's nothing else left for me to do. Please, mister."

"You see? I lost my arm in the war, and I haven't had a job since . . . The Veteran's agencies? No, they won't help me. You have to know the right people to get anything from them. Please, mister."

"All I want is a cup of coffee. Then I'll fell good enough to go out and look for work. Please, mister."

Thus they ply their trade all day long in Chicago. They exist like the grass on which and the trees under which they sleep—as misfits in Chicago. They survive in uncertainties, under threat of arrest for vagrancy, through curses and blows, despite meals missed and illnesses unattended.

They fit as unnaturally into the unnaturalness of society as does their unnatural park fit unnaturally into the unnaturalness of Chicago. They are men who have grown away from man. Somewhere, somehow they have made the wrong decision, taken the wrong advice, waited too long or not long enough for something. They have failed to follow the simple mathematical order that has been prescribed for success, the habits and rituals that have been systematized into a pablum to nurture approval.

I had finished crossing Grant Park and now had come to the lake. I looked out at the morning sun casting its path on the water and tried to mentally arrive at the bizarre circumstances that might combine to draw me away from the accepted and approved and make me become one of them. Try as I would, I couldn't imagine it. But the sun has risen many times over Lake Michigan. Perhaps one of them in his younger days stood there and thought this, too.

Visiting Report

PART III

Another problem of great concern to the student body is that of self-liquidating of dormitory costs through room rents. Until comparatively recent years most dormitories were financed by state appropriation. Self-financing became necessary due to our rapid expansion since World War II. The plan is not a local one but is used in some form throughout most of the country.

The mechanics of the plan are simple. As security for the funds provided by FHA for the construction of a dormitory its room rents are pledged for a period of 40 years to the end of complete liquidation of the debt. Problems brough about by this plan are many. For the rising cost of building has caused men's dormitory rents to sky-rocket from an annual $67.50 in 1947 to $170.000 in 1958! Not only must rents advance in the newly built dormitory but in all others. Differentials in rent would, of course, cause vacancies in those higher priced ones. This almost tripling of housing cost is entirely out of line with rises in other education costs and with nationwide consumer costs as a whole. The result of this policy is contrary to North Carolina's tradition of furnishing low-cost, subsidized education to its youth. And is even now a barrier to many who might otherwise afford higher education.

To alleviate this inequitable situation at the University and other state-maintained colleges, the Board of Higher Education has proposed that the self-liquidating plan be retained on a percentile basis, allowing state appropriations to pay half and dormitory rentals to pay half the construction cost. We strongly concur in this plan as a method of keeping rent increases from continuing their unabated upward spiral.

Despite the handicaps listed in this section of our Report, student morale remains remarkably high. For this a special note of praise is due Dean of Student Affairs Fred H. Weaver for his dedication and zeal in championing student causes. Students themselves show a keen and selfless interest here, because most improvements will inure to incoming student generations rather than to those now in residence. The motivation of their concern is one of love for the University. The people of North Carolina can well feel proud of this student body.

It is submitted that the question of student welfare, with all of its many ramifications, merits the very earnest consideration of the Board of Trustees.

III. THE LIBRARY

Carlyle once said: "The true university of these days is a Collection of Books." We would agree that the Library is an important indeed an indispensable part of the University at Chapel Hill.

Among the principal research libraries of the country, including the principal state universities, the latest statistical report on 41 such libraries places us 23rd in size, and 27th in amount spent annually on books. Among southern universities, according to a report covering 1957-58, the University holds the following position:

	By Size	By Expenditures
Texas	1.248.265 (2)	$362.763 (1)
UNC at Chapel Hill	935,014 (3)	$220,283 (4)
Virginia	895.632 (4)	$170.369 (8)
Florida	178.731 (5)	$316.590 (2)
Kentucky	783.451 (6)	$195.109 (6)
Vanderbilt-Peabody (combined)	733.568 (7)	$118.834 (10)
Oklahoma	673.397 (8)	$173.342 (7)
L. S. U.	600.622 (9)	$201.777 (5)
Alabama	589.188 (10)	$147.648 (9)

Thus, it may be seen that while we are third in size in the South, we are fourth in annual expenditure of books. It is apparent, moveover, that institutions are becoming increasingly competitive in library resources. A continuation of this trend, unless we are prompted to action, will necessarily mean a steady worsening of our relative position with that of sister institutions.

We believe that the people of North Carolina would want our Library to maintain its favorable position in the South, and we therefore recommend substantial increases in the amounts appropriated for books.

The rapid growth of the University in the past few years and its anticipated growth in the decade ahead present acute problems of space and utilization of library resources. The first and most pressing requirement in our operations is to separate the early undergraduate students from the upper level and graduate level students. We should have, at the earliest possible date, a separate Undergraduate Library, adjacent to the existing Wilson Library. Such a structure, within the general limits of approximately 60.000 square feet and at an estimated cost of a million dollars, would provide seats for 1,000 users and a book collection of some fifty thousand titles. It would include a small auditorium, browsing room, reserve books service and study rooms, general periodicals, and basic reference books. This building would be designed solely for public service; all bibliographic and technical services would be provided from the general library.

The next and equally critical need is for the proper accommodation of the various Special Collections for which this Library has become justly renowned. To meet properly this responsibility, the University will need a separate Special Collections building, particularly designed for the maintenance and service of especially valuable and rare materials. Such a building would have to be of the approximate size and cost of the proposed Undergraduate Library. Its use would be confined primarily to scholars and serious researchers in rare books, manuscripts, and North Carolina history, and would house such of these materials we now have and may later acquire.

The remaining demands upon the Library probably represent the largest numbers of users, and certainly the largest units of materials. These would be served within the confines of the present Library. Among the various elements which would be redesigned in Wilson would be two upperclass and graduate reading areas, more space for growth in technical processing, and suitable quarters for the Library School. It is estimated that $250.000 will be needed to complete the renovation and relocation of the planned areas of the Wilson Library.

Delta Sigma Pi Hears Dean Discuss Education

"Future students will find it harder to enter, harder to remain enrolled an harder to graduate from many institutions of higher learning," predicted Maurice Lee, dean of the School of Business Administration at the monthly professional banquet of Delta Sigma Pi professional business fraternity Wednesday night.

Lee was critical of present progressive education techniques, which he termed "soft pedagogy."

"This approach," he said, "has emphasized the adjustment and well-roundedness of the modern student. Its goals have been the amusement, amazement and adjustment of students, rather than the stimulation of mental capacities."

Commenting on current emphases at higher educational levels, Lee said, "The great issues of the day require insight and our educational curricula must become more analytical and less descriptive. We must build up our intellectual proficiency just as we build up our physical proficiency—by constant use of those capabilities we possess."

The dean noted that rapid change is characteristic of the modern age. The problems we face are complex fast-changing problems, and they will become increasingly so," he said.

"This will require quick, accurate decisions and analytical training will be invaluable. A wealth of information of a solely descriptive nature will not be sufficient to find solutions to our demanding problems," he added.

"The University's chief function is to train the mental capacities of its students," he observed. "It is therefore imperative that every educational dollar be spent for the right purpose, since the University is a scarce resource and must not lie unused."

However, he indicated that "the first need is for adjustment in faculty salaries."

Dean Lee commended several recent activities of the fraternity including service as monitors for study rooms during final examinations and a professional tour through the Westinghouse Meter Plant in Raleigh.

Toastmaster for the dinner meeting was Jim High. Dean Lee was introduced by Henry Heitman, Professional Activities Committee chairman.

Work Begun For May 5 Senior Day

Jeff Hare, president of the senior class, said recently the committees for the class have been named and work has got underway for Senior Day on May 5. All members of the committees have been contacted and organizational meetings have been held.

The Social Committee, under the direction of Sara Arnold, has begun plans for Senior Day on May 5. On this day, the seniors will be excused from classes, a senior class meeting will be held in Memorial Hall and there will be a party for Seniors. "Free Flicks" for seniors might also be held the night before. Any senior who has any ideas for this Senior Day has been requested to contact Miss Arnold at the ADPi house.

The Gift Committee has begun consideration about possible gifts for the class of '59 to leave the University. Seniors with any ideas along this line have been requested to contact Bucky Shuford, committee chairman, at the DKE house.

"Everything looks optimistic and I don't think the seniors will be disappointed in the senior activities, highlighted by Senior Day," Hare said. "I hope every senior will take this to heart and feel free to contact either the chairmen of the various committees or me.""

The organization of the senior class is the least known on campus and one of the most important, Hare also pointed out.

aries. The competitive position was worst at the upper ranks. (That of professor and associate professor.)

"And what is happening to our present staff" as a result of this low pay, continued Sitterson, are leaving the campus for higher paying jobs, some are staying only after being promised a pay increase. "If we do not get substantial sums for faculty salary increases, the greatness of this University could be destroyed in the matter of a few years. Should that happen, no one knows whether we could ever regain our present stature. We cannot let that happen," concluded Sitterson.

In connection with library appropriations, Librarian Jerrold Orne, seemed to feel that the library has been "fairly treated."

In comparison with Duke University, Carolina has less book stock, but spends more money. The reason for this, Orne pointed out, could be attributed to a ten year period (from about 1930-0) when the library had a very low budget. Books which could have been bought cheaper in this ten year period are having to be bought now. In addition, new advancements are being made in science in which new books must be had.

Orne also pointed out that much of the appropriation is already spent before books can be bought. Library personnel, subscriptions to journals, the binding of magazines and journals and around eight to nine thousand dollars for catalogue cards alone takes much of this sum.

By JOHN JUSTICE

Last night the Carolina swimming team dominated the Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming and Diving Championships by capturing five out of eight first places. Duke got two first, and Maryland led in one event.

The highlight of the night was the record-breaking 220 yard individual medley race won by the flashy Tar Heel ace, Harry Bloom. Bloom's time of 2 minutes, 17.3 seconds eclipsed the old ACC mark set by Bill Zickgraf of Carolina.

One of the most surprising races of the meet was the 400 yard free relay, in which Carolina outclassed the field. Maryland finished as runnerup, beating a Duke Squad which was expected to give the Heels their biggest challenge.

Randy Dodson and Bob Hunter gave Carolina the other two first places. Dodson came from behind to defeat Kurt Mast of Virginia, and Hunter outstroked John Mills of Maryland to win the 200 yard backstroke.

After the meet, Coach Pat Earey said that he was pleased with the performance of his Tar Heels, especially the relay team. For today, Earey expects a very tight race between Steve Smith of Duke and Bloom in the 100 yard free style.

The action begins today at 9 this morning. Finals in seven events will start at 4:30 this afternoon.

The Summary

220-yard freestyle — 1, Harry Bloom, Carolina. 2, Bob Adams, N. C. State. 3, Thurlo Park, Maryland. 4, Guy Langer, Duke. 5, Dick Sinclair, Maryland. 2:11.4

100-yard breaststroke — 1, Don Schumacher, Duke. 2, John Phillips, Virginia. 3, Bryan Schwartz, Maryland. 4, Sam Douglas, Carolina.5 , Bob Ernull, N. C. State. 1:10.7

200 yard individual medley — 1, Harry Bloom, Carolina. 2, Bill Weber, Duke. 3, Ed Elsey, Duke. 2:17.3

400 yard freestyle relay—1, Carolina (Dodson, Simonton, Nash, Zwicker). 2, Maryland. 3, Duke. 3:33.7

Matmen Meet Maryland Here

Carolina's varsity wrestlers meet their last, and toughest, foe of the year here tonight when defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion Maryland invades Woollen Gym at 8 o'clock.

The Terps, perrenial conference powerhouse, have never lost a dual meet in the ACC. The power-laden boys from Maryland have five defending individual champs on the roster.

In a preliminary match the Carolina frosh entertain Duke at 7. The frosh have beaten Duke once this season.

Undefeated Captain Perrin Henderson, Tar Heel ace in the 137-pound class, faces his toughest challenge of the year in Maryland's Don Santo. Santo is defending champ in the 137-pound class. Both men have yet to lose a match this year, and Henderson has been the only Tar Heel to win in the last two matches.

The Tar Heels sport a 4-6 record on the season. On the last two occasions they have been slaughtered; by VMI 21-3 and by Navy 23-3.

Tar Babies Out For First Win Over Duke Blue Imps Here At 4

By ELLIOT COOPER

The Tar Babies close out their season this afternoon in Woollen Gym when they take on the Blue Imps from Duke immediately following the completion of the varsity game.

The Carolina frosh enter this final contest sporting a 9-5 record for year. In their only other meeting this season the Duke frosh downed the Tar Babies by four points 74-70 in Durham.

Coach Whit Cobb's Blue Imps have won the last five games played between the two teams. Last year the Blue Devil freshmen defeated the Tar Babies four times by margins of two, three, ten, and twenty-five points.

Big Four Record

All of the losses that the Tar Babies have sustained so far have come at the hands of other Big Four rivals. They have lost to State and Wake Forest twice and once to Duke. Against this picture the Carolina frosh can show a 64-60 win over the Deacons and a 47-39 victory over State.

In their lone encounter with the Blue Imps the foul shooting of the winners in the final minutes proved to be the difference. The game was tied several times in the closing period, but the Tar Babies could never build up more than a two point lead.

Cantwell Paces Winners

Coach Dean Smith used but six players against the Dukes with Jim Hudock, Don Walsh, and Yogi Poteet all hitting in double figures. For the Duke freshmen 5-9 guard John Cantwell was the high scorer with 22 points. He was followed by Buzz Mewhort, Fred Schmidt, and Bob Stephenson who all had twelve or better.

Last Half Rally By Blue Devils Falls Short

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina, led by sparkplug Harvey Salz's 21 points, jumped into a tie with State for the regular season championship of the ACC here yesterday by whipping arch-rival Duke 72-62.

The Tar Heels led by as much as 12 points in the first half, but Duke came charging back and tied the count at one time until Salz took personal charge and engineered the Carolinians back into a commanding lead.

The Carolina victory gave the Heels a 12-2 ACC records for the year, identical to that of N. C. State. A drawing will be held in Raleigh tomorrow morning to determine first place seeding in the conference tournament. The Tar Heels finished the season with an 18-3 overall record.

Duke's loss created another tie as it dropped the Devils to a third-place standoff with Maryland. The two have identical 7-7 league records.

Carolina jumped right into the lead and held it uncontested throughout the first half. They led at 11-5 and built their lead steadily until it was 33-21 at the half.

Doug Moe electrified the crowd in the first half when he hit a driving lay-up and fell heavily to the floor. It appeared that Moe was injured but it was only a bruise and he played all the second half.

The trouble started at the beginning of the second stanza. After Moe's two free throws made it 34-21 Carolina, the Dukes scored 7 straight points to pull within four points. The Carolina lead then shifted from 4-6 points until Jack Boyd's push moved the Devils within 2 at 43-41.

The team exchanged several baskets, than two straight lay-ups by Duke's Carroll Youngkin tied the count at 49-49.

But from that point Harvey Salz took the law into his own hands and guided his mates to a big spread. The Heels hit eight straight markers, with Salz nailing in six himself. That gave the Tar Heels a commanding 57-49 lead with a little

Registration Going On For Spring Conference

Registrations are now being held in the Y office for the spring YM-YWCA conference the weekend of March 6-8 at Bricks.

"The World . . . Policy and Perspective" is theme for the weekend with Michael Harrington, free lance writer, as speaker.

The conference is planned to give concerned students an opportunity both to intensively examine current United States foreign policy and its effects upon the world situation, and to consider their personal responsibility toward world understanding.

Several talks by the speaker, a panel with faculty personnel, and faculty and student led discussions are included in the week-end program.

One of the high points of the weekend will be the panel discussion scheduled for Saturday night between Harrington and James Wallace of the Social Science Department, Peter Young, graduate student in political science, and the Rev. Charlie Jones, pastor of the Community church.

Earlier on Saturday, Wallace will lead discussion on "Our Face Abroad," discussing opinions about the United States prevalent in the remainder of the world. The Rev Mr. Jones will lead a group of students considering the effect which religion has on the world situation today.

At the same time Dr. James Ingram of the Economics Department will discuss the effects of United States economic policy on world affairs.

Interested students have been asked to register in the Y office. Transportation to the conference center at Bricks will be arranged.

Outstanding Dorm Girl

A senior coed will be honored as the outstanding dormitory girl in special ceremonies today at 4 p.m. in the Morehead Building.

Mrs. William B. Aycock will present an award the coed who has been selected by a committee of the Carolina Women's Council. The identity of this coed will not be revealed until this afternoon.

Foy, Overman Organize Campus Fall Orientation

These two and 20 other members of the Orientation Committee were announced Saturday by Orientation Chairman David Parker. Graduate and foreign student coordinators will be announced later, Parker said.

Two other key positions on the Orientation Committee, secretary nd treasurer, are being filled by andy Trotman and Angus Duff, 'arker announced. Judy Rock will erve as orientation coordinator in he Nurses Dormitory.

Parker said committee work will begin this week.

In selecting the committee, the Bi-Partisan Selections Board narrowed the field from 49 applications.

The new women's coordinator, Belinda Foy, is a junior secondary education major from Bradenton, Fla. A member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, Miss Foy was voted the "outstanding pledge" of the sorority and received the scholarship trophy this year.

Tom Overman, the men's orientation coordinator, is a junior from Salisbury. He formmerly served as an orientation counselor and is a former member of the Elections Board and Traffic Council.

'UPI Career' Lecture Topic At Press Club

A career with United Press International wire service will be discussed at the UNC Press Club meeting. Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norval Neil Luxon.

The guest speaker at the meeting will be Fred Parker, business representative for UPI in North Carolina and Virginia. In his speech, "What UPI Has To Offer As a Career," Parker will compare UPI opportunities for the young journalist with jobs on a newspaper and public relations work.

Although Parker has been working this area only since January, he has been connected with the wire service for six years. First he joined the United Press in Chicago in 1952. After serving as a Navy pilot in the Korean War, Parker returned to Chicago and worked on the relay desk for two years before moving to the Milwaukee bureau as bureau manager.

Later he became affiliated with the wire service's Southern Division at Atlanta, and, as business representative, traveled through Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama and southwest Virginia.

Jones Enters Race For Editorship

Dave Jones, junior from Fremont, announced his candidacy for editor of The Daily Tar Heel Saturday. Jones is the second person to enter the race. The other candidate is Davis Young.

"I intend to seek the endorsement of the Student Party tomorrow night, and I will make a complete statement of policy and enumerate upon my platform at that time," said Jones.

The candidate has been a member of The Daily Tar Heel staff for the past two years and has served as a reporter, a feature writer and as a columnist.

He is currently president of the University Club, a representative in the Student Legislature, a member of the Finance Committee, the Student Dining Hall Committee, the Elections Board and the Charlotte Press Club.

DAVE JONES
. . . second candidate for editorship

"During my two years on the staff of the paper, I have worked in one capacity or another with virtually every member of the present staff, from the editor on down. I feel that I have the confidence and trust of the staff, and can work with them as harmoniously in the future as in the past," Jones said.

Space Shot Is Expected In Weekend

By JACK KING

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., — UP— The crucial zero hour loomed close yesterday for the army's second attempt to fire a gold plated satellite past the moon into the unknown realms of outer space.

The launching, expected sometime this weekend, will highlight a spectacular four-day rocket show at the Cape which already has seen four powerful ballistic missiles take flight.

Weather, which has hampered operations most of the week, appeared to be the primary problem as launch time approached for the latest pioneer blastoff.

Since last Wednesday, the Titan intercontinental ballistic missile, Jupiter and Polaris intermediate range ballistic missile and a two-stage Thor-Able have shot through the low hanging clouds. The first two launchings were highly successful, but the polaris blew up and instrumentation contact was lost on the Thor-Able flight today.

The Cape was socked in by a low overcast throughout the day. It was learned, however, that moon rocket preparations were proceeding at a satisfactory pace.

It appeared that the best chance weather-wise would come tonight.

The relation between earth and moon will be in best position for the launching during a four-day period. At the time the moon is in closest proximity, some 221,000 miles away.

The launching hour was kept secret by the sponsoring national Aeronautics and Space Administration, the President's civilian agency that now directs U. S. scientific space efforts.

The mission—essentially the same as the first army attempt Dec. 6—will be to blast a 13-pound satellite loaded with radiation counting gear past the moon on a 33-hour flight, continuing on several hundred thousand miles into space until it swings into a wide orbit around the sun.

If completely successful, Pioneer IV would become a man-made planet similar to the larger Lunik satellite that the Russians claim went all the way after a Jan. 4 launching.

Poised in its service tower is a 76-foot-four stage Juno II rocket using the powerful Jupiter as a booster topped by 15 solid fuel sergeant rockets grouped in clusters.

On the Dec. 6 flight the probe soared 64,000 miles before being lured back by the earth's gravity far short of the goal. The trouble was caused by a premature cut off of fuel feeding the first stage Jupiter.

Previously, the air force probes using the Thor-Able vehicle failed to swing a camera satellite into a brief orbit around the moon after launchings last August, October and November.

Satellite Launched

The first Discoverer satellite thundered aloft yesterday, opening a series of research shots designed to show man how he can venture safely into space.

The 1,300-pound cylinder, 19 feet long and 5 feet wide, was blasted skyward by a Thor intermediate range ballistic missile.

Discoverer I is the first satellite launched from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California. The base is 170 miles north of Los Angeles. The satellite is also the first aimed at a north-south orbit around the poles. Previous U.S. satellites, fired from Cape Canaveral, Fla., have orbited close to the equator.

SP Meets To Adopt Platform

"One of the most important parts of campaigning lies in how effective the platform that we adopt is," stated Jim Crownover of the Student Party yesterday.

The party will meet tomorrow night at 7:30 in Roland Parker I and II. All members are urged to bring ideas for platform planks concerning any campus problems they deem important.

Besides discussion of the platform, the SP will consider candidates for endorsement for the editorships of The Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack.

They will also nominate the following district seats for Student Legislature: Dorm Men's III, a six months seat; Dorm Men's IV, two 1 year seats; Dorm Men's IV, one 1 year seat; Dorm Women's II, one 1 year seat, and Town Women's, two 1 year seats.

Fire House Construction Starts Soon

"Construction on the new Glen Lennox Fire Station should begin in a week or ten days," said Thomas D. Rose, Chapel Hill town manager Friday.

Low bids have been accepted by the Town Board of Aldermen, despite the fact that the sum set for construction was $10,627 over the amount the aldermen had authorized for the project.

After deciding at their Feb. 16 meeting that bids would be reopened because ones received were in excess of the amount agreed to be paid, the aldermen effected a stern about-face Feb. 23 by accepting low bids already received. The action was necessary to meet a construction deadline formerly decided upon.

The total cost of the project will be $50,627: $42,627 for the building itself, $5,000 for a lot, and a $3,000 architects fee. $40,000 of the cost had been authorized in bonds.

UP To Select Treasurer Candidate

The University Pary will nominate a candidate to run for treasurer of the student body in the spring elections April at a party meeting Tuesday.

Discussion of planks for the UP platform will be another major item of business at the meeting which will be held at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II.

UP Chairman John Minter said Saturday that any student who wishes to secure the University Party nomination for treasurer should have two speakers prepared to talk for him at the Tuesday meeting.

Minter also encouraged UP members to have in mind ideas for party planks because the tangible difference in the two campus parties "is seen in the party's platform."

A party can win or lose an election on its platform, Minter said, stressing the importance of including worthwhile planks.

'59 Campus Chest Begins Tomorrow

The 1959 Campus Chest drive begins Monday for a week of solicitation among Carolina students to reach a goal of $3,000.

This annual drive co-sponsored by student government and the YM-YWCA will aid these three organizations this year: the World University Service, the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program and the School for Mentally Retarded Children of Orange County.

Forty per cent (or $1,200) of the Campus Chest budget has been allocated to the World University Service. Another 40 per cent has been designated for the Goettingen scholarships. And the final 20 per cent (or $600) will go for the mentally retarded children's class.

As students contribute to the Campus Chest this week, a special "rocket" in Y Court will rise to a "moon" $3,000 away.

Heading the drive this year is Doug Kellam, chairman, and Dave Davis, assistant chairman. Assisting them are other members of the Campus Chest Board and representatives in dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

Miss Kellam and her Board earlier in the year selected the three participating agencies from a possible 14 organizations to aid, keeping in mind the idea of "students helping students."

One of the three agencies to receive aid from the Campus Chest —the World University Service— helps students over the world in providing for their education, medical, housing and food needs. An

Kentner Here Monday Night

A noted European pianist, Louis Kentner, will conclude the Chapel Hill Concert Series with a performance here Monday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

UNC students will be admitted free to the concert on admission of ID cards. This concert is co-sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee.

In his concert, Kentner will present music by familiar composers. He will open the program with Mozart's Fantasia in C Minor and Beethoven's Sonata in E. Major. Two ballades by Chopin (G Minor, Opus 23, and A-flat Major, Opus 47) will be presented.

Selections by Schumann to be performed are Arabesque, Opus 18, and Toccata, Opus 7. Several compositions by Liszt will be included on the program: Petrarch Sonnet, No. 47, Forest Murmurs and Dance of Gnomes. The first performance of these thre selections by Liszt will also be played: La Cloche Sonne, Vaisettd and Chant de Berceau..

Kentner will conclude the program with the performance of Islamey by Balahirew.

System

It was suggested in an editorial here two days ago that the crucial issue facing the University at the present time is the issue of purpose and its relation to a growth which would preclude its deciding its own purpose.

It was pointed out in this editorial that the University would change in character if the University grew larger than 10,000, and the possibility of its student population growing larger than 10,000 is great. Indeed, it was pointed out that at presem all the future planning, even to the point of the present budget request is done on the basis of growth.

A student came up to the editor and said that the editor was like someone who would like the nation return to the Jeffersonian agrarian society, but that society was moving ever fotward and that the trend in society was for increasing centralization of both population and authority. In short, the student seemed somewhat convinced that the editor was not keeping up with the times.

However, this state is in a peculiar position of presently being able to determine its own educational destiny. At present the state has approximately a dozen colleges that are state supported and several more community colleges that are up and coming. Obviously with the present University consolidation, it is impossible for the University to carve its own destiny out. But if consolidation were spread to the other schools in the system including the community colleges, it would be possible for each school to have a purpose cut out for itself.

It would then be possible for the University to limit enrollment at a level where the top people in the state were coming to Carolina rather than a representative showing. The University could require a higher grade on entrance examinations than it presently does, for the present entrance examinations in one group would only restrict the bottom two percent from attending this University. The admissions standards at the present time, although 11 percent of those who applied failed to meet these standards, are quite low for high quality schools of higher education, and it is time that the state system was utilized in draining off those who cannot meet the high standards that the University should set up.

It would be possible to transfer those educational enterprises currently on this campus that are not consistent with the purpose of a University — a community of individuals committed to the pursuit of truth — to other campuses in the state.

Indeed, although the factual basis for budget requests would be slightly more difficult than telling a group of legislators that the University needs so and so many more teachers because there are so and so many more students. It would be a stronger case in that the University wants to develop the best state institution of higher learning anywhere in the nation. It is possible that the people of North Carolina, so long used to seeing their state rated at best at the middle of any list of ratings, excepting basketball or football ratings, might take a great deal of pride in the best state University in the nation.

However, there are decisions to be made first. The most basic decision is the one as to the purpose of the University — whether it will emphasize learning for the sake of learning or learning for the sake of a skill. The second decision must be made in Raleigh when legislators consider revisions of the Board of Higher Education and the University trustees. They can do the job right for once by eliminating the present consolidation structure and extend it to all state supported colleges.

The time for these decisions is now. In two years it may well be too late.

"Did They Say This Was A Balanced Budget Or A Juggled One?"

Josie Morris

Prime Minister Harold MacMillan of Great Britain and Nikita S. Khrushchev of Russia held talks on questions of "mutual interest" in the Soviet Premier's plush villa outside Moscow.

MacMillan's ten-day visit ended in an atmosphere of bitter cold. In a talk over rights in Berlin, the British visitor warned Khrushchev that there would be grave danger if anyone interferes with the Western Powers' rights in this area. Each leader refused to budge an inch on the issue.

It is interesting to note, however, that earlier in the week the full text of a dinner speech by MacMillan was carried in the Russian newspapers. This was the first time in years that the Soviet picture of "the aggressive West" has been contradicted so effectively in the papers reaching millions of Russians.

By Wednesday the atmosphere had become "fairly cool, calm and collected." Relations had been strained by Khrushchev's public attack on Western policies in his Kremlin speech the day before.

From the state capitol came the protests of consolidated university officials concerning the recent budget cuts. The officials said Monday that recommended budget cuts will mean loss of some of the university's best teachers and a general decline into mediocrity.

The university officials spoke at a meeting of the full board of UNC trustees in the Hall of the House in Raleigh.

Trustees responded by adopting a resolution reaffirming their faith in the university administration and seeking restoration of all budget cuts.

Criticism of the budget cuts was concentrated on failure to improve faculty pay and provide better libraries and increased research and services.

A dispute arising at the Harriet-Henderson Cotton Mills in Henderson resulted in violence this week. The company's 1,200 workers walked out November 17 when the company refused to agree that the new contract include a provision from the old contract calling for arbitration in the settling of disputes. The provision has been in effect for the past 14 years.

Emergency attempts to reach an agreement on a new contract failed Tuesday while workers, escorted by police, trooped in and out of the strike torn mill.

From the world of missiles and satellites came the news that Titan ICBM, the powerhouse of U. S. missiles, logged its second highly successful test flight in succession Wednesday from Cape Canaveral.

The bullet-shaped missile rumbled off its pad at 2:45 p.m. It blazed over the prescribed course in minutes, winding up in the ocean some 250-300 miles from the launching site. It was the second Titan success in three weeks.

Even though the Cypriots have regained their freedom from Britain, hatreds held so long between these two countries cannot be blown away in an instant.

One incident was reported the road between Necosia and the huge detention camp "K." Soldiers stationed at the camp were said to have stoned many vehicles bringing the freed men into the capital.

But after three years of bitter exile Archbishop Makarioe, bearded leader of the Greek Cypriots, may return home whenever he wishes.

In Lebanon pro-Nasser crowds battered and burned five street cars in downtown Beirut Sunday in an outburst of rioting that climaxed the city's celebration of the United Arab Republic's first anniversary.

Gangs of pro and anti-Nasser youths clashed in fist fights in the heart of the capital following the trolley attacks.

An ailing Secretary of State Dulles got fresh support early this week in the face of proposals by Sen. Stuart Symington and the American Veterans Committee that he be replaced.

Democrats as well as Republicans generally voiced disapproval of suggestions that President Eisenhower appoint a new secretary of state because of Dulles' illness with cancer.

Symington proposed that a new secretary of state be appointed, "I don't think Dulles can run the State Department from a hospital," he stated.

Off the coast of Newfoundland came the report late Thursday that U. S. Navy men, seeking to learn what caused breaks in four transatlantic cables, boarded a Russian fishing trowler.

The Future Of The University Faculty

J. Carlyle Sitterson

The single most important factor in determining the distinction of a university is the quality of its faculty. No college or university can be outstanding without a faculty of high quality. Many factors influence a faculty member's choice of institution — academic reputation of the institution, research facilities, library, leave policies, retirement benefits and salaries. All are important but in a period of continuing price inflation and rising faculty salaries throughout the country, adequate salaries are crucial. The University of North Carolina enjoys an enviable reputation in the university world that makes teachers want to come to Chapel Hill and when they come, they generally want to stay. But what is the University's present salary position?

In the spring of 1958, median salaries (the half-way point between the bottom and the top) for our faculty in academic affairs (including all privately endowed chairs) in the various rank were: Professor—8,900, Associate Professor—6,960, Assistant Professor—5,670, Instructor—4,800. How does this compare with other institutions? A survey of salaries at 23 state universities (including 8 southern state universities) was made in 1958. Fifteen of the 23 had higher median salaries for professors (the top median being 11,400); fifteen had higher median salaries for assistant professors; eleven had higher median salaries for instructors.

Note, this survey makes no effort to select the institutions with the highest salary scales. But lest we forget — Princeton minimum salaries effective February, 1959—$8,000 for associates; $11,000 for professors; Oregon State Board of Higher Education salary scale (July, 1958), minimum $6,700 for associates, $8,500 for professors; University of Virginia minimum (since 1957), $7,000 for associates, $8,800 for professors; Wellesley, minimum for professors $9,000; Williams, minimum for professors $9,000; Yale, minimum for associate professors $8,000; for professors $11,000. University of North Carolina minimum salaries are $6,500 for associate professors and $7,500 for professors.

How is the University faring in attracting and retaining high-calibre faculty members? In the past year, the University has made a number of offers to faculty members at colleges and universities in all areas of the country. With the exception of persons in the instructor and assistant professor ranks except endowed charis, we have for the most part failed to attract the persons to the University. Almost without exception, our offers are matched and in some cases more than matched by the professor's present institution. Our recent and current efforts indicate that our competitive position is getting worse.

What is happening to our present staff?

1. A Professor left Chapel Hill in 1958 after thirty years with us to accept appointment at a Pacific Coast university at $4,000 more in salary. (He was at our top salary.)

2. A Professor left Chapel Hill in 1958 to accept appointment at a Southern university at $3,500 more in salary.

3. An Associate Professor was offered a professorship at a Southern university at $4,500 more than his present salary. We were able to retain him by a promise to promote him and raise his salary, but he would still be considerably under his offer.

4. A Professor in one of our most distinguished departments is now considering an offer from a southern university at a salary increase of more than $4,000. It will take a substantial salary increase to hold him.

5. Another Professor is presently considering an offer at an Eastern university at $14,000, more than $5,000 above his present salary. With a reasonable salary increase, we might hope to retain him.

6. One of our more highly paid Professors is now considering an offer from a Southern university at a salary increase of $3,000.

7. One of our current Ph.D.'s (June, 1959) is now considering a position at a liberal arts college in the North at a salary as assistant professor in the range $6,774 - $9,500, or possibly an associate professorship in the range $7,800 - $10,900—in either case, a salary higher than many of the professors receive here who trained him.

There will be many more in the months ahead.

These illustrations are a "sign of the times." The University of North Carolina has many advantages in the university world. We are an outstanding University, esteemed throughout the world of learning. We have attracted a distinguished factuly. Other colleges and universities know this. If we do not get substantial sums for faculty salary increases, the greatness of this University could be destroyed in the matter of a few years. Should that happen, no one knows whether we could ever regain our present stature. We cannot let that happen.

If the University is to teach more students without lowering the quality of instruction, it must have additional faculty in the next biennium. Forty-three new teaching positions were requested in the biennium in the Division of Academic Affairs (includes Arts and Sciences—Huhmanities, Social Sciences, and Natural Sciences—Business Administration, Education, Law, Library Science, Journalism, and Social Work.) Thirty-eight teaching positions were requested in the Division of Health Affairs (includes Schools of Medicine, Pharmacy, Public Health, Nursing, and Dentistry.) These are our estimate of the number of new positions we will need to teach the increased number of students without putting heavy pressure upon subject fields in which faculty members are already overworked.

The Advisory Budget Commission in its reduction of new personnel in Academic Affairs from 43 to 13 reasoned—and I am sure without a full understanding of the facts—that the student-faculty ratio could be moderately increased without impairing the quality of instruction. Unfortunately, while plausible at first glance, a full examination of the facts demonstrates how impossible this is. First, our major anticipated increase in student enrollment will come in fields in which the student-teacher ratio is already far higher than the general University average of 17.2 (for actual teachers as distinguished from all faculty)—as, for example, in English, History, Chemistry, Mathematics, Business Administration, Psychology, and freshman Social Science. It is in such areas that we expect to use additional personnel.

It might be appealing, for example, to have a botany professor teach chemistry or a music professor teach history. If we could in this fashion redistribute all faculty personnel over all fields, it might theoretically be possible to take a few more students without any apparent additional faculty. Actually, this would in reality be adding faculty in some critically short areas and reducing faculty in some fields of adequate supply. Should this be done—and it is in fact impossible — the University would have to curtail or bring to an end instruction at advanced undergraduate and graduate levels in some areas—in many cases areas in which it is the only state institution now offering adequate programs.

In the Division of Health Affairs the thirty-eight positions were based on an anticipated increase in students of 19 per cent. The Advisory Budget Commission reduced these positions to nineteen.

The facts add up to one simple alternative—on the one hand, either additional personnel to teach more students at our present high quality of instruction, or on the other hand, no additional students or more students with a substantial reduction in the quality of instruction.

Visiting Report

PART IV

The Library at Chapel Hill has renown far beyond the borders of this state, and will continue to be a proud monument to North Carolina's devotion to the education and culture of its people. The reputation of the Library directly affects the quality of the faculty which can be drawn and maintained here, and the quality of the faculty is the primary determinant of the reputation of the University. It is our belief that the people of North Carolina will want at least to maintain, if not continuously to improve upon, the valued services provided through this institution.

SUMMARY

We trust that in the body of this Report we have pointed ou with clarity the more crucial needs of the University at Chapel Hill. Relisting those needs here would seem to serve no useful purpose; however, it is hoped that their omission here will in no manner be construed as minimizing their urgency.

Problems facing this Board of Trustees are not in the quality of the Administration, nor in its lack of vision, purpose, or industry, but rather in its lack of funds. Needs at Chapel Hill parallel to a large degree those at N. C. State and The Woman's College, other state-supported institutions of higher learning, and the public schools of North Carolina. Our interdependence with and upon them was recognized by President Friday in his inaugural address, when he described our relationship as that of "inseparable partners."

The University at Chapel Hill, mother component of our great threefold University, and done recognized as the capstone of the state's educational system, must be kept strong. By the prodigious efforts of a devoted administration and faculty it remains so; however, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand" when its imperative needs must be met. We conceive it to be the duty of this Committee to point out these needs, and to recommend their fulfillment in the very strongest of terms. Likewise, we conceive it to be the duty of the Board of Trustees to use its individual and collective energy and influence toward such a goal.

By the renewed efforts of administration, faculty, students, alumni, friends, and trustees it may well be that New Hope, the original name of Chapel Hill, is prophetic of better things to come.

Duke staged a brief rally but to no avail as the Tar Heels hung on for the important win.

Dick Kepley, in addition to scoring 14 points, did a beautiful defensive job on Duke's Carroll Youngkin. The Heels collapsed from their man-to-man defense on Youngkin every time he got his hands on the ball.

Captain Danny Lotz, who played the last game of his career, received two standing ovations from the Tar Heel fans—one when he was introduced and one when he fouled out with 2:24 left in the game.

Duke was led by Youngkin with 18 and Jack Boyd with 15.

WHO SAID IT FIRST?

"GENTLEMAN AND SCHOLAR"
High praise, indeed, for any man! But did you know that the description comes from Robert Burns—who said it first about a dog? Here's the quote:
"His locked, lettered, brew brass collar Showed him the gentleman and scholar."
You'll find the couplet in Burns' "The Two Dogs."

"THE MORNING AFTER"
This horrible time was first immortalized by George Ade in "The Sultan of Sulu." Here's the way he put it:
"But, R-E-M-O-R-S-E!
The water-wagon is the place for me;
It is no time for mirth and laughter,
The cold, gray dawn of the morning after!"

"MAN BITES DOG"
That's everybody's definition of news, and we're all indebted to John B. Bogart, city editor of the old New York Sun (1873-90) who first said:
"When a dog bites a man, that is not news, because it happens so often. But if a man bites a dog, that is news!"

End Season With 10-5 Record

Frosh Belt Duke, 65-49

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Tar Babies closed out their season on a winning note in Woollen Gym yesterday afternoon as they overpowered the Duke freshmen 65-49.

For Coach Dean Smith's crew it was their tenth victory of the year in fifteen games and avenged an earlier 74-70 loss which the Blue Imps had pinned on them in Durham.

Yogi Poteet led the frosh attack with 18 points. One point behind Poteet was center Ken McComb who played his best game of the season and was especially strong under the boards. The other Tar Baby in double figures was guard Don Walsh who netted 16 markers in his final frosh contest.

Playing a man-to-man all the way the Carolina frosh were able to control all the losers with the exception of Fred Schmidt who was high man for the game with 20 points. John Cantwell, who had scored 22 when the Blue Imps downed the Tar Babies, was held to 5.

The Carolina frosh were complete masters of the game in the second half except for one short period when Buzz Mewhort hit seven straight points to cut the winners lead to 43-38. After a foul shot of Cantwell the Tar Babies scored nine consecutive markers to rack up a 52-39 margin.

The Tar Babies held their biggest lead of the game at the 3:34 mark when the score stood at 61-41. With three minutes remaining Smith cleared his bench in order to assure that all got a taste of victory over Duke.

The Tar Babies opened the game with a scoring spurt that carried them to a 10-4 lead after five minutes of play. At this point the Blue Imps began to rally behind the shooting of Schmidt to capture the lead 13-12 at the 10:40 mark.

The lead changed hands several times but the Dukes got it back at 19-18 on a shot by Schmidt. The visitors built up their largest margin of the first half at the 4:16 mark when they led 26-21.

From here the Tar Babies began to chop away and with 2:40 left in the half Yogi Poteet hit a jump shot to give the Carolina frosh a one point margin at 27-26. McComb scored four points in the final six seconds on two foul shots and a hook to build the Tar Babies' halftime lead to 36-28.

The Scoring

Carolina—Engel, 2; Hubbard, 3; Phillips, 5; Hudock, 2; McComb, 17; Sullivan,2 ; Poteet, 18; Walsh, 16.

I THOUGHT YOU HAD IT — This picture proves that it IS possible for three Duke players to lose the ball out of bounds. Lee Shaffer shot and missed — then the Duke boys fumbled the rebound, giving Carolina possession of the ball. Photo by Peter Ness

ACC Swimming Meet Ends; UNC Captures Eight Firsts

By JOHN JUSTICE

A highly successful Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming and Diving Championship meet ended Saturday, with the host University of North Carolina sweeping eight first places in sixteen events. Maryland captured three top spots, and Duke and Virginia took two each.

As expected the 100-yard freestyle match was a two man affair between the red-headed Tar Heel flash, Harry Bloom, and Steve Smith of Duke. Bloom withstood the challenge of Smith and won the race in the time of 50.9, only 1.2 seconds off the record held by McIntyre, of State College. That win gave Bloom three ACC championships for 1959. He also holds, beside the 100 free, the 220 free and the 200 individual medley, in which he set a record Friday night.

Bob Hunter, another of Coach Pat Earey's mermen, added the 100 yard backstroke to the 200 yard back which he won Friday.

Sophomore Randy Dodson had the unusual (for him) experience of tasting defeat in the 100 yard butterfly. The strong butterfly star finished second in a very close race to Kurt Mast of Virginia, whom Dodson beat in the 200 yard butterfly on Friday night. In speaking of Dodson's loss, Earey said that the Carolina swimmer was "just a little tight." The coach added that Dodson will undoubtedly be improved by the next meet.

Two Tar Heel divers captured medals in the high diving event. Kohl, incidentally won the John A. Feuchtenburger Trophy for being the best diver. Another of the Terrapin squad, Thurlow Park, was awarded the William Thompson Trophy for swimmer. Both trophies are named for deceased UNC graduates. Thompson was killed at Pearl Harbor, and Feuchtenburger was fatally wounded later in World War II.

Coach Earey remarked on the fine handling of the tournament and the smooth way in which the events were run. He especially singled out Bill Campbell, coach of Maryland, for his excellent work as referee.

The Summary

100 yard butterfly-1, Kurt Mast, Virginia; 2. Randy Dodson, Carolina; 3. John Bell, Maryland. 57.2.

440 yard freestyle-1. Thurlow Park, Maryland; 2. Bruce Soule, Duke; 3. Bob Adams, State. 5:7.8.

400 yard medley relay-1. Carolina (Hunter, Mercer, Zwicker, Nash); 2. Duke; 3. Maryland. 4:11.4.

Maryland Tops Matmen, 22-10

The Maryland wrestling team once again demonstrated why it is the class of the Atlantic Coast Conference last night in Woollen Gym, but the visitors had to fight all the way to turn back the Tar Heel 22-10.

Carolina captain Perrin Henderson was the star for the losers as he pinned Ray Haney in the third period to remain undefeated for the year. A year ago Haney was the conference champ at 123.

Sonny Kincey took the other Carolina win in the 177 bout when Tony Matalonis forfeited.

The Summary

Varsity — 123—Osborne (M) pinned London (3:54); 130—Van Auken (M) pinned Rhyne (5:05); 137—Henderson (C) pinned Haney (8:23); 147—Santo (M) decisioned Purdy (8-0); 157—Besnier (M) decisioned Russell (11-3); 167—Kennedy (M) decisioned Atkinson (13-6); 177—Kincey (C) won by forfeit; Heavyweight—Baily (M) decisioned Hurley (4-1).

ROGER WILLIAMS
. . . musical engineer

Entertainment Series Brings Roger Williams

Roger Williams, young piano virtuoso, will appear in Memorial Hall Sunday at 8 p.m. under the sponsorship of the UNC Student Entertainment Series.

Springing to nationwide fame in 1955 with his three million sales record of "Autumn Leaves," Williams has sold more albums than any other pianist or instrumentalist in the history of the popular recording field.

One of the busiest artists in show business today, Williams is making a six-week tour of the east and midwest between recording and television commitments.

The program Sunday will include a sampling of all types of music with accent on the popular and standards. Although primarily a solo performance, the program will employ a pair of guitars and bass in some of the numbers.

Williams grew up in Des Moines, Iowa and studied a year under Philip Tronitz in Los Angeles before joining the Navy.

In the Navy it was discovered that he had a high mechanical aptitude, so following his discharge, Williams went to Idaho State College and received an engineering degree. Later he enrolled at Drake University in Des Moines for a master's degree in music.

His engineering training has contributed to his musical career. Williams has designed and built an ingenious miniature piano, complete in every detail. He calls it "Sebastian" and has given it a personality all its own.

Although he talks freely about his invention, Williams will not reveal how the small piano plays without a hand touching it and how it "talks" by means of flashing lights and musical sounds.

UNC students will be admitted to the Roger Williams performance upon presentation of identification cards. Student wives and dates will be charged $1 admission and others, $2. People, other than students, will be admitted after 7:45 p.m. to the concert.

Dean's List Named By Three Schools

Three University schools have released the names of students who made the dean's list for the fall semester. These schools are: Journalism, Business Administration and Pharmacy.

Dean Maurice W. Lee of the School of Business Administration has reported the following on the dean's list:

Jerry Wofford Amos, David Stafford Ball, James Sherman Belk James Matthew Berry Jr., Robert Franklin Blakely, Clyde Osborne Draughon Jr., Gabriel Marlin Evans, Edward Bynum Fowlker II, Walter Erwin Fuller Jr., Jack Powell Gulley, Robert L. Hall;

Jerry Michael, Phillip Elwood Monteith, Edward Carson Norris, Donald Sanborn Redding, Charles Dean Sheets and Dewey Vernon Wright.

Dean E. A. Brecht of the School of Pharmacy has announced the names of pharmacy students making the honor roll (average of 92.5 or better) and dean's list (average of 90 or better).

Contest To Name Weekend Announced

The Lost Weekend, sponsored by the GMAB Dance Committee, will feature Dave Brubeck in a concert in Memorial Hall, Friday from 3-5 p.m.

A dance will be held in Woollen Gym Friday night. The Gladiolas and the Shadows will provide the music.

Couples attending the concert and dance may submit a name for the Lost Weekend. The one who submits the best name will receive a prize.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday were:

Partial Opening Of Stacks Begins

The stacks of Wilson Library are now opened "partially" to all students. Sunday was the commencement of a six week trial period.

If this policy is to be successful the following rules must be observed:

1) Smoking in the stacks is absolutely forbidden.

2) Books are not, under any circumstance, to be returned to the shelves. Books removed from the shelves will be placed on a centrally located table on each level and reshelved by staff members.

3) Noise is to be kept to a minimum. All conversation should be carried on outside the stack area.

4) Vacant carrels may be used while looking at a book, but the carrels must be vacated when their possessors want to use them.

Maps of the level have been constructed by the Student Library Committee and are located over the water fountains on each level.

The circulation desk will still be staffed and students may get a staff member to get a book for them instead of going into the stacks.

This policy was instituted to relieve some of the crowding around the circulation desk and to "enable the students to come into closer contact with, and thus more fully realize the available resources of the library."

French Govt. Scholarships Are Offered

The Department of Romance Languages is offering two scholarships of $150 each to French majors.

These two awards are made possible by the Cultural Services of the French Embassy in the United States which granted the sum of $300 to be awarded to outstanding students in French.

Application blanks may be obtained in 315 Murphey Hall. They should be returned no later than April 1.

The awards will be announced on May 1.

To qualify a student must be majoring in French and be in his or her junior or senior year.

Pool Tournament Trophies Awarded

Trophies will be awarded this week to the two winners in the Graham Memorial sponsored pool tournament which ended Wednesday.

The first place award will go to D. J. Underwood, who scored 124 points in four blocks of 25 innings. George Kornegay won second place with 115 points in the same number of blocks and innings.

Military Forces Are Ready Congress Told By McElroy

Moblization Question Raised In Congress

By FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON — (AP) — U. S. military forces are ready to back up President Eisenhower's avowed determination to stand fast on American rights in Berlin, Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy told Congress Monday.

"We think we have a definite offensive superiority over the Russians at this time," McElroy said in discussing the situation with the house space committee.

While voicing doub the Russians want to start a war, the Pentagon chief told the congressmen, "We are prepared to meet various stages of the Berlin situation as it develops." Then he added:

"We are prepared to make good on the statement of the President that we will not yield one inch on our rights in Berlin."

McElroy said there are no plans now to mobilize because of the deeping crisis over Russia's campaign to force the United States and other allied powers out of Berlin, 110 miles inside Communist-held territory.

Mobilization steps have been suggested in Congress in recent days, and Rep. James Fulton (R-Pa.) raised the issue again Monday. He asked McElroy if this country has adequate protection for a firm position on Berlin and "if not, should we mobilize in whole or in part?"

"We don't' regard that as being required at this time," the defense secretary replied.

Saying the German crisis has been studied by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the State Department, McElroy said there may be some moves to strengthen the U.S. potition. He did not go into detail.

During the weekend, officials spoke informally of a number of measures, including efforts for an early agreement to base 1,500-mile range missiles in Italy and a decision to send faster jet interceptors to some overseas bases.

McElroy's remarks on this country's readiness to cope with the Berlin threat came while he and the space committee members were talking over American policy on striking the first blow in a war.

The Pentagon Chief said "our policy is that we will not attack first." But whether that policy "will always be true is something else," he added.

Rep. John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, the house Democratic leader, said he regarded the America-won't-strike-first policy as "a rather untenable one in case of great emergency." McElroy conceded it makes the military problem more difficult "because we are not aggressive."

Meanwhile, Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho) said there is good reason to doubt Russia "intends a shooting war over Berlin." Instead, he said in a Senate speech, the Berlin crisis probably will ebb "and a few months from now our concentration will have been shifted to a newly contrived crisis, possibly in Finland or Iran."

Church contended that while the Berlin crisis is magnified, the tendency is to overlook longer range problems. In this connection, Church spoke of the so far fruitless talks in Geneva on banning

Five Positions Open

Five vacancies on two student government committees are open to interested students.

The Student Audit Board deals with audits on student finances. There is one vacancy on the board.

Four new members will be appointed to the Elections Board, which is in charge of the coming spring elections April 7.

Interviews with prospective members of both committees will be held Wednesday from 3 to 5 p.m. in the student government office.

DRIVE—The 1959 Campus Chest drive is officially underway. Throughout this week, Carolina students are being asked to make contributions for the World University Service, the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program and the Orange County Mentally Retarded Children's Class. The "backbone" of efforts ot raise the $3,000 Campus Chest goal is a group of solicitors (pictured above) who are conducting a door-to-door campaign in the dormitories. The Campus Chest Board, headed by Doug Kellam, has UNC students working on each floor of the dorms to try for as near 100 per cent student donations as possible. Several students will canvass Glen Lennox and Victory Village this afternoon for contributions. In addition, around 80 other solicitors are making the rounds this week to get contributions from faculty members. (Photo by Bill Brinkhous)

SP Votes Not To Endorse DTH Editorship Candidates

The Student Party voted last night not to endorse any editorial candidate for the Spring elections. The motion introduced by former SP floorleader Rudy Edwards was carried 29-12. The motion can be reconsidered.

Editor of The Daily Tar Heel Curtis Gans asked that both of the present editorial candidates and any others that might wish to run be heard by the party after the bi partisan selection board had a chance to assess their editorial qualifications.

SP Chairman John Brooks put the editorial candidates' speeches on the Student Party agenda for March 23, when the only other order of business will be consideration of the SP platform. Gans stated his intention of reconsidering the motion not to endorse at that meeting.

In other business the SP nominated Harold O'Tuel by acclamation for the six months legislature seat in Dorm Men's' III.

Also nominated by acclamation for Legislature were Ed Cox and Bill Lamm for the two 1 year seats in Dorm Men's IV.

The advisory board will nominate candidates for a 1 year seat in Dorm Men's V and two 1 year seats in Town Women's II.

The endorsement of Yack editor will be taken up at the next SP meeting. Jerry Adams and Mike Smith offered themselves as candidates for this post. Their endorsement was postponed in order that the candidates may decide whether they wish to run singly or as co-ediors.

Morehead Awards 47 With Scholarships

Philanthropist John Motly Morehead Saturday awarded scholarships valued at $235,000 to 47 students to enter UNC next September. It was the largest number yet chosen by Morehead.

Since 1951 Morehead has given 226 scholarships, each valued at $5,000 or more for students to attend the University—representing over $1 million actually spent from an endowment of unannounced millions in the Morehead Foundation.

The scholarships this year go to 24 graduating seniors in North Carolina public high schools, to 20 preparatory school seniors and three graduates of North Carolina junior colleges.

Each scholarship is worth $1,250 a year, or $5,000 for four years—covering all college expenses, plus spending money.

Morehead is a retired industrialist of Rye, N. Y., a native Tar Heel and alumnus of UNC. Each year he seeks "tall timber" scholars to enroll in his alma mater. Talent, rather than need, is the prime selection criteria.

He has increased the number of scholarship awards each year of the past three years—30 scholars in 1956, 35 in 1958, 47 in 1959.

The plan is to build up the program so that eventually 100 scholars will be chosen each year, or 400 in the University at a time. Morehead's idea is based on the Rhodes Scholarship principle, applied to the undergraduate level in the University.

Among the prep schools represented in the program this year were six private schools not heretofore included. These are Groton, Phillips Academy, Deerfield and Phillips Exeter in New England and St. Albans Schools, Washington, D. C., and Westminster School, Atlanta, Ga.

Other private schools included are Woodberry Forest, Christ School, Baylor, McCallie, Episcopal High and Virginia Episcopal.

William Wade Bevis, Phillips Academy, Greenwich, Conn.; Charles Robin Britt, Enka High, Asheville; Donald Baxter Craven, Roxboro High, Roxboro; Theodore Joseph Collier Jr., Pamlico County, Bayboro; Joe Malcolm Craver, Shelby High, Shelby;

Jo Carpenter Named Top Dorm Woman

The first award for the Most Outstanding Dormitory Woman at UNC was presented to Jo Carpenter at special ceremonies Sunday afternoon in the Morehead Building.

This award was made by the Carolina Women's Council and will become an annual event with the Council.

A committee of the Council selected Miss Carpenter on the basis of service to her dormitory and the University with diligence, faithfulness and loyalty. Character, personality, leadership and scholarship were also considered in the committee's final choice.

Miss Carpenter is a senior public health major from Thomasville. She has been both social chairman and president of Smith Dormitory. In athletics, Miss Carpenter has edited the Handbook for the Women's Athletic Associationand is president of the WAA this year.

In other fields of campus activity, she has worked with the Hospital Committee of the YWCA and has been chief majorette with the UNC marching band through four seasons.

At the Sunday afternoon ceremonie, Mrs. William B. Aycock presented the award to Miss Carpenter. Short speeches were made by Mary Ellen Bell, who explained the work of the Carolina Women's Council, and by Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs, who talked about the importance of dormitories to campus life.

'Humanity,' Dramatique Theme Thurs.

By THOMAS INMAN

Do you like poetry? Would you rather read or listen?

No matter.

Sally Pullen, new chairman of Petite Dramatique of GMAB, has chosen two poetry enthusiasts to put together an evening of readings for UNC students.

Russell Link and Jack Jackson are the directors. They will meet with students Thursday at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall, according to Miss Pullen, to decide on poems and readers. "Carnival of Humanity" will be the theme.

Formal presentation of "Carnival of Humanity" is set for March 20 at the same time and place.

This is the first program the new drama chairman has instigated since replacing Graham Adams three weeks ago as head of this phase of Graham Memorial activities.

A drama production is still in the talking stage, Miss Pullen says. "Getting started in mid-semester is a handicap. And I'm just learning," she said.

Before coming to UNC, she was house manager for the Woman's College Theatre and a member of the Masqueraders drama group. She played Laura in "The Glass Menagerie" and Cherie in "Bus Stop." She also appeared in a production of "Oklahoma."

G. M. SLATE

Debate, 4-5:30 p.m., Grail Room; WRC, 7-9 p.m., Grail Room; Campus Chest Town Drive, 1:30-2:30 p.m., Roland Parker I; U. P., 7-9 p.m., Roland Parker I; U. P., 7-9 p.m. Roland Parker II; 1:30-2:30 p.m., Roland Parker II; Campus Chest, 5-6 p.m., Roland Parker II; Traffic Board, 7:30-10 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; S. P. Advisory Board, 1:45-3 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Special Events, 4:30-5:45 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Publications Board, 7:30-9 p.m., A. P. O. Room.

Don't Contribute

Within the next few days, you, the student, will be confronted by collectors of the Campus Chest. You will be asked to contribute to this organization which is sponsoring three quite worthy charities. You will be asked to give to these charities that the Campus Chest has chosen, and the money that you give will be divided by that organization to be given to these three chairities only. You ought not to contribute.

In the first place, it is somewhat presumptuous of this organization to say that it can select for you the charities that you want to support. It is more presumptuous of them to say that they will alot the money as they have seen fit.

As an individual in society you have a right to support whatever charities you deem worthy or to support no charities at all. If the Campus Chest would presume to represent the campus on the issue of charities, then they had better ask every member of the campus to what charity they would like to contribute, and then include them all in proportion to the number of students who mentioned all of these charities. However, the organization presumes it can decide for you, and this it cannot.

Moreover, you as a student might want to give all of your money to one of the charities that are sponsored but would not want to give to all on the list, but if you contribute to the Campus Chest, your money is divided among the three without regard to the feeling of the donor.

This is not to say that the individual charities that are chosen are not worthy of donation, but it is to say that how you as a student spend your money is something that is a purely personal decision, and not something that somebody else can say how you ought to do it. In the very same manner, you elect a president of the student body or an editor of The Daily Tar Heel because your contribution along these lines demands representation. In any case contributions to any one or a hundred charities should be on a voluntary basis and you should have a say in the choosing of these charities that go under your name.

Finally there is another consideration. This consideration is the consideration of the organization that is sponsoring the drive — namely the Campus Chest. As a rule this organization asks for contributions toward educational enterprises and their annual selection of the World University Service and Gottingen exchange attests to the truth in this statement. This year, however, the third charity is a home for retarded children, again a worthy charity. However, the circumstances under which the home was placed in the Chest program were not worthy.

Last year the Campus Chest sponsored an organization to provide scholarships for Negro students. This organization is a very worthwhile one. However, on campus in certain areas, students would not contribute to anything that would effect the betterment of the Negro, so the drive had to be extended for another week and the Chest fell short of its goal.

This year when it came to consider the scholarship fund, the Chest decided to leave it out, probably largely because it would hurt the receipts the drive as a whole might garner. However, it is quite objectionable that a group which sets itself up with the noble purpose of helping charities would leave out a worthy charity because it might not enable them to get the money that they ordinarily would get. For a noble group, this sounds more like money grubbing, something that a charity group should never be associated with.

Hence, even though the charities selected are worthy, the lack of courage and perversion of purpose displayed by the Campus Chest is such that no individual with self respect who believes that it is the thought rather than the amount that counts should support it.

If a student wants to give to the World University Service, the Gottingen Exchange program, or the home for mentally retarded children separate and apart from the Campus Chest, the editor will provide stamped envelopes to these various charities and will send the amount you donate and the proportion you desire. If you want to contribute to the Negro scholarship fund the edior will also provide envelopes. If you want to contribute, do it this way. The charities are worthy, the organization and fund idea are not.

A concert by Dave Brubeck Friday afternoon and a dance Friday night will compete with the ACC Tournament this weekend.

The GMAB Dance Committee, which is sponsoring the concert and dance, has named the weekend The Lost Weekend.

Unless the committee should decide to put a radio in Woollen Gym so students may listen to the game Friday night, there is little doubt that this weekend will be more lost than the Dance Committee intended. —M.A.R.

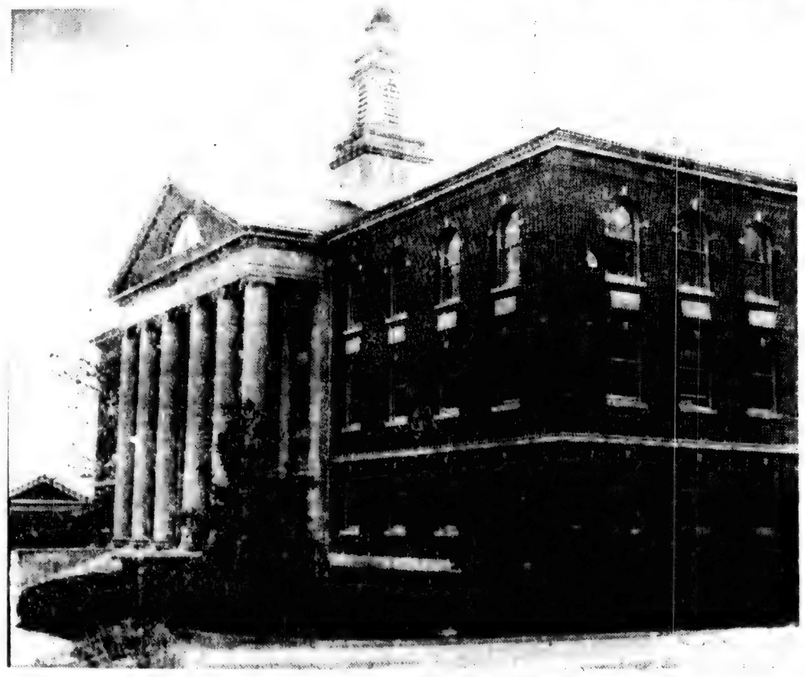
Business And B. A. Schools

Jonathan Yardley

On Thursday, February 19, CBS Television and Playhouse 90 presented Loring Mandel's "The Raiders," a penetrating and provocative discourse upon modern business practices and ethics. It starred Frank Lovejoy and Paul Douglas, and in its final impact was as biting as any play this excellent series has yet done.

"The Raiders" is the story of a big, conservative business which finds itself in a proxy fight with one of the most ruthless and dishonest stock buyers in the nation. More important, it is the story of on man, Arthur Hennicut, and his gradual dgeneration from an honest, loyal employee to a scheming, soulless man. Caught between the corporation and the individuals who compose and represent it, he chooses the former; he chooses it because he has no other choice, because his entire being, life, and soul have become so completely entwined with the corporation that he is the corporation and its best wishes are his command.

This is the problem in American business, the problem that was brilliantly examined in William Whyte's "The Organization Man" and countless other treatises on current business affairs: the individual has come to identify himself with the corporate body, a body that has no soul, no mind, no heart. This is not a body of people, it is an empty building, a machine rolling off a production line, a desk piled with papers, a full page spread in Life Magazine. The modern businessman has estranged himself from the human element in society to become totally enmeshed in the corporation—the all holy, omnipotent, unfeeling corporation.



THE BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION SCHOOL

Today, thousands of men work in these bodys of steel and masonry that are the great corporations and businesses of our land, and many thousands more in our colleges and universities are studying night and day that they too may be ready to fit into the mould which has been made for them. Who are they? What are they doing to themselves? What are they doing to society?

The Business Schools

Until the year 1950 the University of North Carolina was minor-league in the business world. To be sure, it had its little School of Commerce, but it was not the dominating School on the campus. Then, in 1950, big business came to Chapel Hill; recognizing the trend on Madison Avenue and across the nation toward hyper-syllabization, it was decided to change the name to the School of Business Administration—five more syllables, and, soon to follow, much more prestige and importance on and off the campus. It now occupies three large buildings, with its cooperative Department of Economics, and in June of 1957 graduated 150 students; into three buildings (Bingham, Murphey, and Saunders Halls) are crammed the History, English, and all language departments, and in June of the same year all departments issuing the Bachelor of Arts degree gave only approximately twice as many degrees as the School of Business Administration. This alone attests to the present, and growing, importance of the Business Administration School. What is it trying to do, what is it doing, and how is it affecting the University?

The administrators of the University Business School are, for the most part, honest, aware men who realize the necessity for a broad education, but despite their efforts to accomplish this end the school still clings to the ancient purpose of all business schools, training the student in the tools of business, the functions of business, and the place of business in its society. A few of the endeavors of study the student must pursue bear this out: accounting, statistics, economics, production, personnel, and marketing. This is a narrow curriculum, and it is begun early in the student's career. Before he enters the school a number of prerequisites are required: two in economics, two in business, and he is encouraged to take courses in other related fields. Once he enters the school, his schedule is devised in such away that he is able to take, on the average, one elective course per semester and four in his department. Other school require as few as six courses in two years in the department and make great efforts to encourage the student to investigate other fields.

Letters On Many And Varied Subjects

Editor:

I have of late become an ardent reader of the Tar Heel's second page; and I particularly look forward each morning to some piece or another written by those three whom I believe to be your columnists of considerable interest: Mr. Wolff, Mr. Lessing, and Mr. Bailey. Mr. Wolff's big words and big ideas often amuse me; Mr. Lessing's peculiar attitudes always confuse me; and Mr. Bailey, whose relative infrequency is regrettable, nearly always pleases me. All, I think, help keep your paper alive even if in a somewhat puny condition. But, while Mr. Wolfe attracts more attention and receives more space than is due him (a tremendous review of "Oklahoma" just to mention all the play's weak points), and Mr. Lessing has a lot of funny ideas about music (the harpsichord is out of date!), and Mr. Bailey surely over-writes ("... aye, laddies ..." "... go ye to the movies ..."), still the latter's comments are usually pertinent and, it seems to me, intelligent.

However, Thursday's article "On the Movies" (another unique title), by Mr. Bailey, was a gross disappointment. Now while most of the "intellectual" folk on campus would judge the cinema a negligible topic for discussion, a few, I hope, would agree with Mr. Bailey and me that movies, often criticized as they are, still need a little talking about now and then. When one considers how much time the student body of UNC spends collectively in movie houses each semester, he would have to agree that movies deserve some sort of attention outside of the theaters themselves.

But Mr. Bailey has said about the same stuff that's been said before; a lot of it is very wrong. I have a few points to make: (1) the movies are not a pretense to Theatre; they are a form in themselves, and a very good one; (2) movies have a beautiful potential which could very well be realized in the "revolting future," to quote Mr. Bailey's pessimistic phrase; (3) movies can be an art form—commercialism does not deny this: Van Gogh's bring in thousands; (4) there are good movies, something more than a dozen a year.

The trouble is, of course, that there are a lot of awful films, many more around than good ones. However, Mr. Bailey, I think, has, for the most part, chosen the wrong ones to see. Anyone who has seen "The Best Years of Our Lives" or "A Double Life" or "All the King's Men" or "All About Eve" or "Gate of Hell" or "Les Enfants du Paradis" or "Lust for Life" or "Around the World in 80 Days" (a delight that could only be got on film) or "Twelve Angry Men" or "Paths of Glory"—I wish I could go on—would have to admit something in the cinema's favor.

Far too many people every week choose the "wrong" film to see. Maybe a discriminating choice would change a lot of skeptical minds and would turn a lot of leisure into more than that. I think a frequent movie review in the Daily Tar Heel might help people like Mr. Bailey to see that there are some excellent films around—provided your reviewer felt pretty much the way I do. At any rate, television is not all-powerful yet, so it might be wise to make the most of cinema while it's here. Sometimes it can be fun. And that's the truth.

Editor:

Perhaps the editor missed the report of the speech by Dr. A. Whitney Griswold in the N. Y. Times, February 24th. It is worth noting.

Dr. Griswold, President of Yale University, said that indiscriminate athletic scholarships, which aim at entertaining America, are helping to undermine American education. They have deprived our higher education of a sense of purpose and, I might add, dignity. It is hard for a teacher to retain a sense of social worth on the Saturday of a home game when half the 10 a.m. class is absent or, for that matter, on the morning after Germans. Vocation courses, according to Griswold, have further confused the purpose of higher education.

America does not lack the educational skills needed to correct the present, deteriorated system of higher learning. We here in Chapel Hill could conceivably do something about it. But skills are not enough. First it is necessary to seriously consider altering our values and definition of a university.

In my opinion a reexamination of values followed by a rededication of the univerity is as important, if not more so, than winning more money from donors or legislators.

JOHN J. HONIGMANN

To: Bill Bailey

I have always been an ardent admirer of yours even since your recent plunge into the literary field. I must say that you seem quite sincere and quite determined, each time your literary genius gets the best of you, to cram your foot further down your throat. I just hope that one day you don't choke on it.

I am also amazed at your extensive vocabulary. Such words as "teat" and "bowels" lead me to think that these are outward signs of your intellect and inward personality.

May I ask you one simple and honest question concerning your recent article entitled, "A University Community" which is the latest product of your anatomically and biologically oriented mind. In this article you describe this machine that we as students are the by-product of. Are you honestly trying to become a big wheel in this immense machine, when you are and always will be an an infinitely small cog?

From: Bill Bailey

Dear Miss Lewis and Miss Wells:

Your letter concerning the advertising in The Daily Tar Heel was very interesting, but I'm afraid you either have been misinformed or do not understand the situation.

First, Mr. Gans is not responsible for the advertising. Neither is he responsible for either the inclusion of or the ommission of the comics and the crossword puzzle. This is the responsibility of the Advertising and Business Departments.

Second, The Daily Tar Heel is a student publication, staffed by students, and partially paid for by the students. Please notice I said partially. Printing a newspaper is an expensive operation. The only way The Daily Tar Heel can be printed six days a week, with a few six and eight page papers thrown in, is to add to the money from student subscriptions. This money comes from advertising. I would be more than happy to include the comics and crossword puzzle every day if you are willing to compensate the Daily Tar Heel for the eliminated advertising.

Editor:

Our Tar Heel cagers have finished regular season play with a commendable 12-2 won-lost record. As a basketball fan and Carolina supporter, I join other students in the hope that the Tar Heels will emerge as victors in the ACC tournament in Raleigh this week.

As much as I would like to see our team triumph in the tournament, I would much rather see our team play cleanly and fairly on the court. It is obvious to anyone who has seen Carolina play in several games this season that the players' conduct on the court has been far from commendable on several occasions. Several Tar Heel players have deliberately fouled their opponents, with Larese and Salz being the chief offenders. The conduct of student spectators in at least two games has been disgraceful and even contemptible. Such conduct cannot be condoned under any circumstances if we place any value at all upon good sportsmanship, a quality which is woefully deficient in most UNC students.

I like to support a winning team as much as anyone else, but if a team has to resort to unsportsmanlike conduct to win, then I say "To heck with the conference championship." Good basketball and clean basketball can go together. Let's hope th do in the games to be played t week.

"What — No Calls From The Supreme Court Asking Me To Serve As Counsel?"

Several more-or-less apt subtitles suggest themselves for the recent Playmakers production of Moliere's "The Would-Be Gentleman": among them is "Playmakers With a Sledgehammer Versus Moliere With a Feather"; or, perhaps, as one local playgoer would have it, simply "The Would-Be Moliere."

In defense of the Playmakers' rather heavy-handed production, all due attention should be paid to the difficulties inherent in the play itself. The obvious but all-important note is that the play is translated from 17th Century French to 20th Century English, and the transition of humor is an almost impossible business. Director Russel Graves' translation has a great deal more bounce and humor than most English versions.

Also, the play itself is an unweildy thing. While there is nothing wrong with violation of the unities and other experimental exercises, Mr. Moliere was doing his directors no favor when he wrote this one. He gets well into the second act before he even introduces the minor coflict which the play eventually resolves, and he neglects to resolve the ridiculous situation of the hero. This means that the play is mostly a succession of simple gags up to the point where the lovers' problems become the central issue, thus making the first act stand almost alone, if it can; and — most disconcerting of all — the would-be gentleman is left at the end with all his pretensions intact. This is hardly an example of dramatic construction at its best, and it presents serious difficulties for any director.

These difficulties were considerably compounded in the Playmaker production by the director's stated intention to "teach" the audience. If the Playmakers Theatre was supposedly transformed into a classroom, then one can only conclude that the teacher was mightily confused and disorganized and that the bell rang before the lecture was over.

But the important question in regard to Director Graves' approach to this play, as it was announced in his prologue, involved the relationship between art and pedagogy. There is a point of view which holds that one difference between art and academics is that art is non-didactic in its educational aspect. Obviously, Mr. Graves, at least for the purposes of this production, was not of this opinion. By his prologue, which stated that the production to follow was not intended to create any cheap theatrical illusions, as well as by his use of various devices to make the audience keep its intellectual distance, Mr. Graves showed himself to be on the side of those who hold that drama is a histrionic classroom type of thing, equipped with the latest in audio visual aids and devices.

The devices which Mr. Graves employed, and the stated purpose which informed them, are associated in the modern theatre with the "Epic" drama which began in Germany around 1924 and was later taken up in this country by the Group Theatre. This "Epic" drama was theatre-with-a-cause, devoted to social reform and the education of its audience in social problems (Soc. 52). The devices which developed in the service of such a purpose were perhaps ideal, but it is noteworthy that there was never a comedy in "Epic" style. Indeed, it is interesting to theorize that perhaps the aims of "Epic" drama — to which its devices are wedded — are antithetical to the comic spirit.

This certainly seemed to be the case with the Playmakers' attempt to combine comedy and Epic style. The humor was most nearly successful when the production was most conventional; when it affected "Epic" mannerisms, it was an epic bore, kept alive by the shallow novelty value of the devices themselves.

Almost without exception, the cast seemed caught between the incompatible poles of the Epic and the comic. Occasionally, one or more members would gravitate toward one of the two poles, and the play gave promise of being one thing or the other. Thus, the first act scene between M. Jourdain and the Philosophy Master verged on the hilarious, unimpeded as it was by the heavy Epic gimmicks. As just one example of the opposite extreme, there was Bob Ketler's excellent rendition of Dorante's song, in which he sustained the theatrical illusion while at the same time breaking the continuity of the play.

To be sure, there were other enjoyable portrayals in each style. Margaret Starnes was quite sucessful as Mme Jourdain, and Craven Mackie provided one of the high points of the show in the minor role of the Apprentice Tailor but he was rather old to be an apprentice; although he looked more like a television wrestler than a fencing instructor, and he certainly had little knowledge of fencing, Maris Ubans was a fine Fencing Master.

But for the most part the cast seemed caught between the epic and the comic, and perhaps inadequate to either. Certainly one of the major weaknesses of the production was James Potcat's failure to produce a very enjoyable interpretation of M. Jourdain. Even if one grants the difficulty of the role as Mr. Moliere has written it, it is still impossible to summon up two hours worth of amusement, pity, identification, or anything else, in response to the demented child presented by Mr. Potcat. The hero is a dupe to be sure, and vain, and practically anything else we may wish to make him; but as a candidate for an analyst's couch he loses much of his comic appeal.

John Sneden's setting and Irene Smart Rains' costumes were quite sufficient; except that it seems legitimate to wonder, in the light of the startling originality of the rest, why Mr. Graves bothered with any set at all, and why, of all things, he should choose 17th century costumes for a 17th century show. At it was, Mr. Sneden's set was appropriately ambiguous, gimmicky, and patently false, and Miss Raine's costumes were in appropriately bad taste.

The same sort of praise goes to Joel Chadabe's incidental music and arrangements: Mr. Chadabe proved himself a master of discord and shifting rhythm, to the great amusement of all. Director Graves' songs were witty enough; with the exception of the aforementioned Mr. Ketler, the cast failed to put them over.

Credit is also due Mr. Graves for his staging of the production, and most particularly for the scene in which the four lovers execute an adaptation of Coach McGuire's famouse "weave." Finally, Mr. Graves deserves credit for doing something different, if the difference seemed more for its own sake than for the sake of the play. The spirit in which this play was presented goes far to redeem its faults.

GM Bridge Lessons To Begin Wesdnesday

No self respecting Carolina student ever leaves the University without being a bridge addict or at least know how to count his hand to make a bid.

For the as yet uninitiated, bridge lessons will begin Wednesday in the Rendezvous Room.

Each Wednesday through May, the free bridge lessons will be held at 7 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room. The sponsoring organization is the Special Events Committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Radio Club Classes In Code Underway

"In only two hours of instruction, some of our student are able to 'copy' simple messages in Morse Code," Scott said. Scott is in charge of teaching the class the code and operating procedures and practices.

"We plan to turn out not just people who know Morse Code, but qualified radio operators who have all the requirements needed to pass FCC license code exams," he said.

The course is designed for students interested in amateur radio and other fields, such as aviation.

The free classes are held Monday and Tuesday nights at 7 o'clock in the Air Force ROTC Classroom 4, Caldwell Annex.

Students may begin attending the class at any time and start at any level of proficiency. Scott is available at 8-9119 for further details.

Di Senate To Debate Frats Tonight

Fraternities will be the discussion topic at the Dialectic Senate meeting today at 8 p. m.

"Recent discussions about the fraternities at Carolina have raised many questions of importance, not only to the fraternity men, but to others who are affected by policies of fraternities," said Di President Gary Greer.

"Some of these questions have been somewhat distorted and I feel that a discussion which freely airs all of the factors to be taken into consideration can greatly facilitate understanding in these matters," he continued.

Prominent fraternity men are being invited to attend the meeting, according to Greer.

Anyone interested in the discussion has been invited to attend. The Di meets on the third floor of New West.

To prevent a complete collapse of those talks, Church suggested that the United States try for a stopgap agreement with Russia on halting tests in the earth's atmosphere. Such tests are polluting the atmosphere and causing world concern, he told the Senate.

Later negotiations, the Idaho Senator said, could go into the question of controlling nuclear tests in space, underground or below water.

In another development, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) urged Eisenhower to "tell the American people what we are up against" in the Berlin crisis. The Senator said that if the American people understand the depth of that crisis "they will be willing to pay the price to save Berlin."

UP To Name Treasurer Candidate

A candidate for next year's student treasurer will be nominated at tonight's Uuniverstiy Party meeting. Any students who wishes to secure the UP nomination should have two speakers prepared to talk for him at the meeting, which will be held at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II.

"A partial explanation of the difference between the University Party and the Student Party can be seen in the indivlduals running for offices or legislative seats," said party chairman John Minter.

"Yet a more tangible difference," Minter continued, "can be seen in the party's platforms. The difference between a weak or affirmatively strong platform can mean the difference between defeat or victory for our candidates for offices and legislative seats.

"Anyone concerned with insuring our victory should come to this meeting — make suggestions, argue, discuss, add and delete ideas to be incorporated in the UP platform."

Nothing To Do?

The newspaper needs new staff members to write news, columns, sports and do art work. Most of the work done on the paper is completed between 2 and 5 p.m. daily. This time is usually convenient for students who have classes in the morning hours.

Students interested in work on The Daily Tar Heel may come to the newspaper office in Graham Memorial any afternoon.

A staff meeting will be announced soon.

Parker Pats Press; No Biz Like News Biz

By RON SHUMATE

'Once you've done it for United Press, you're an expert."

Fred Parker, business representative for United Press International in North Carolina and Virginia, was speaking to the UNC Press Club Monday night.

Parker described the basic differences between UPI and the other wire service, Associated Press.

In listing the most prominent distinctions Parker said "UPI is more exciting for me than AP because you cover more stories. A great deal of work is done by phone, there is more staff work and the work is less routine with UPI."

"You get the feeling of sitting on the pulse-beat of the world. You never know when your story will be the world headline," he stated.

Parker stated that UPI stories are generally shorter than those of AP.

He said that other fields within the realm of journalism, such as daily and weekly newspapers, public relations, free-lance writing and so forth, do not give one as "well-rounded a background as with UPI — or with the other wire service."

To further emphasize the varied skills one acquires working for a wire service, Parker said that "anyone who has any longevity at all with UPI can do almost any job on a newspaper."

"Your light isn't hidden under a basket with UPI. Anyone with talent, ambition and dedication can go a long way with us."

Parker further stated that UPI is the "most human" corporation, large or small, that he knows of. "Everyone is on a 'first-name' basis even after only a few weeks with the UPI."

The pay with the wire services, according to Parker, is generally much better than with newspapers.

"Work with a wire service may be a stepping-sone to another job or it may be a career in itself," Parker stated. He then cited several examples of UPI employees who went to work for large concerns as public relations personel.

The rapid growth of UPI was clearly illustrated by Parker's statement that the service only had six subscribing newspapers 20 years ago. Presently UPI serves 110 of 231 Southern newspapers, and 43 of these exclusively. Associated Press serves 188 of the 231 papers. A total of 67 papers in the South subscribe to both AP and UPI.

Parker asserted that it is a good idea to put beginners on the radio wire, because the writing is done in a natural, conversational style.

"It would be a great thing for the newspaper industry if every journalist would take a course in radio writing."

Parker, who went to law school rather than a journalism school, said the UPI does not tend to favor journalism graduates.

Covering The Campus

CAMPUS CHEST SOLICITORS NEEDED

Solicitors for the Campus Chest drive will work in Glen Lennox and Victory Village this afternoon. Any person wishing to help in this effort has been asked to meet in Roland Parker I at 1:30 p.m. today.

PETITE DRAMATIQUE

Tryouts for a poetry reading, "Carnival of Humanity," will be held Thursday a 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall by the Petite Dramatique group.

Russell Link and Jack Jackson will direct the "Carnival of Humanity" March 22 at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

FACULTY CLUB

"Fulbrighter in Australia" will be the topic at the Faculty Club meeting at the Carolina Inn today with Prof. Werner P. Friederich as the speaker.

Dr. Friederich is a professor of Germanic Languages here and is the American president of the International Comparative Literature Association. There are two international presidents, one for Europe, and one for North America.

Professor Friederich will speak on his experiences as a lecturer in Australia when he won a Fulbright grant for travel in that country. He is author of numerous books, including "An Outline of Comparative Literature."

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

The Philological Club will meet today at 7:30 p.m. in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

Prof. F. E. Coenen of the Department of Germanic Languages will present a paper on "The Modern German Language Drama."

All faculty members, graduate students and members of their families have been invited.

FRENCH FLICKS

Two French films will be shown in 215 Murphey today at 4 p.m. They are: La Monarchie au Moyen age and La Promenade de Versailles. Admission is free.

HEALTH AFFAIRS

Dr. Henry T. Clark Jr. of UNC will address the Chapel Hill Rotary Club on "The Growing Program in Health Affairs" Wednesday at 6:30 p.m.

Dr. Clark is the administrator of the UNC Division of Health Affairs. The division is composed of the Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, Pharmacy and Public Health and N. C. Memorial Hospital.

Dr. Clark is a native of Scotland Neck. He did his undergraduate work at UNC and attended the UNC School of Medicine for two years. His medical degree was awarded by the University of Rochester.

He recently returned from a study tour of the medical centers of 10 European countries. The tour was sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation.

ENGLISH JOURNAL

Dr. Charles Edge and Dr. W. Bernard Fleischmann, both instructors in English at UNC, have been appointed to the staff of permanent contributors to the journal, "Abstracts of English Studies."

The Abstracts, an official monthly publication of the National Council of Teachers of English, presents resumes of all articles and essays relevant to the study of English which are published in American and foreign journals.

Dr. Edge and Dr. Fleischmann will receive subscriptions to one or more periodicals from which they will currently abstract articles relevant to the field of English: resumes of these essays will then be printed in "Abstracts of English Studies."

HOLMAN COMMENTARY

Dr. C. Hugh Holman, chairman of the UNC Department of English, contributed an article on "Ernest Hemingway" to the current (Winter, 1959) issue of the "Shenandoa" quarterly.

Professor Holman's essay on Hemingway is part of a symposium on "Modern Novelists and Contemporary Society" in the pages of the "Shenandoa" quarterly. In respect to the major theme of the symposium Professor Holman concludes that "Hemingway, in his rejection of American society, has been consistent and courageous."

Ever meet a trusting soul?

"You can't go wrong looking for a job these days," he assures you. "Opportunities are great all over. All the good companies have about the same to offer."

Do they? A lot of not-so-trusting souls think otherwise. They suspect that some companies have much more to offer than others, and they want to find out which those are.

We'll help. We want to tell you how much the Bell Telephone Companies offer in the way of advancement opportunities, training, pay and benefits, professional associates and working conditions. No matter what your educational background—the arts, the sciences, business or engineering—make a date to talk with a Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. Writer Says Tourney Should Be Abolished

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a series of two articles by Dick Barkley on the ACC Tourney. Barkley is an experienced sports writer, a veteran, and is now a student at UNC. He has worked on this series for some six months.

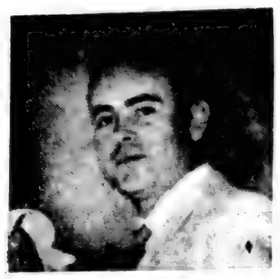
By DICK BARKLEY

At approximately 8:00 p.m. Saturday night, 13,000 people will rise to sing the National Anthem in nearby Raleigh. In the center of William Neal Reynolds coliseum, Old Glory will shine in the spotlights. The spectacle will undoubtably be very profitable, but its result may be most fallacious.

The scene will precede the Atlantic Coast Conference Basketball Tournament's final game which will crown the league champion and send it off to the NCAA wars. This one game will signify the end of three hectic days of battle in which not two, or three, or even four top-flight teams fight for supremacy, but three or four decidedly poor teams also. And, as so often happens in the unpredictable sporting world, one of the "poors" could take it all. Such an undesirable event is unlikely, but nevertheless, it's a possibility.

Prior to these three games, each team will have staggered through a 14-game conference schedule plus eight or nine outside opponents. But now, it matters not how well a team has performed in these nothing contests. Just win a couple, and you're the best.

Fortunately, the regular season champion has won the tournament three of its five years in existence. But on two occasions, a team which was inferior to some others during the initial 20-some games was blessed with a "hot streak," and reigned supreme. The somewhat surprised victors did not remain joyful for long, however. They were quickly bounced from the NCAA regional playoffs when they returned to normality.



DICK BARKLEY

Why is such a situation allowed to prevail? The answer is simple, and collectively universal. MONEY! The tournament nets the conference approximately $70,000 yearly. And what does the ACC do with the seventy grand? Eddie Cameron, Chairman of the ACC basketball committee says, "The profit carries all expenses of the conference office and defrays the costs of other meets and tournaments."

Just what the expenses amounted to was not offered, but there is no logical reason for them to exceed the costs of nine other conferences throughout the nation. The SEC, PCC, Big Ten, Mo. Valley, Middle AC, Border Conf., Skyline Conf., Rocky Mt. Conf., and even the little Ivy League somehow manage to thrive without having to depend on proceeds from a useless basketball tournment. Two conferences, the SWC and Big Eght, have league tournesy at Christmas, but these affairs do not determine the conferences' champions. Of the country's major leagues, only the Southern Conference is swimming upstream with its fellow-statesmen. How these two leagues got into so much financial difficulty remains a mystery.

Coaches Disagree

Coaches and Athletic Directors in the ACC are found to be pretty much in accord concerning the tournament. They do not agree with its principles, but do not want to discard the money on principle alone.

Maryland Coach Bud Millikan, whose team "backed' into the championship last year by capturing the "70,000 Farce" (as Millikin himself labeled it) says, "There is no question but what the the tournament is not the ideal way of selecting the true champion. But the interest in the ACC is greater than anywhere else in the nation," Bud continues, "and if our tourney is aiding this interest, I am for it. However, I honestly feel the true champion is the regular season winner."

North Carolina Coach Frank McGuire states, "We play all season for nothing. This is certainly a "nothing league. Why, it is possible for our conference representative to the NCAA this year to have a 2-24 record."

Mention was made of the 1957 tournament when the Tar Heels had to come from behind in the final seconds to beat Wake Forest. "That's a good example," McGuire broke in. "We had beaten a fine Wake Forest team three times during the season, and yet we had to do it again. We were the best team in the United States — we proved it by winning 32 in a row. Still, Wake Forest nearly beat us in the tourney; they led us by one point with 12 seconds to play. The best thing that could have happened toward getting rid of this thing was for us to have lost that game. It's like Russian Roulette — one slip and you're gone."

1957's Coach of the Year (by 12 seconds) said there is little hope for the tournament being disbanded in the near future. "But the conference should certainly allow the other teams to participate in the NIT tourney." McGuire added. "At least the players who fought all season to become outstanding would receive some satisfaction from the year's work," McGuire concluded.

He has a good point here. The '57 Wake Forest team might have won he NIT.

Duke mentor Hal Bradley began with, "I don't agree with the tournament from a working standpoint, but from a financial standpoint, it is necessary. 70,000 is a lot of money."

Everette Case, coach of neighboring N. C. State's Wolfpack, would only offer, ". . . the tournament is a very popular and well attended tradition in which there is a tremendous amount of interest." (Another tradition which attracted much interest was the Indian scalpings a century ago.)

Heels Skid To 5th In Poll; State 10th

(AP)—The Kentucky Wildcats, who closed their regular season with a 23-2 overall record although failing to win their conference title, continue to lead Kansas State by a solid margin in the Associated Press weekly college basketball poll.

Kentucky turned back Alabama and Tennessee last week for a 12-2 mark in the Southeastern Conference. However, Adolph Rupp's men tied with Auburn for second in the league. The Wildcats will get an opportunity to defend their NCAA championship because champion Mississippi State has bowed out because of a segregation custom and Auburn is on NCAA probation.

Michigan State and West Virginia, both of whom clinched their conference crowns over the weekend, gained the most ground among the top ten teams. The Spartans, Big-Ten winners, moved up from eighth to sixth place while the Mountaineers, who won the Southern Conference tourney, climbed from 10th to No. 8.

Cincinnati, the Missouri Valley leader, advanced one notch to third place. The Bearcats produced three victories last week—over Duquesne, Tulsa and Houston. That put their record at 21-2.

Mississippi State also moved up one position to fourth. The SEC kingpins ended their campaign with a 24-1 slate after knocking off Tulane and Mississippi last week.

In the "lost ground" category were North Carolina, Auburn and North Carolina State. Bradley, winner over Wichita and North Texas State, held the No. 9 spot.

North Carolina fell from third to fifth place. The Tar Heels were beaten by Virginia last Wednesday. Auburn slumped to seventh after dropping a 56-55 decision to Tennessee last Monday. It was the second loss in succession for the Plainsmen following 30 victories in a row over two seasons.

North Carolina State, seventh a week ago, tumbled to 10th. The Wolfpack lost to Eastern Kentucky the Ohio Valley titleholder.

California, the Pacific Coast Conference pace-setter, moved past St. Louis to head up the second 10 teams. Two other West Coast teams, Seattle and Portland, were knocked out of the second 10. They were replaced by Utah, the Skyline Conference leader, and St. Joseph's Pa. which is on a 10-game winning streak.

THE POLL

1.	Kentucky (1)	23-2	853
2.	Kansas State (28)	22-1	750
3.	Cincinnati (7)	21-2	703
4.	Misissippi State (20)	24-1	617

Swimmers End Great Season, Sweep ACC

By JOHN JUSTICE

Despite the differences in swimming and basketball, the two sports at Carolina have one thing in common; for each, this year was supposed to be a rebuilding year, and both squads have had outstanding records. Coach Pat Earey has molded a strong team of swimmers out of a small group of lettermen and an excellent crops of sophomores, as is equally true with Frank McGuire and his basketball powerhouse.

The ACC swimming tournament held here last weekend gives evidence of just how well the Tar Heels have kept their dominating position in the ACC. Out of possible first places, Carolina captured eight. This compares with the 11 championships won by Earey's men last year, when they went undefeated. Behind the Heels in first places this year was Maryland, which had four, counting two racked up in diving by Bob Kohl, winner of the Feuchtenburger Trophy for Diving.

The top individual for Carolina was, of course, Harry Bloom, the sophomore streak from Baltimore, Md. Bloom captured no less than three championships, including a record-breaking 220-yard individual medley.

When asked whether he was satisfied with the results of the meet, the affable Earey replied that he was "quite pleased." This is Earey's second year as coach of the Tar Heel mermen, and his two year record is 21 wins and 1 loss, the single defeat being at the hands of Florida University.

The next outing of the team will be at State College in the AAU meet coming up in two weeks. Then after that Earey says that he will take some of his men to the Nationals, later in the month, to really put them to the test. Three of the swimmers who will probably make the trip are Bloom, Randy Dodson, and Bob Hunter, a trio which captured ix ACC titles among them.

Fireworks Ready To Start In ACC Tourney

By KEN ALYTA

RALEIGH — (AP) — Not a shot has been fired, but the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament opening here Thursday already has made history.

The four first round pairings are exactly the same as a year ago—only the starting times are different. This is all the more remarkable because drawings were required to break tie for three positions. Conference rules pair the No. 1 team over the season against the eighth place club, No. 2 against No. 7, 3 against 6 and 4 with 5.

In two instances, North Carolina-Clemson and Maryland-Virginia, the teams will be meeting in the first round for the third year in a row.

The 2 p. m. opener Thursday matches a steadily improving Duke team of sophomores against an in and out Wake Forest club.

Duke tied for third with Maryland, but won the No. 3 spot in a draw. The Blue Devils have won six of their last nine for a over-all 12-11 record.

Wake Forest got the nod for sixth place after finishing in a tie with Clemson. The Wake Deacons are 10-13 for the year and have yet to put together more than two victories in a row.

Carolina and Clemson meet in the 4 o'clock Thursday game with the Tar Heels ranked second after losing the draw following a tie for top position with North Carolina State.

After gaining the nation's No. 1 ranking two weeks ago, Carolina fell from the heights with successive losses at Maryland and Virginia. The Tar Heels broke the losing streak with a 72-62 victory over Duke Saturday to bring their final record to 18-3, with a 12-2 ACC mark.

Clemson, 8-15 on the season, matched its best winning streak of the campaign with victories in its last two games, over South Carolina and Wake Forest. In each of their last three games the Tigers have scored 58 points.

N. C. State, ineligible to accept the bid to NCAA championship play that goes to the tournament winner because it is on NCAA-imposed probation for a basketball recruiting violation, opens the Thursday night program at 7:30 against South Carolina.

State, which held top ranking in the nation in mid-January for a week, is 19-4 for all games following a 71-69 loss to Eastern Kentucky in its last start. South Carolina, mired in a nine-game losing streak, has reversed State's record with a 4-19 showing.

Maryland's defending champions close out the first round against Virginia in a pairing of two teams currently playing their best basketball. Maryland is 10-12 for the season, but has won four of its last five games. Virginia has swept six of its last seven for a 10-13 record.

ACC Pairings for Thursday:
2:00—Duke (3) vs. Wake Forest (6)
4:00—Carolina (2) vs. Clemson (7)
7:30—State (1) vs. S. Carolina (8)
9:30—Maryland (4) vs. Virginia (5)

FINAL ACC STANDINGS

UP Selects Bingham Cocktails Dropped

By RON SHUMATE

The University Party nominated Bob Bingham Tuesday night as its candidate for next year's student body treasurer. Bingham was nominated by acclamation.

The cocktail party and dinner planned for next Monday night was discussed at some length by several party members.

Al Goldsmith said the cocktail party "amounts to 'political suicide' — and that is definitely not our purpose."

He further stated that the dinner and party should not be held in the region of the fraternities because the UP might stand to lose dormitory votes. The $4-a-plate dinner was scheduled to be held in the Carolina Inn ballroom and the cocktail party at a fraternity house.

Dick Pattersall said "If we're going to duck our heads and run every time The Daily Tar Heel prints an article, we might as well quit."

Charlie Gray asserted that by having the dinner and cocktail party, the UP "would be doing something adverse to what I'm going to run for."

Gray said he thinks that the present editor of The Tar Heel "has nothing that can hurt us very badly — but this (the party) will give it to him. As the plan stands now I think it could only have adverse effects on us, the candidates."

Goldsmith spoke again, saying "If you've got The Tar Heel against you, you've got three strikes for you."

Goldsmith made a motion that a UP committee investigate the possibility of hold the dinner in a room at Lenoir Hall — an elimiate the cocktail party.

The motion passed unanimously.

The party also discussed their platform for the coming election. No definite platform was established, but a Platform Committee was named.

This committee will meet Friday at 1:30 p.m. in the Grail Room in Graham Memorial. Comprised of 14 members it will draw up a draft of the party's platform for presentation to the members of the party at the next meeting.

Student Body President Don Furtado spoke briefly at the meeting. He urged members to begin a campaign of writing letters to members of the General Assembly because of the lack of funds recommended for the University by the Advisory Budget Commission.

IFC Opposes Deferring Rush

The Interfraternity Council went on record Monday night as opposing deferred rush.

At a special meeting Monday, IFC representatives overwhemingly reported that their fraternities were against delaying rush from the fall to the spring semester.

Later this week, the IFC will release a statement with enumerated reasons of the organization' stand against deferred rush, IFC President Ashe Exum said Tuesday.

A special subcommittee of the IFC Rush Committee has been appointed to make a study of the present rush system. From its findings and suggestions from fraternity rush chairmen, the subcommitee will present recommendations to the IFC committee for improving fall rush. Members of the subcommittee are Jimmy Rouse, chairman; Tom Rand and Charlie Pittman.

Robinson Wins Title Of 'Ace of Hearts'

Carolina coeds enter beauty contests for every conceivable occasion. There's nothing for the male—here.

But a Carolina gentleman was a winner in a similar contest at Stephens College in Columbia, Mo.

Though Robinson lost out to a Missouri University boy for the "King of Hearts" title, he placed among the "Four Aces" out of 70 candidates.

Campus Chest Has Visible Local Effect

Carolina students can see where part of their Campus Chest donations go without leaving Chapel Hill, a member of the Campus Chest Board said Thursday.

All three agencies being sponsored in the 1959 Campus Chest drive aid students. But the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program directly involves UNC students, said Dave Davis, assistant chairman of this year's drive.

In addition to the Goettingen scholarships, students are being asked to contribute this week to these other two organizations: the World University Service (to aid foreign students) and the Orange County Class for Mentally Retarded Children.

Under the Goettingen scholarship scholarship program, two UNC students are sent to Germany for a year of study and two German students attend Carolina. Davis was a Goettingen scholar himself last year and returned to Carolina in September 1958.

In Germany at the present time are Bob Noble and Frances Reynolds. After they return for at least another undergraduate year at UNC, Denton Lotz and Thal Elliott will replace them as Carolina's exchange scholars.

The two German students here this year are Peter Nicholaissen and Heiner Haemke. Next year, the University at Goettingen will send Volker Berkhahn and the first coed, Fraulein Becker.

The actual value of each Goettingen scholarship is $1,500, which is subsidized both here and at the German university. Transportation expenses of UNC students to Germany are paid for here, and the local students' costs in the European country are provided by the University at Goettingen.

The German university pays for their students' trip here, but the other costs come from the UNC Goettingen fund.

If the Campus Chest drive this year reaches its $3,000 goal, 40 per cent (or $1,200) will be turned over the local Goettingen fund.

Another 40 per cent will go to the World University Service, and the remaining 20 per cent (or $600) will be turned over to the mentally retarded children's class.

Hodges Voices Hope In Henderson Strike

HENDERSON, N. C. — (AP) — After conferring Tuesday with both sides involved in the strife-ridden Henderson cotton mill strike, Gov. Hodges told newsmen, "I am very hopeful that these gentlemen can resolve their differences."

But, he added, "it is not an easy thing," as he told newsmen not to expect an immediate settlement.

The Governor had invited in officials of the Hariet-Henderson Cotton Mills and officials of the striking Textile Workers Union of America for the conference after violence reached the point Monday that Henderson officials told the Governor they were unable to maintain law and order.

The Governor Monday night ordered in more than 100 Highway Patrolmen to help more than 40 patrolmen and the Henderson police and sheriff's deputies in maintaining order. Hodges asserted that if these forces could not quell the strike violence "I will do whatever is necessary" to maintain law and order.

Although both sides assured the Governor of their willingness to continue negotiations in the hope of reaching a settlement, their comments to newsmen indicated they are still far apart on the question of arbitration of grievances which is the main issue in the strike.

Union officials want an arbitration clause which has been in their contract with the mills for 14 years continued. Management wants it changed.

The union officials also denied outside "goon squads" had been brought into Henderson as the town's local officers had charged Monday night. They also asserted that some workers brought in by management had brandished guns at strikers, thus providing some of the violence.

Asked if he had considered personally interventing to mediate the strike, the Governor said "I don't want personally to intervene . . . but we will do so if it ever comes to the point where we feel it will do any good." He added that he had no plans for further meetings but "my plans are fluid."

WC Theatre Presents 'Woman Of Setzuan'

The Theatre of Woman's College will present "The Good Woman of Setzuan" to open the Fine Arts Festival in Greensboro this week. The production will be staged in Aycock Auditorium on the Woman's College campus Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

The contemporary comedy by Bertolt Brecht deals with the problem of morality confronting a woman who attempts to face the realities of life in the slums of Setzuan, China. The Department of Drama at WC describes the play as "touching every phase of human behavior."

Crotty Seeks Senior Post Of Treasurer

John Crotty will run for treasurer of the senior class on the Student Party ticket in the spring elections April 7.

Crotty was selected as the SP candidate by the Advisory Board of the party Tuesday afternoon.

In other action by the SP Advisory Board, Ed Cox and Bob Covington were appointed to the finance committee.

Student Loans Topic At Service Program

Talks on student loans and self-help opportunities will features the final meeting of the In Service Training Program Thursday at 4 p.m. in 107 Hanes Hall.

Harold Weaver will speak on loans and Miss Betty Worth will talk on opportunities for students to obtain self-help jobs. The program is sponsored annually by the office of the dean of women.

UNC Sig Eps Will Attend Annual Ball

More than 40 brothers and pledges from the UNC Sigma Phi Epsilon chapter will join other members from seven chapters in the two Carolinas at the 34th annual Sig Ep Ball this weekend in Raleigh.

The Ball at the State College Union Saturday is for District V of the fraternity, including chapters at State, Duke, Carolina, Wake Forest, Davidson, High Point, Lenoir Rhyne, Atlantic Christian and South Carolina. Included in the activities will be a banquet, beauty queen selection, chapter singing contest and the dance.

Speaker at the banquet will be Malcolm Seawell, North Carolina attorney general and an alumnus of the local Sig Ep chapter. Also attending will be Bedford Black and Dick Whiteman, national officers, and Woody Clinard, district governor.

In the beauty contest Miss Hilda Sermons of Atlantic Christian College is representing this chapter. She is pinned to Cliff Paderick. Sponsoring this chapter will be Miss Cecille Ledwell of Charlotte and Miss Miriam McLaughlin of Chapel Hill, with Gordie Lindsey and Jess Stribling.

Carter To Sing Tuesday

The UNC Music Department will sponsor a song recital by Joel Carter, baritone, and Glenn Watkins, pianist, in Hill Hall, Tuesday, March 10, at 8 p.m. The concert is open to the public with no admission.

Dr. Carter, chairman of instruction in voice at UNC, has been a member of the faculty since 1949. He is also director of the UNC Glee Club and the Chapel Hill Choral Club.

He has made frequent appearances as leading baritone in both musical comedies and operas, having recently appeared as Escamillo in the Music Department's production of Carmen.

Dr. Watkins, chairman of instruction in organ and teacher of theory in the Music Department, was appointed to the UNC faculty in September, 1958. Before coming to Chapel Hill, he was assistant professor and organist at Southern Illinois University.

A graduate of the University of Michigan and the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Watkins has also studied with Nadia Boulanger in Fontainebleau. In addition to his studies in France, Watkins spent a year in London and Oxford as a Fulbright scholar in musicology.

Duke Concert Includes Spanish, Flemish Music

A concert of early Spanish and Flemish music will be presented by the New York Pro Musica Antiqua Thursday at 8:15 p.m. in the Duke University Woman's College Auditorium. Admission to the concert is $1.

The 11 member New York Pro Musica includes in its vocal group two sopranos, a counter tenor, two tenors and a bass, and five instrumentalists who play on such rare instruments as the one-keyed flute, the viola da gamba, the family of recorders, the rebec (medieaval fiddle) and the harpsichord.

The New York Pro Musica has, this past season, been acclaimed for its performances at New York's Town Hall, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in the Frick Collection Series and at the Cloisters. At the Cloisters the group attracted nation-wide attention for its production of The Play of Daniel, an opera last performed in 1250.

The group has also performed at Washington's Library of Congress, major musical festivals throughout the United States including those held at Ravinia, Tanglewood, Stratford-Connecticut, as well as the Stratford-Ontario Shakespeare Festival.

The New York Pro Musica has also acquired a nation-wide television audience through its appearance on the NBC Omnibus program.

In addition to its regular work program, the Pro Musica holds classes for singers, instrumentalists and music students and maintains an extensive library and instrumental collection.

Proceeds from the food sale will be donated to benefit cerebral palsy victms.

Pioneer IV Making U. S.'s Deepest Space Probe Yet; May Pass Moon At 2 P. M.

Missile Chief Claims Russian Lead Narrowed

By FRED S. HOFFMAN

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A tiny cone made America's deepest penetration into space yesterday as it lunged closer to the moon and a hoped-for orbit around the sun.

Riding in the nose of a 60-ton Juno Rocket, the 13-pound package of instruments roared aloft from Cape Canaveral, Fla., at 10½ minutes past midnight (EST).

As of 3 p.m., the National Aeronautics and Space Administration calculated the 20-inch-long gold plated cone, called Pioneer IV, had reached 107,900 miles from earth. That's early halfway to the moon, some 220,000 miles away, and about 36,600 miles farther than an Air Force space probe attained last Oct. 11.

Pioneer IV was slowing down, but that was according to plan. As of 15 hours after launch, its speed had dropped from 24,890 miles an hour to 5,675 miles an hour.

Although slightly off its intended course, Pioneer IV is expected to pass the moon about 2 p.m. at a distance of about 35,000 miles. Then, scientists hope, it will flash on to a solar orbit.

The Russians launched a space probe on Jan. 2 and claim it went into orbit around the sun, which is nearly 93 million mimles from earth.

A "splendid achievement" was the way President Eisenhower described Pioneer IV's launching. He learned about it as soon as he awakened this morning.

Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, the army's missile chief, said this new American feat "puts us at least close to the league" in which the phasize campus news. H said, how-

COMMITTEE VACANCIES

Five students to fill vacancies on two student government committees will be determined at interviews in the student government office today from 3 to 5 p.m.

Four new members will take positions on the Elections Board, the committee in charge of the coming spring elections slated for April 7.

The other committee post open is on the Student Audit Board, which deals with audits on student finances.

Interviews are open to all students.

Young Raps SP Candidate Treatment

Davis B. Young lashed at the Student Party for their treatment of candidates for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel in a statement issued Tuesday.

Young referred to the fact that he and Dave Jones were not allowed to present statements of policy to the SP at their meeting Monday night.

"Not only were we abused from the floor, not once, but several times as 'incompetent,' " said Young, "but a motion was passed that effectively denied us the right to defend ourselves and present platforms."

He recalled the fact that "I and the other candidate (Jones) are not only SP members, but also SP officeholders."

Young said that in his undelivered campaign speech he planned to affirm "that it is a mistake to select an editor who is irrevocably comitted to one campus party or faction thereof."

He listed the following points to point out his political neutrality:

"1 . . . As editor, I will attend meetings of the Student Party and the University Party as a newspaperman. I will not participate in the

Jones Outlines Edit Plans For DTH

Letters to the editor, a training program, Sunday features, campus news, and advertising commissions were items concerned with the management of The Daily Tar Heel emphasized by Dave Jones, in a statement released today.

"Letters to the editor are the student's way of lashing back at the outrages of the editor and his writers," said Jones," I feel that all responsible letters should be printed when space will allow. When space will not allow, representative letters expressing all sides of an issue should be printed, with apologies to those writers who had to be left out."

Jones said that he felt a training program should be initiated in each department to prepare freshmen and other newcomers for the top positions. He would encourage them to take the news editor's or managing editor's chair for brief periods so that they could get the feel of the job and its responsibility.

"I would continue the advertising policies of the present editor," the candidate continued. "I feel that the incentive plan, giving commissions to the salemen, has been a contributing factor in the paper's showing a profit this year."

"I will continue to solicit subscriptions from parents and alumni. Last year' plan of sending a free copy of the orientation issue to each student's parents paid off in doubled revenues from this source."

Jones expressed his intent to em-

Prof. Slams Colleges As Being Playgrounds

American colleges are becoming marriage mills and fun factories, a University of Indiana professor charged today.

Journalism teacher Jerome Ellison made the charge in the current (March 7) issue of The Saturday Evening Post, noting that there is a national inclination to push education aside whenever it interferes with love or comfort, money or fun.

His article, "Are We Making a Playground Out of College?" offers some suggestions for improving the situation. They include abolishing automobiles on the campus, disbanding fraternities and sororities, eliminating plush university housing for married students until the head of the house becomes a senior and a re-entrance examination at the beginning of the junior year.

Ellison, who notes that he is speaking with a background of twenty-five years of editing, writing, teaching and publishing, says the thing that concerns him is an intellectual immorality—the encroachment upon the main business of college of an accumulation of irrelevancies which together make up a "Second Curriculum" that often takes precedence over the first.

"The Second Curriculum," he explains, "is that odd mixture of status hunger, voodoo, tradition, lust, NO. 1 DTH PROF. SLAMS . . . . stereotyped dissipation, love, solid achievement and plain good fun sometimes called 'college life.'

"It drives a high proportion of our students through college chronically short of sleep, behind in their work, and uncertain of the exact score in any department of life."

Applications For Deferment Test Available

Applications for the April 30, 1959 administration of the College Qualification Test are now available at Selective Service System local boards throughout the country.

Eligible students who intend to take this test should apply at once to the nearest Selective Service local board for an application and a bulletin of information.

Following instructions in the bulletin, the student should fill out his application and mail it immediately in the envelope provided to SELECTIVE SERVICE EXAMINING SECTION, Educational Testing Service, P. O. Box 588, Princeton, N. J. Applications for the April 30 test must be postmarked no later than midnight, April 9, 1959.

According to Educational Testing Service, which prepares and administers the College Qualificatio Test for the Selective Service System, it will be to the student's advatage to file his application at once. The results will be reported to the student's Selective Service local board of jurisdiction for use in considering his deferment as a student.

SP Meeting

At least from the eyes of one candidate and from the actions of several members, the Student Party meeting Monday night was a confusing affair when it came to endorsement of candidates for the office of editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

One candidate, in a campaign statement appearing on page 1, charged that he and his opponent were not allowed to present their views on The Daily Tar Heel. This statement is untrue. At no time was either candidate prohibited from speaking in any discussion. Indeed, either candidate could have probably presented the full text of their respective speeches at either the discussion as to whether to endorse or not or after the discussion in order to press the issue of reconsideration. It is no doubt that the speech either candidate might have given at this time would have fallen on deaf ears in a somewhat hostile audience, but the opportunity was there.

The statement that party members had no right to call "incompetent" is somewhat valid. One of the primary reasons that the party voted not to endorse was that the bi-partisan selection board had not met and that the competence of either candidate had not been judged.

However, as one proponent of endorsement pointed out, the public has had adequate time to see these candidates and investigate their capabilities and backgrounds. Thus, it is clear that the comments were well within the rights of the party, although for those who might eventually want to endorse another candidate or any of these candidates, the remarks, in all fairness, might have waited until the endorsement meeting.

It may be pointed out that some of those who sponsored the motion not to endorse did so on the dual basis that they felt the party had no qualified alternative before them and that another candidate, Norman B. Smith, intended to run for editor. This is also a mistake.

Norman Smith, in a signed statement released yesterday to The Daily Tar Heel, said "I will under no circumstances be a candidate for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel this spring."

Those who would not believe his verbal statement should be advised by this declaration.

In the meantime, the Student Party has provided time for all candidates to speak on March 23. By then the bi-partisan selection board will have met, and all candidates who may run will be in the race. That evening there will be a minimum of two speeches which, if the Student Party continues its past standards of fairness, will be heard by all members with opportunity given to all to receive an endorsement.

Telephones

The telephone system in Chapel Hill seems to average at least one foul-up a day in The Daily Tar Heel office which has in total only two phones. No doubt the situation is as bad in other areas.

One ex-student reported that it took her approximately ten minutes to get an information operator, and that a long distance operator in Raleigh was put to extreme trouble trying to reach a party in the Chapel Hill community.

If the state (the University) cannot run the system right, then it had better sell it to people who can. State ownership of phones is questionable to begin with, and ownership that does not provide adequately for the community is intolerable. The editor would be willing to bet that if the University would sell the telephone system, it would realize enough money to build almost all of a new student union, something that might legitimately be considered a University enterprise.

Business And B. A. Schools

Does the Business major feel he is thinking "for himself" and being encouraged to learn more than a trade while in college? Many do not. Many are leaving the department, some because they cannot do the difficult work (and it is difficult), others because they feel that they and their parents are being cheated. Four years is a big cut out of one's life, they think, and maybe they should be getting more than a careful sample of the many ideas and particles of knowledge being tossed around outside the School of Business Administration.

The students cannot complain of the departmental leadership - they may, like students in every school of every university in the country, complain about individual instructrs, but all seem to realize that both the Business and Economics Departments are being led by men of extra-ordinary perception, honesty, and intelligence. Maurice Lee in the School of Business Administration is an open man who is ready and anxious to talk about his work, quick to defend and criticise. He knows the failings of Business School throughout the nation and is outspoken in his advocacy of change. His recent booklet, "Redesigning the Products of the Business School," is testimony to this. Paul Guthrie in the Department of Economics is equally honest and outspoken and is nationally known for his competence. These are good strong men, yet their aims are being thwarted by elements within the very nature of their field over which they have no control.

Business Schools belong in Universities but not in Colleges - the University is supposed to be a large foundation within which knowledge at an extensive level may be procured in many subjects; the college is in reality a glorified high school in which the student begins to take definite steps toward specialization but is still broadening the foundation of his education which will further his aim of becoming a cultured man. When the Business Schools entered the universities on the college level they brought with them people who were not interested in becoming "cultured" - they brought potential technicians, men who at the age of nineteen were ready to forget all aspects of man's experience except those involved in some way with the fine art of money changing. These are young men who do not care what Shakespeare wrote, what Jonson thought, why Napoleon lived, who Plato was. For they do not recognize the great contributions these men made to the developement of world culture; they are only concerned with the value of a dollar and the greater value of a thousand.

What all of this is leading to is the fact that a business school is essentially a trade school. Like mechanics' schools and radio repair schools, it deals with a decisive facet of modern life which must be studied in detail and without particular attention to other aspects of contemporary and historical culture. How, therefore, can any school of business administration resolve itself logically to the rest of the campus of a university supposedly devoted to the meting out of culture? This is difficult, perhaps impossible. And instead of attempting to resolve themselves to the campuses upon which they are situated, the majority of the nation's university-located business schools have taken a different tack: they become the dominating element on the campus.

It is very difficult for anyone outside the Business School on the campus of the University of North Carolina to feel empathy for either the people or the aims of the Business School. The attitude they take is, in part, correct, but is also provincial and narrow-minded. Basically, they feel that the B. A. School is a conglomeration of Philistine, manned but automatons and attended by ignorami. Some of the people in the school itself agree - a few students have been heard to describe their fellow Business majors as "clods." These standpoints, however, are not valid. The people who run the Business Schools and its instructors, are highly competent men. Contrary to popular opinion, they are not men who could not make a success in business. They are interested, intelligent men. Some of the students are smart, some intellectually volatile and inquistive, but the majority, while not "clods," seem to have one definite failing for a good student: they are not interested in anything except making money, and money is their God.

This is the crux of the entire problem presented by the Business School on the American campus. There is a lack of concern for the arts, the sciences, history, and the manifold and various achievements of man throughout history. Because of this attitude, the Business Schools produce an end result which is rather alarming. The important thing to realize is that the School itself is not completely responsible. To be sure, it has made definite steps toward further limiting the scope of the student, by giving him a severe and heavy schedule in business and economics, by isolating him intellectually from the rest of the campus, and by restricting his intellectual contacts. But the fault really lies with the student. He is a young man who is going to college to get a college degree but who does not want a college education. He realizes the value of the college degree in contemporary society, and is very anxious to be able to capitalize upon its worth. But the degree he is getting does not represent college work and achievement - it is a trade school degree, a symbol of the fact that he has learned a great deal about the world of business and very little about the rest of the world.

A very interesting thing of note about the Business Schools is the kind of businessman they seem to be aiming to turn out. The boys in the Business School at Carolina are not being trained to be clerks. Certified Public Accountants, what one student described as "the intellectual janitors of the business world." The same student said that he felt that the training he was receiving was going to give him nothing more than maybe ten thousand a year at the most - not much for a man of ambition. The point is, however, that these are not men of ambition. The most outstanding single factor driving college sophomores to Business degrees is the most important factor in American life today - the security drive. These are not boys who want to make a million, not products of the Horatio Alger myth or followers of Andrew Carnegie. These are boys who are scared stiff of not being able to find a job when they get out of college, boys who want to marry that sweetheart back home or the cute little coed and have two and a half children and live in Levittown with a black cocker spaniel nipping unpleasantly at the heels of the postman and sit at home at night in their undershirts and watch the fights or Ed Sullivan. Are they this bad? Not all of them, to be sure, but enough so that the School of Business Administration comes to represent not highly vaunted business ethics nor a multimillion dollar future, but consummate mediocrity. These are the students, and that is the school, and this is what they will be. It could very well be that we are all waiting for another man to come and overturn the tables of the moneychangers!

"December, January, February, March, April, May— Here I Come, Ready Or Not"

Big Business

In 1924 the usually laconic Calvin Collidge made an extremely accurate statement about the country of which he was President: "The business of America is business." The truth of this cannot be denied, and the changing meaning of the statement is as important as the superficial meaning of the fact. We have always thought of America as a Capitalistic state, and with that expression comes certain definite implications: to us, capitalism represents one man monopolies, large concerns headed by one despotic old man who gives generously to worthy causes and makes great sacrifices to maintain good will with the rest of the nation. This is no longer the case; now America is a Business, of Corporation, state.

While Capitalism implies to the average person a large one man monopoly, Business and Corporation imply organizations working with large staffs of little men who form an entity when operating together. "Togetherness" is the key word of the Business Society, and it is this kind of business that is the business of America. Loring Mandel's Arthur Hennicut was the Chairman of the Board of a Corporation, and all the other characters were involved with the corporation. These are the new Americans, and they represent the new America.

The Corporation does very funny things to men; some of them, little but willful, rise to the top because they are capable of working with others; some of them fall because, although strong, they are unwilling to sacrifice their individualism to the group. Everything is done in groups, and consequently little individual credit is given. The boss praises not individuals but committees and branches and cliques. "Each man for himself" is passe; "each man for the group" is predominant. The disturbing thing is that no one in the organization seems to care. Each member seems willing to be little, willing to let group desires and welfare over-ride his personal wishes and preferences. If this "individual" does not want fame or wealth or success, what does he want? Who is he?

"The Organization Man" wants only one thing: it is basic, it is very important, yet it is the yearning of LITTLE men - he wants security. He wants the afore-mentioned bourgeouis virtues. The old virtues held sacred by the Protestant Ethic - success, material wealth, a place in the community- are no longer meaningful to him. In more ways than one, he is a scared little man. Afraid of the omni-present threat of war and international annihilation, he is concerned with only one thing - survival. What he fails to understand is that survival is easily obtained in the twentieth century, and that if we are going to war we are going to war and since there is little he can do about it the best thing he can do is forget it. He is fooling himself into thinking that the Corporation will at once maintain his individuality and offer him a refuge.

The one thing that the Corporation will not do for him is help to maintain his individuality. He finds, if he is enough of a soul-searcher to realize the fact, that he is actually heart and soul a part of the Corporation. He is a possessed man, a man who has forced himself to be enslaved because of his personal fears and doubts. His mind is involved with only one thing, and it is this that emphasises his negative contribution to American culture - the only thing with which he is concerned is the business and the money it brings him. It is the part of life with which he is not concerned which must necessarily bother us, and this is what we must examine.

A few Corporations have made more than token efforts to be of use in furthering culture in America. Some through advertising, some through scholarship programs, some through endowments, some through intelligent sponsorship of worthwhile television and radio programs, some through generous philanthropy - many have made lasting and valuable contributions to American intellectual life. But the Corporation cannot and does not represent the individual within itself. He is not a "cultured man;" he does not appreciate paintings by Ben Shahn, music by Aaron Copeland, architecture by Frank Lloyd Wright, books by William Faulkner, Shakespeare by the Old Vic Company. His recreation consists of motor boats (there is an important distinction to be made between those who sail on water and those who motor; those who sail represent the genteel aristocracy who delight in idling over the seas, while those who motor are in a great hurry to get nowhere and get the only sensation from speed, not from the close and meaningful contact with nature) and Friday night fights, Life Magazine (probably the worst publication in America), Radio City Music Hall, Bar-B-Q chef's aprons with patent expressions like "Oh you kid!" and "Watch My Worchestershire" printed on them, Thunderbirds (the nouveau riche equivalent of the Mercedes), and lolling on the patio - not the lawn - of that red brick house in Westchester or Stamford.

The Corporation Man is as deep as a washbasin. He thinks the way his peers think, because to do otherwise would invite sure disaster and ostracization. In David Riesman's trems, he is excesively "other-directed." Whose fault is this? His, or the Corporations? Neither is wholly at fault, but both are guilty. The guilt of the Corporation lies in its lack of willingness to allow any man to act or think as an independent individual . . . if such an animal exists any more. The fault of the individual lies in his unwillingess to take part in society as a responsible, thinking man - he is so wrapped up in his selfish and elemental desires to lead what he pictures as the "good life" that he does not bother with the mind, and consequently the soul rots too.

Business is here to stay, and the businessman right along with it. But it is not fulfilling its role in the development of man as a being which creates and thinks. The human mind is used as a rote, subsidiary instrument which is useful only within prescribed limits. When the business world realizes that man is capable of doing great things by himself and of being more constructive when allowed to let his mind do the things it was supposed to do - think, create, and imagine — business will be fulfilling its obligations to mankind, and will be a great deal more than a line of tables in an empty room, a neon sign glowing on a wet night, a typewriter clicking away into the night - it will be a composite of individuals striving as individuals and as groups to better both the Corporation and the ways of man.

THE BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION SCHOOL

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

In the last concert of the Chapel Hill Concert Series, the English pianist Louis Kentner presented a recital that contained many flashes of beautiful piano playing, but little in the way of consistent and thorough interpretation. Whether these flashes justified an entire evening of listening is ultimately up to the individuals that attended the concert— for this reviewer they did not.

Mr. Kentner opened his program with two of the very difficult interpretative works for the piano, Mozart's Fantasia in C Minor, K. 475 and Beethoven E Major Sonata, Opus 109. The first work is curiously unMozartian with its loose form, ambiguous themes, and strangely rambling development. It is a work that would tax even the greatest of pianists because its interpretation does not present itself clearly from the score. That does not mean that a proper performance is impossible, but would suggest that in any performance of this work both the intellectual grasp and imagination of the pianist have to come to grips with the substance and focus of this work to an unusual extent. Mr. Kentner played the Fantasia with sensitivity and a piano tone that was masculine and properly dramatic. His feeling for the predominantly melancholy themes in the work was evident in his touch. But the piece as it came from his performance seemed to suffer from unnecessary fragmentation. Mr. Kentner seemed unable to fully comprehend the subtle bridge between the themes, and consequently we were left behind in one theme as he embarked upon an other or faced with making an almost bewildering jump from one mood of a theme to another. What would seem to be lacking here is a sense of unfolding that, unfortunately, Mr. Kentner was not able to convey in his performance.

The Beethoven sonata, too, was given a playing that was truly beautiful at individual times in tone and temperament. But those moments were, for this reviewer, too infrequent to convey fully the import of the movements' contents. In this particular piece of music, fragments were created by the pianist's inconsistent tempi (most evident in the variation of speed that was given to each thematic variation in the last movement) and unreliable phrasing which, at times, seemed to badly obscure line and rhythmic configuration. The second shortcoming seemed to result from the first: within the rather disorderly and fast tempi of the Vivace and Prestissimo movements that Mr. Kentner accepted, it would be difficult for any pianist to bring clarity to music that by its very nature is already difficult to comprehend. Nevertheless, an overall and steady tempo would have at least given the pianist the opportunity to develop within these two movements a greater sense of drive along fixed lines that, in this performance, was lacking, making Mr. Kentner's approach seem almost a bit tired. The last movement was started with what I thought the proper phrasing and feeling for the phrase, but again, as soon as the first variation appeared, Mr. Kentner radically changed mood, tempo, phrasing, and even articulation, and the continuity of music (so very necessary within the variation form for Beethoven in his late works) was lost. The form of this movement — a theme and variation — demands in one shape or another a consistency that Mr. Kentner did not provide to his interpretation, and thus, seriously damaged his performance.

Chopin's Two Ballades (G Minor, Opus 23; A Flat Major, Opus 7) received adequate if not particularly dazzling performances. I was impressed with Mr. Kentner's classically subdued approach to the first part of the first Ballade, but felt he sacrificed it to unnecessary confusion in the second part.

After intermission, the artist played Schumann's Arabesque, Opus 18 and Toccata Opus 7. These were followed by works of Liszt and Balakirew, all of them decadent compositions. An enthusiastic audience was rewarded by several encores.

However, when all is said and done, one cannot help but admire Mr. Kentner's persuasive playing in the few but immensely pleasing passages where he did seem to penetrate into the depths of Mozart and Beethoven. In those passages he showed himself to be an artist; I wish that could be said of his entire recital.

Next year's concert series was announced:

The Eglevski-Hayden Ballet Group; the Ralph Hunter Chorale; Clara May Turner, Mezzo-Soprano; and the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra under the baton of William Steinburg. Anton Kuerti will be the young piano soloist with the orchestra.

Bliss Conducts Course

Dr. Cecil H. Bliss of Sioux City, Iowa will be guest lecturer at the School of Dentistry March 6-7.

He will conduct the first day a postgraduate course on "Dental Practice and Management and its Analysis."

Among the topics to be covered in this series of lectures are a philosophy of practice, practice analysis, motivation factors involved in presenting dentistry, insurance, investments and retirement plans.

Dr. Bliss attended the State University of Iowa College of Dentistry and was later a member of the faculty of that school. He was a guest lecturer in practice administration at the University of Iowa from 1934 to 1957, and at the present time holds a similar position with the Dental School of the University of Texas.

The program for March 7 will consist of five lectures. The speakers and their subjects will be: Cass Johnson, Chapel Hill, "Getting the Most out of Your Insurance;" Frank Bozarth, Durham, "Astonishing Tax Savings Through Proper Estate Planning;" Dr. Ernest Craige, UNC School of Medicine, "Living With Your Heart;" Dr. Fredrick C. Wellman, Chapel Hill, "Should a Dentist Retire Completely;" and Carl Smith, Chapel Hill, "How About Your Investments, Doctor?"

Fraternity Honors Seawell

N. C. Att. Gen Malcolm Seawell was made an honorary member of Phi Alpha Delta law fraternity last weekend in Durham.

Seawell also gave the principal address at the fraternity's District Conclave Saturday night. Seawell spoke to the law students about their duty to uphold the law no matter how much they may disagree with court rulings.

Al Cleveland of UNC, student district justice, and Don Moore, district justice from Washington, D. C., presided at the initiation of Seawell into Carolina's Ruffin chapter of the law fraternity. Moore said during the initiation ceremony that Seawell has been outstanding in service to education and to the legal profession.

In addition to UNC, other Phi Alpha Delta chapters represented at the conclave included those in Maryland, the District of Columbia, Virginia, South Carolina and others in North Carolina.

Phil Logan of UNC served as Conclave coordinator. Luke Corbett was District Clerk at the sessions and Paul Sylvester was treasurer.

PIONEER IV TERMED 'SUCCESS'

Rocket Lunges On In Space

There was little early reaction from Russia. The Soviet News Agency Tass put out a one paragraph report on the American space probe launching. Moscow radio announced only the firing time without comment.

This was the fifth U. S. effort to shoot an instrumented payload to the vicinity of the moon or past it to orbit around the sun. Two of three Air Force tries were outright failures, while a third made it to a point 71,300 miles into space before falling back to disintegration in the earth's atmosphere. A previous army bid on Dec. 6 to send a probe toward the sun fell far short, reaching only 63,580 miles.

The weather was just about ideal for the midnight launching of Pioneer IV. Shortly after it blasted off in a four-stage Juno II rocket, scientists called the launching "as near perfect as could be determined."

The scientists' confidence was unabated with each successive progress report, although in one respect the space vehicel was not traveling according to plan.

Using a big radio telescope, scientists at Jodrell Bank in England reported the probe appeared to be on a course several degrees lower than planned. This later was confirmed by Dr. William H. Pickering, head of NASA's jet propulsion laboratory at Pasadena, Calif.

Thus, while it had been intended to send Pioneer within 10,000 to 20,000 miles of the moon, the prospects are it will come no closer than 35,000 miles. The Russians claim their Lunik came within 3,000 to 4,000 miles of the moon.

This is a pistol-shaped photoelectric sensor designed to determine whether later probes might take television pictures of the moon. Pickering said this device, triggered by the moon's light, would work only within 20,000 miles of the moon.

One sourse of satisfaction to the scientists was the rocket's performance. Previous failures have been blamed in part on the inability of the launching rocket to develop enough speed to break clear of the main grip of the earth's gravity.

However, the Juno rocket used last night roared to a speed of 24,890 miles an hour, a little less than intended but more than enough to do the trick. The main booster in the Juno is a Jupiter missile which generates about 150,000 pounds of thrust. Three other rocket stages provide added kick.

As the cone draws farther away into space, its speed diminishes. Pickering estimated it will have slowed to 3,500 miles an hour by the time it passes the moon, some 38 hours after launching.

NASA said data radioed from the cone indicated that shortly before noon the "de-spin" device went into operation. This virtually stopped the spinning motion introduced by the launching to stabilize the firing of 15 rockets in the upper stages.

Pickering said the cone is being trailed in space by the last to fire of the four rocket stages. That stage is about 4 feet long and 6 inches in diameter.

Writer Says Tourney Should Be Abolished

Editors Note: This is the conclusion of a series of two articles by Dick Barkley on the ACC tourney. Today: Possible Solutions.

By DICK BARKLEY

Random chats with players on conference teams show that the participants do not agree with the tournament's woeful probabilities. They seem somewhat like the many high school kids whose parents close educational institutions because some people had the misfortune to be born colored. They do not believe in what they are doing, but must obey their elders. Many of the boys, being from the North originally, give the impression that they think the South's Reconstruction which began nearly 100 years ago has not yet been realized —in the athletic phase as well as in other instances.

Conclusions which can be draw from these and other numerous inquiries are: (1) Most persons are against the real consequence of the tournament; (2) Most persons are not willing to do anythig to change the policy because the ACC needs the money; (3) Most persons would welcome a solution which would allow the tournament and yet not hurt the regular season champion in the process.

NO HELP IN SIGHT

There is no sign of alteration — or even modification — in all the double-talk. The only solution to the admitted necessary evil seems to be a Godsend, such as a Ford or Rockefeller to donate about $70,000 yearly to the ACC office.

Prospects for a Christmas tournamenmt, such as the SWC and Big Eight have, are dim .N. C. State's Dixie Classic holds the monopoly on this area's holiday events. But the profit of that huge success are not used for the upkeep of Greensboro's King Cotton Hotel suites (ACC offices) as are the proceeds of the March tournamet.

FAITH IN ECONOMICS

For the many people opposed to the tournament, only faith in the economic fortunes of the nation can be reserved. Promise abounds in a land where capitalism abides, and ways are continually being found to acquire more "loot." If and when the ACC discovers other means (such as letting two or three league football teams go to bowl games if their records merit it) to raise sufficient operating funds the principles of "fair play" will certainly doom the tournament. (But until then, the situation will remain as what was best summed up by a leading national sportscaster when he said, "The ACC Basketball tournament is strictly a money-making gimmick promoted by big-time operators who claim to be amatuer sponsors." While the affair is really not this bad — for financial need does lie in the facts — the orator was more correct than false.

Sometime Saturday afternoon, it may be fitting for the Coliseum blue-collar crew to make a few changes in the scenery before the final bonanza begins. It may be more proper to see a pirate's flag hanging from the rafters by around 10:00 p.m. And a funeral march instead of the usual National Anthem might be in better taste should we see, for example, a Clemson-Virginia championship match.

ANY TEAM CAN HAVE GOOD NIGHT

Every coach in the country knows that practically any team can have an exceptional shooting night (or even two straight) and knock off any team. And two wins might win the title since N. C. State cannot participate in the NCAA event because of unlawful recruiting methods. And certainly, Carolina and State are head and shoulders above the rest of the league. But, as the saying goes, "You can't win them all." But then, sometimes — in this area anyway — you don't have to. Three, or possibly two, are sufficient.

The majority of the responsible officials questioned agree that the tournament is not an honest way to select a champion. It is easy to see they are disturbed of the predicament they are in. And it is easy to see that no one wishes to do anything about it. Here, human nature shows its face again, as it is hard for those with bulging wallets to bite the hand which filled them. They fail to realize that the gratification of wealth is not in possession, but in knowing that it was acquired honestly.

Whatever else the men in charge of the tournamet do — or do not do — they certainly owe apology to every 15-year-old boy who is on the threshold of learning sportsmanship and right from wrong.

Larese, Moe, Shaffer Named To All ACC Team

CHARLOTTE — (AP) — Carolina and North Carolina State, the two top teams in the Atlantic Coast Conference, swept all first team positions on the All-ACC basketball team selected for The Associated Press by 36 conference area newsmen.

Sophomores Doug Moe and York Larese and junior Lee Shaffer of North Carolina, along with N. C. State's senior stalwarts, John Richter and Lou Pucillo, make up the top unit.

Richter and Pucillo, State's Philadelphia "Mutt and Jeff" combination, were named on every ballot. Richter, season-long ACC scoring and rebounding leader, scored a clean sweep of 36 first team votes for a maximum 180 points. Five were awarded for a first team vote and three for a second team spot. Pucillo was named on every ballot, but drew 31 first team votes and five for the second team for 170 points.

Coach Everett Case says the 6-8 Richter "is as good as any big man in the collegiate ranks." The 5-9 Pucillo, he says, is "the best little man in college basketball."

Larese was a strong third in the voting with 165 points, missing on only one ballot. Moe followed with 134 points and Shaffer had 121.

Coach Frank McGuire calls the play of the husky Moe, "truly sensational; his defensive work and passing have been outstanding. He also gets the points." Other McGuire comments:

"We knew that York Larese was a brilliant shot and he has shown it all season. He had a remarkable touch. He's the team's leading scorer and a fine competitor.

"Lee Shaffer found himself this year and has been one of our strongest players. He is fine under the basket and also a very good shooter who has come through for us many crucial times."

It's a versatile, high-scoring first team. It averages 6-4 in height and 197 pounds. Take away little Pucillo and the four others average 6-6 and 207.

Richter's scoring average is 16.7. Other marks of first stringers: Larese 15.7, Pucillo 14.8; Moe 13 and Shaffer 12.8.

Second team spots went to Howard Hurt and Carroll Youngkin of Duke; Charlie McNeil and Al Bunge of Maryland and Dave Budd of Wake Forest.

Carolina Carries Top Performance Chart Into Upcoming ACC Tourney

GREENSBORO — (AP) — Carolina carries the top performance chart into the Atlantic Coast Conference's championship basketball Thursday, but the Tar Heels' efficiency leadership of the conference is not as marked as it was before a couple of late-season setbacks.

Final regular-season figures released Tuesday by the ACC Service Bureau show that the Tar Heels continue to lead scoring at 72.0 points a game, field goal shooting at 43.6 per cent and average margin over the opposition 8.5 points a game.

But Virginia, winner of eight of its last 10 regular - season games, has now pulled to within .9 of a point a game of the Tar Heels in scoring. And N. C. State is a not-too-distant second to North Carolina in average margin over the opposition, having outscored its foes an average of 6.6 points per contest.

Other leaders going into the tournament are Maryland is defense against scoring 55.9 points a game given up, N. C. State in rebounding 43.9 recoveries a game, and Wake Forest in free throw accuracy 71.2 per cent.

Maryland, with just a single defensive performance in the tournament, could come out with an ACC record for defense. The Terps' average yield, despite a dozen losses, is just .2 of a point a game under the conference record it established in 1954. Maryland's closest rival in defense is N. C. State, which has given up 61 points a game.

Wake Forest ranks second to North Carolina in field goal accuracy, having hit 40.8 per cent for the season. Virginia is second to the Deacons in free throw accuracy at 70.8 per cent. South Carolina and North Carolina rank two-three in rebounding with respecive recovery NO. 1 DTH Carolina Carries Top.. averages of 45.8 and 45.1.

Maryland, though loser of 12 of 22 games, has outscored its opposition an average of 3.2 points a game. And Wake Forest and Virginia, though beaten 13 times each, have been outscored by their foes by an average of less than a point a game.

Carolina To Face Clemson Today At 4 In First Round Of Atlantic Coast Tourney

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Atlantic Coast Conference free-for-all opens this afternoon in Raleigh at 2 o'clock when Duke plays Wake Forest and the Tar Heels are the only team which stands to be a complete loser.

Coach Frank McGuire's team, seeded second in the tournament behind State, goes against Clemson at 4 in the second game of the afternoon double header. In the two regular season contests the Tar Heels eased by the Tigers 83-67 and 66-46.

The Carolina win over Duke Saturday gave the victors a 12-2 conference mark and an 18-3 overall record. Both State and Carolina had identical records to tie for the crown with Duke finishing third. In the drawings for the tournament State was seeded number one and the Tar Heels second.

All five of the Carolina starters finished up the season with double-figure averages. York Larese at 15.7 is the Tar Heel's leading scorer and fourth man in the conference behind John Richter, Carroll Youngkin, and Paul Adkins.

Following Larese are Doug Moe at 13.0, Lee Shaffer and Harvey Salz both over 12.0 and Dick Kepley at 10.5. As a team Carolina was the top offensive club in the league averaging an even 72 points through fourteen games.

Today's meeting between the Tar Heels and the Tigers will mark the third straight year that Carolina has met a Clemson team in the opening round of the ACC. A year ago it was this same Clemson club that almost eliminated the Heels in the first round. Carolina gained it out 62-51, but at the half it was Clemson by five points.

Bress Maravich' Clemson outfit ended up its ACC play with a 5-9 mark, the best they have ever had in the league. The main lack on the Tiger team is depth but despite this they play aggressive ball in every game.

The Clemson offense is led by George Krajack and Doug Hoffman. Both of these two finished the season with an 11 point or better average. Besides this pair other members of the Clemson squad counted on to see action are guards Dutch Shample and Bill Warren, center Walt Gibbons, and forward Don Carver.

The atmosphere surrounding the Tar Heel chances of winning the tourney and the NCAA right are clouded by the fear of losing all the marbles that have been gathered during the season in a couple of days. This is always the trouble with finishing first and then having to prove it once again. Since State is on probation and cannot go any further even if it should win, Carolina is going to face six other teams which are capable of playing good ball on any given occasion and would love to go to New York.

Regardless of the outcome of his team in the tourney, McGuire has said that the year has been most "satisfying" considering it was supposed to be a rebuilding season.

In the other action this evening State will meet South Carolina at 7 and Maryland will go against Virginia two hours later in what could be the best game of the tournament if both team want to play ball.

Carolina is supposed to be the favorite but proving it is another question that only one, two, or three games can answer.

Pro Musica Antiqua To Perform At Duke

The New York Pro Musica Antiqua, a performing group of singers and intrumentalist, will present a concert of early Spanish and Flemish music in the Duke University Woman's College Auditorium tonight at 8:15.

Films To Be Shown On Student Retreats

Glenn Johnson will show film strips of international student retreats over the world at tonight's World Understanding session at the Baptist Student Union center at 9 o'clock.

The program tonight is the fourth in a series of six to discuss problems of relations between United States and foreign students.

U. S. Policy Is Y Topic For Writer

Free lance writer Michael Harrington, the speaker for the spring Y conference this weekend, will discuss United States foreign policy Friday night in at 6:45 in the upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall.

Students unable to attend the conference have been invited to hear Harrington and talk with him at this supper meeting, which will also serve as a kick-off session for the conference.

Those wishing to dine in Lenoir Hall should be present at 6 p.m.

This appearance marks Harrington's third visit to the UNC campus. He formerly appeared during the 1958 Carolina Symposium and was speaker for summer Y night last year.

This spring's Y conference, the theme of which is "The World . . . Policy and Perspective," will begin Saturday afternoon rather than Friday, to enable more students to attend the weekend affair. The group will leave for Bricks, from the University YMCA at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Students not yet registered have been urged to do so immediately in the YMCA office.

Scholarships Won By 20 Prep Grads

The first year that Morehead Scholarships were made available to a larger number of preparatory schools, 20 of the 22 preparatory school finalists received a scholarship.

When the scholarships for 1959 were presented last Saturday, 47 of the 64 finalists received the award, the largest number of recipients in the history of the scholarship.

The scholarships this year went to 24 graduating seniors in North Carolina public schools, to 20 preparatory school seniors and to three graduates of North Carolina junior colleges.

According to Roy Armstrong executive secretary of the Morehead Foundation, this year's applicants were unusually outstanding, making the final selection by the Central Committee very difficult.

Each scholarship is worth $1,250 a year, or $5000 for four years—covering all college expenses, plus spending money.

Legislature To Face Jury Bill

The abolition of permanent jurors in trials concerning Honor Code violations will be the major item considered by the Student Legislature in its meeting tonight.

Permanent jurors have been a fixture on campus since the jury system was inaugurated last spring. The original intent was to provide some experience on each jury deciding fact in cases under the Honor Code. It was hoped that permanent jurors could be dispensed with after a year or so The bill was introduced by Bill Porter (SP).

Norman B. Smith's (SP) bill would establish a committee to study the pay, employment, and working time of several classes of university employees. The bill was introduced with the intention of aiding the administration in small economy measures in the face of a small budget.

Another bill introduced by Norman B. Smith and Bob Pierce would declare the support of the Student Legislature for the original budget requests of Chancellor Aycock and President Friday.

Rear Admiral Will Discuss Fleet Supply

New developments in the fleet supply system will be discussed in a talk by Rear Admiral Hugh C. Haynsworth Jr. of the U. S. Navy today at noon in Carroll Hall.

The speech is designed for members of the local NROTC Battalion Division, but other interested persons may attend.

The Admiral's address will probably point up the problem of global supply support of the various U. S. fleets from mobile service support forces.

Several recent innovations have been accepted as improvements in the complex system of getting there "first with the most." These innovations include the installment of electronic accounting machines aboard ships of the support force and the incorporation of carriers and helicopters in furnishing necessary support.

Rear Admiral Haynsworth is currently the commanding officer of the Naval Supply Center in Norfolk, Va. This Norfolk center is the largest supply support command in the Navy.

A graduate of the Naval Academy, Haynsworth has previously served as fleet and force supply officer with the U. S. Atlantic fleet and assistant chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts for Supply Management.

Roger Williams Plays Sun. In Memorial Hall

The Roger Williams concert Sunday night will be at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Because of the large number of students expected, townspeople will not be sold tickets until 7:45. Students will be admitted free on admission of Identification Cards.

The Williams concert is the final program on this year's Student Entertainment Series. Other artists brought here by the student group were George Melachrino and his orchestra and the Roger Wagner Chorale.

Williams' program has not been released, but he is expected to perform popular and standard compositions, as his well known version of "Autumn Leaves."

The concert will be primarily a solo performance, but Williams will be accompanied on certain selections by a pair of guitars and bass.

Another "instrument" to be used during the concert is his small piano, "Sebastian." This piano plays without a hand touching it and it "talks" by means of flashing lights and musical sounds.

Williams designed the piano himself, but will not tell how it works. His plans for the small piano probably came from his engineering training which he got in college. Although he majored in engineering at Drake University in Des Moines, his later fame has been in the fine arts profession.

Board Stands Firm On Request

Student Union Would Remain Budget Item

"We've made our request, and we're standing on it," J. Harris Purks, chairman of the Board of Higher Education said Wednesday.

Purks said this in connection with the UNC request for $13,370,636 which was slashed by the Advisory Budget Commission to $6,039,800.

For students at the University, Purks' stand means that the Board is standing for inclusion of a student union as one of the items for the next biennium.

Purks announced that the Board of Higher Education would hold an open meeting in Raleigh March 11 to discuss the budget and transact normal business.

Neither Chancellor William Aycock nor President William Friday could be reached to ascertain whether they will be present at the meeting.

Postponed was a meeting scheduled for Friday in which University officials were going to give their views in the capital improvements budget to the Board.

Both Aycock and Friday, along with several other University dignitaries will appear before the joint appropriations committee in Raleigh March 18 to discuss the entire Consolidated University budget.

Among the items cut by the Advisory Budget Commission from the original University request which was improved in its entirety by the Board of Higher Education were:

1) In the area of reconstructions, renovations and minor additions, a request for $322,000 for the Physics Building supplement was slashed to $210,000 by the Commission; and $44,000 requested for Saunders Hall was cut to $18,000. The $240,000 for chemistry laboratories in Venable was left unchanged by the Commission.

2) Of money asked for major additions, a $500,000 request for an addition to Swain Hall was reduced to $425,000. The $435,836 requested for an addition to Hill Hall was changed by the Commission to $485,000.

3) In the area of new construction, $1,063,000 requested for a geology and geography building became $750,000; $1,470,000 requested for a new botany building was cut to $750,000; and a request for a new $876,000 foreign languages building was reduced to $750,000. Requests for a new student union were cut entirely.

On The Ball

Campus Chest Drive Far Short Of Goal

With three days officially remaining in this year's Campus Chest drive, Campus Chest Chairman Doug Kellam urged students Wednesday to make as generous contributions as possible.

Miss Kellam said, "The drive at this point has not been as successful as the Campus Chest Board had expected."

Early in the week, only $400 had been contributed to the goal of $3,000. Solicitors in dorms and for faculty are working toward reaching the goal before the end of the drive on Saturday.

The average donation from each student was listed as $1, Miss Kellam said. This amount was suggested because the Board believed "We at Carolina are so very fortunate that we will be helped by the drive," she said.

The annual Campus Chest drive is the only campus-wide solitication allowed at UNC. Included in the budget this year are the World University Service, the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program and the Orange County Class for Mentally Retarded Children.

"In urging students to contribute to the Campus Chest, Miss Kellam said, "At times we tend to be very self-satisfied with what we have on our own campus and do not take the time to look into other areas."

"I feel that is people are educated properly about the drive and the agencies which will be helped that they will be willing to sacrifice a little to help these students in other areas."

The three agencies being benefited by the Campus Chest give aid to foreign students, Carolina and German students (in an exchange program) and mentally retarded children of this county.

Alpha Gamma Delta To Aid Palsy Victims

Alpha Gamma Delta sorority will be selling home cooked food today from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Electric Construction Company, located on Franklin Street next to Milton's.

Proceeds from the food sale will be donated to benefit cerebral palsy victims.

Goldsmith Is Gray's Choice For Manager

Al Goldsmith, University Party candidate for president of the student body last year, is the campaign manager for UP's presidential candidate this spring, Charlie Gray.

Gray said Wednesday that Goldsmith would coordinate his campaign activities. Other members of Gray's campaign committee will be announced later.

"I'm sure he will conduct a campaign that will compare with the best in Carolina history," Gray said about Goldsmith. Gray referred Goldsmith's ability as gained from student government activities such as treasurer and chairman of the Carolina Symposium and floor leader in Student Legislature. Goldsmith is also a member of Phi Eta Sigma, Phi Beta Kappa, the Order of the Grail and Order of the Old Well.

Goldsmith said Wednesday he accepted the position of campaign manager for Gray because "I feel that he has the talent, experience and ability to make the best student body president the University has ever had.

"There has been a crying need over the past years for a president who can lead student government forward without leaning toward radicalism or losing touch with reality. Too often there has been more concern with activities in Little Rock and NSA headquarters than with problems right here on the Carolina campus."

GM Activities Board Needs Chairman

Would you like to be a chairman — or a member — of a Graham Memorial Activities Board committee?

If so, you may obtain your application blank from the GMAB office or the information office of Graham Memorial.

The chairmen will be selected by the director of Graham Memorial, Howard Henry; GMAB president Bob Carter; and the new president of GMAB, Angus Duff.

The out-going chairmen will work with the newly-elected ones for a period of one month to orientate them and help them plan next year's programs.

Committees for next year are calendar, current affairs, drama, film, house, music, social, personnel, tournament, star series and publicity.

SP Nominees Meet In Graham Today

All persons who have received either nominations or endorsements from the Student Party for the spring elections are requested to meet in Roland Parker I in Graham Memorial today between 2 and 5 p.m.

The purpose of the meeting, according to SP campaign coordinator Bob Nobles, is to plan campaign literature.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

TEPEES MAY BE NEXT

Pembroke Houses Students In Log Cabins And Attics

By WILLIAM WRIGHT

RALEIGH, — (AP) — An economy-minded college president, who won legislative bravos this week for writing his speech on scratch paper, says a state college campus is going begging for students.

While other state-supported institutions of higher learning scramble to stretch facilities for swelling enrollment, Dr. Walter J. Gale says Pembroke State College is more than two-thirds empty.

Gale told the legislature's Joint Appropriations Committee Tuesday that Pembroke, hard by the South Carolina line in Roberson County, could handle 1,200 to 1,400 students — if it only had a place for them to sleep. The college's enrollment is just over 400.

The college has dormitories for only 32 students, and, Gale reported, "in my opinion they should be closed up." Twelve women students share a single shower and lavatory, he said.

"We have students living off campus in everything except tepees," said Gale. Some live in log cabins. One college trustee houses 2 students in his attic.

Pembroke has 16 major buildings on a 35-acre campus. Gale said, "why, we have more individual music practice rooms than we have music majors."

He asked for an appropriation of $800,000 for four dormitories, but the Advisory Budget Commission turned him down. He asked for $581,611 for operating expenses for the coming biennium and set a record among state colleges and universities by coming within $300 of getting it all.

Gale said the trouble with Pembroke is that no one has decided whether it should be a "commuter's college" or a regional center of higher education. Even as a day school, he indicated, there is no place in the area for more students to live. Enrollment has shot up 300 per cent in two years.

The appropriations committee may yet restore Gale's permanent improvements request for new dorm space. At the end of a dreary day of money requests, Gale supplied one of the few laughs for the committee.

Instead of lugging along a portfolio of statistics and graphs, he said, "I have no briefs, no charts. It may shock you, but I have no complaints. I am a happy man. However, I may apply to some of these other gentlemen (heads of three other colleges) for some of these assistant deanships floating around."

Prestige

In a letter to The Daily Tar Heel two days ago, Dr. John J. Honigmann, professor of anthropology, cited A. Whitney Griswold's speech on athletic scholarships and used it as a text for pointing out that the University here and education in general needs a re-examination of its values before the monetary appropriations will do any real good.

He pointed out that this reexamination is more important in many ways that the question of whether the University will win money from "donors or legislators".

A similar tack is taken by a Big Ten school representative writing in this week's issue of the Saturday Evening Post when he asks whether the colleges of the United States are being turned into playgrounds. In a sense, playpens would be more appropriate.

Not too many weeks ago, the Baptist Student Union held a discussion on campus values, and one of the major questions that was brought out in the discussion was the question of the criteria for prestige on this campus.

It is unfortunate that the criteria are so low. As Dr. Honigmann pointed out one of these criteria is athletic prowess, and this can easily be ascertained when one sees how many students listen to the ball game and how many attend a budget meeting or a humanities lecture.

Having a friendly personality is another criteria for prestige, while in the male group being able to tell the tallest story about what one did with what girls on the weekend is also an important prestige factor. It is the girl who has the sweetest smile or who can keep up the best conversation, no matter how inane, that wins the plaudits of her peers.

It is the student leader who can best mouth the platitudes that all candidates are supposed to say that will win the votes, although in rare occasions this rule of thumb does not work.

It is the party that takes precedence over the class or the library. It is the gymnasium that takes precedence over the books, the classrom building, or even a student union. It is the Tempo Room or the Rathskellar that takes the place of the discussion table or debate floor, and it is the movie that takes the place of thought.

Before the editor gets accused by some candidate running for election as being opposed to liquor, sex, athletics, social activities, and entertainment, it must be said that each of these have a place in University life, but all are subordinate to the pursuit of knowledge.

In other words there needs to be a reorientation of people to different goals. One of the present goals to be shattered is the vocation. Another is enjoyment. Another is escape. All of these at some time or another are to be counted in, but none of these can be considered a substitute for work in the primary areas of college life — the academic areas.

Not too long ago, two to three years at the most, a University official stood before a group at an orientation meeting and said that he felt that not more than half the student's waking hours should be spent in pursuit of knowledge in a vigorous academic sense, and perhaps this has validity in that there are many other intellectual outlets on campus and within the University community. Taken in its context, however, this statement was almost an incitement to riot, and riot in a minor form is what students have done.

Unless the solid academic undercoating of the University is reemphasized, the University will be far from a community of individuals committed to the pursuit of truth. Unless the attainment of knowledge is the prestige factor in this University, it will be extremely difficult for it to justify its own existence.

Vocational factories are a dime a dozen. Athletic prowess can be had comparatively cheaply. But an academic reputation is hard to attain and even harder to keep.

In whatever future planning the University might want to do, it might keep these goals in mind with the added footnote that largeness may very well make the solution more difficult.

Moliere Play Style: Epic Realism

Russell B. Graves

(Dr. Russell B. Graves is a visiting member of the faculty of the Department of Dramatic Arts. He directed the Playmaker production of "The Would-Be Gentleman" in a style strange to the sensibilities of most members of his audience. In the following article he discusses his intention.)

A number of members of the audience at the recent Playmaker's production of The Would-Be Gentlemen expressed curiosity about the style of production employed. Questions about the songs, the projections the setting, the style of acting, costuming, and make-up have been asked. It is in order to clarify some of there issues that this article has been prepared.

There are several possible approaches to the production in the modern theatre of a great classic from the past. we can attempt to recreate, in so far as possible, the original .production; or we can "stylize" (weasel word!) our production; or we can bring the whole thing up-to-date, going under the assumption that once bright ideas and theatrical devices have lost some of their sheep and that it is up to us to refurbuish them for the modern audience.

For our production of The Would-Be Gentleman we selected a fourth alternative: we assumed the validity of Moliere's insights for our own time and place (otherwise why do the play at all!), and further we assumed a particular theoretical approach to realism in the theatre. The approach we selected was that of Bertolt Brecht's epic realism (or epic theatre or narrative realism). The selection of this particular approach to production grew out of our study of the organic nature of Moliere's play; we particularly wanted to avoid the imposition of a mode upon a piece for which that mode was not appropriate.

Briefly stated, Brecht maintained that the theatre can best speak to its audience when it does precisely that. He rejected the hypnotic effect sought through the modern technique of empathy, and turned instead to his conception of the sources of Greek, Elizabethan, and Oriental theatrical effectiveness.

Basic to his conception of epic realism were two dicta of particular significance for this production: first, the theatre is most realistic when it acknowledges that it is a theatre and when the audience is encouraged to participate in the performance as a rational entity rather than as a group of hypnotized individuals; second, drama functions most successfully when it takes as its point of departure some attitude toward man as a social being.

Let's take up the second point first. In re-reading Moliere's play many times, and in going through the process of translating it anew, we discovered that it was not quite the epitome of happy delight the text-books say it is. Underlying the surface charm of the play is a hard-core of socio-economic reality. In The Would-Be Gentleman man is not a political animal as much as he is an economic one. Every character in the play demonstrates some facet of the corrosive effect of great inequality in the distribution of wealth. This is the theme we selected as our point-of-departure for this production. Note particularly the emphasis on the economic inequalities represented by the kowtowing demanded by Mr. Jourdain of his various mentors; note the patches on the teachers' clothes; note the bitter economic cynicism of the lyrics of the songs. These, it seems to us, are consistent with the play handed on to us by Moliere; not ideas imposed upon it by hindsight.

Now for our first point — the assumption that the only ultimate reality of the theatre is the reality of the audience confronted by actors in an auditorium Epic eschews completely the idea of empathy growing out of Aristotle's theory of catharsis. In its stead, it substitutes the principle of alientation—the putting of the audience at some emotional distance from the actors. Rather than calling for a high degree of identification of the listener with the actor, it asks him to sit back and observe, as a medical student might observe an operation in the hospital amphiteatre.

In the Playmaker production we used many devices to assist the audience to establish this particular relationship with the actor—the relationship of objective contemplation rather than emotional identification. Among them were: the delivery of speeches to the audience in the character of the actor playing the part rather than in the character of Mr. Jourdain or the Dancing Master or Nicole; the interruption of the proceedings by songs, which served as interpolations which commented upon the play rather than as extensions of the emotion embodied within the scene; the calling upon the actors to perform at their own chronological age rather than to feign the supposed age of the characters; the elimination of wigs; the introduction of slides, which called attention of the audience to the point of the scene; the use of highly artifical methods of shifting scenery; etc.

Many other elements were used to force upon the audience an acknowledgement that they were indeed in the theatre and not in seventeenth century France. At every point the measuring rod against which we evaluated our solutions to various technical problems was that of frank acknowledgement that this was a theatrical production and not a dream of some kind. We pointed up Mr. Jourdain's pretensions through the use of fanfares . . . but we allowed all the scratch on the original recording to be heard to disabuse the audience of any idea of magical trumpeters lurking in the flies. We used electric lights, of course, but we let the audience see the instruments providing the illumination in order to avoid any suggestion that they were some kind of magical effulgence from heaven, And we used clear white light to show that our costumes were costumes; our actors, college students; and to avoid any sense of surprise-pink miraculousness.

The extent to which we succeeded inma king our social points is certainly problematical, but these are the ways in which we attempted to make them. It has been rewarding for us to make the attempt . . . more rewarding we feel than the museum-like recreation of a past era or the simpering coyness of a sophomorically "stylized" production.

A Frightening Far Future Forecast By Frank

March Wind

Last week, you may remember, I suggested that UNC students build a small blast furnace. I thought that this was one very practical way that we could learn what is going on behind the Bamboo Curtain which encloses Communist China. This was a kind of a cute idea, but unfortunately the gremlins who infest our print shop garbled the whole piece so that it was almost incomprehensible. Well, as Mort Sahl says: "Onward! Right?"

This week I propose to discuss a novel from the latest issue of Good Housekeeping magazine. I don't, as a rule, read this category of periodical. However, the work in question, Pat Frank's "Alas, Babylon!" is just too good to pass by.

The intriguing title comes from an old Negro preacher who always climaxed his denunciations of sin with the shout: "Alas, Babylon!" You can imagine then the protagonist's shock when he receives a telegram from his brother, a colonel in the Strategic Air Command, informing him that the colonel's wife and children are coming to pay a little visit. The telegram ends: "Alas, Babylon!" The protagonist is thus tipped off that World War III is really coming, the balloon is really going up.

Pat Frank is no literary stylist. Indeed, his "style" if it can be called that is positively pulpy. The great merit of his book is that it makes World War III absolutely credible. This is precisely the way it can (and probably will) happen. And unlike previous novels on this subject, notably Nevil Shute's "On the Beach," Pat Frank does not exaggerate. World War III does not bring an end to all life everywhere. Life goes on, even in the United States and Russia, where isolated little enclaves survive.

The Russian plan is what the military calls a "TOT" — time-on-target — on a world-wide scale. "They'll use only missiles in the first wave. They plan to kill every base in Europe, the U.K. and Africa with their IRs. They plan to kill every base on this continent with their ICs, plus missiles, launched from subs. Then they use their jet bombers to mop up."

The protagonist then asks: "Can they get away with it?"

The colonel, his brother, answers: "Three years ago, they couldn't. Three years hence, when we have our own ICBM batteries emplaced, a big fleet of missile-toting subs, and Nike-Zeus and some other stuff perfected, they couldn't. But right now, we're in what we call 'the gap.' Theoretically, they think they can do it. I'm pretty sure they can't. But that's not the point. Point is, if they think they can get away with it, then we have lost. The only way to win a modern war is not fight one. Our whole raison d'etre was deterrent force. When we don't deter them any longer, we lose.'

This is about as clear an explication of the contemporary military situation as it is possible to get. There is considerable evidence that the so-called "missile gap" is at least as much the result of brilliant Russian planning and determination as it is our own lazy carelessness. It is entirely possible, in other word, that ten years ago the Russians made a conscious decision to "peak" their military program right now, knowing full well at the time that a projection of easily visible trends would catch America in "the gap."

Seen in this light, the ticking Russian bomb labelled "Berlin" takes on a new and sinister meaning. The Russians know as well as we do that the cold war cannot continue indefinitely. Sooner or later, it must degenerate either into hot war or cold peace. What better time than right now for the Russians to drive for a showdown?

Well, this is the way that Pat Frank sees it. And this is the way that hip Americans like Acheson and Kennan see it. The feeling is growing that this time the Russians are not kidding. This time it's either deal or fight.

In Frank's book, there is no deal. The fight takes place. The ostensible "cause" is a young American ensign who is chasing down a "bogey" that had been shadowing his carrier in the eastern Mediterranean. The eager ensign goes a shade too far — he violates the territorial waters of Syria — and when he finally lets go with a rocket the dammed thing misfires, blowing up a mainland train instead of the "bogey." Back at SAC headquarters in Nebraska, the A-2 says: "Worst foul-up on record. Glad it's the Navy, not us."

As it turns out, the ensign's little goof really had nothing to d with "causing" the war. The Russians were already far advanced on their countdown. The Russian subs were within a day's run of all coastal cities and targets; the missiles were emplaced and calibrated.

Along the eastern seaboard, the attack takes place at "first light." The protagonist wakes up, rushes outside, and "his senses refused to accept a sun rising and a sun setting."

The colonel's ten-year old son, wise and tough in the way that only ten-year olds have, asks casually: "What do you think they clobbered." This precocious kid knows immediately of course that his dad, back in "the hole" at Offutt, has been hit by at least "three five-meg ICs," and is therefore vaporized.

of the social chaos that will follow a thermonuclear strike, Frank touches on this point, but he low-rates it. He shows the social fabric of American society stretched to the breaking point, but still intact, following the thermonuclear Pearl Harbor which has taken perhaps 125 million American lives. I regard this as wild optomism. In real life, the fabric of American society would be dissolved and the few survivors would like on by the code of the jungle.

Is this what the future has in store? Frank's Negro preacher seemed to think so.

"And I'm tell you right now, If there is a technical flaw in Frank's book, it lies in what I regard as his great under-estimation all wife swappers, whisky drinkers, and crapshooters are going to get it! And all them that come out of sin palaces on the beach, wearing minks and jewels and not much else, they is going to get it! And them fast steppers in yaller roadsters, they is going to get it! For it says in The Book that great city that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, that great city was burned off the face of the earth in an hour, One hour! Alas, Babylon!"

Oh yes, preacher man. We dig you bringing the word.

"Look — Thinks Are Picking Up"

Letters

Editor:

"Practice what you preach." —An old saying but an appropiate one.

I quote from your editorial of March 3, 1959:

". . . how you as a student spend your money is something that is a purely personal decision, and not something that somebody else can say how you ought to do it."

Yet the title of your editorial is "DON'T CONTRIBUTE". That sounds like an order. Aren't you dictating to the students how they ought not to spend their money? Have you any more right to decide for the students than has the Campus Chest?

Moreover, the pleas of Campus Chest collectors will be: "Would you like to contribute . . ."; not "DO CONTRIBUTE." Contributions will be voluntary. No one will order a student to contribute.

If your implications of discrimination against the Negro are true, why weren't the Gottingen Exchange Scholarships dropped this year? Surely the Editor recalls an item in last week's DTH announcing the award of a Gottingen Exchange Scholarship to a Negro. Perhaps the Campus Chest feels that the school for retarded children in our own Orange County is a more needy organization than last year's scholarship program. Perhaps the Chest feels that this item will bring more student awareness to the fact that there are needy persons and organizations in this world. In short, perhaps the Campus Chest is not the "money-grubbling," glory-seeking organization that you picture it to be.

You are right in one thing. The charities are worthy ones. This year's goal is high. Only co-operation from all the members of our University Community can assure its attainment. I urge that co-operation.

T. BUIE COSTEN

Editor:

As a member of the Campus Chest Board, I feel compelled to answer your searing accusations in this morning's Tar Heel concerning our work. This answer is purely personal and is no way a part of the board's action; but as a member of the board I feel qualified, even more so than you, to explain our work and purposes.

First of all you claim that it is "presumptuous" of the organization to select the charities to be given to. I say not at all. If you will kindly look at the organization of similiar charity drives in the various cities surrounding us, you will see that in almost every case there is some board which must determine which charities to give to and how much to give to each one. It would be impossible to function without some such method. There are thousands of worthy organizations in need of money, and it is impossible to give to all of them. The line must be drawn somewhere; and it must be drawn by people who have carefully studied the situation looked into the needs of each charity, and finally determined which of the charities are the most worthy and in the most need. These higher boards also determine the percentage of money to be given to each charity on the basis of a simillar study. Without such a method the drive would result in complete chaos with hundreds of organizations appealing to a bewildered public. Someone has to do the choosing. Just as higher boards are organized for such a purpose in municipalities, so the Campus Chest Board has been organized and approved by the legislature for that purpose in our college community.

Furthermore, Mr. Gans, I cannot help but believe that your editorial appeared against the Campus Chest solely because we did not incorporate the National Negro Scholarship fund into our program. I happen to know that you offered us good editorials if we would make it a part of our program. Denouncing us as you have simply because we failed to consider your own special wishes in conrast to our feelings after thoroughly studying the matter is, I believe, an act of exceedingly poor sportsmanship on your part. Proceeding along that same line, I should like to clarify the board's action on the matter. As you stated in your editorial the World University Service, which helps students all over the world, and the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship, which provides for an exchange of students between the University and Germany, are an annual part of our program. I will not go into the reasons for this since you seem to have no quarrel about it. There are usually three organizations supported by the Campus Chest, and the third varies each year. This year the home for the mentally retarded children was considered by the board to be the most worthy of a number of organizations considered including the National Negro Scholarship fund. First of all, let me point out that in choosing the mentally retarded children's home to sponsor we have in no way discriminated against the Negro. Help to the Negro student is given by both the World University Service and the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship, neither of which are discriminatory organizations. Just because the Negro has not been included in our third project does not mean that he has been left out. Secondly, it was believed by the board that since the National Negro Scholarship fund is supported by many other organizations and the children's home by none, the children's home is far more needing of our help. You yourself have recently filled up a great deal of space concerning our budget disappointment. Well, this schools' budget has been disappointing for a number of years, so disappointing, in fact, that fourteen year old children have mastered pre-primary readers not because they can read them but because they have memorized them after several years of studying the same books because there are no funds to buy new texts. I can see no room for complaint in our choosing to help this organization which is sponsored by no other group and which is every bit as worthy, if not more so, as the National Negro Scholarship fund. Thirdly, let us look at it from a local standpoint. This home is right here in Orange County, and its neediness is worthy of our consideration as inhabitants of Orange County. The other two organizations sponsored are more on the international plane as is the National Negro Scholarship fund. Even though any of these may touch us here at Carolina, as the Goettingen very definitely does, they are still more far reaching than just at this university. Therefore, why not be concerned with an organization that is right here within reach and deserving of our attention? After all it is better to clean up your own back yard before you go meddling around your neighbor's.

UNC Student Convicted In Court

By JOHN HUBBARD

Jim Shuler, U.N.C. football player, was convicted of assault in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Tuesday. Richard Porter, a senior medical student at the University and co-defendant in the case, was found guilty of trespass.

Shuler was found guilty of assault on Paul M. Pinto, a U.N.C. student. The assault charge grew out of an incident which occurred on the night of August 22nd at Pinto's apartment. Shuler was found not guilty of forcible entry and trespass.

The defendants were fined $20 and court costs by Judge S. L. Stewart.

ACC Winner Faces Navy

RALEIGH — (AP) — The Atlantic Coast Conference representative in the opening round of the NCAA Eastern regional basketball championship will play Navy next Tuesday at Madison Square Garden in New York.

The three-day tournament opening here today will determine the ACC champion and tournament representative at New York. Top-seeded North Carolina State, under CAA probation, is ineligible for the national meet and the runnerup will get the bid if State wins here.

Games In New York

Three games will be played in New York Tuesday night, with the winners joining St. Joseph's of Philadelphia in the Eastern finals at Charlotte March 13-14.

The Yankee Conference champion and an at-large team still to be selected will meet in the first game at New York. Connecticut can clinch the Yankee title by beating Rhode Island Wednesday night.

Navy Meets ACC Team

Navy and the ACC standard bearer will play the second game. Navy has a 16-5 record, losing to Duke 64-63 and edging Maryland 53-50.

The third game matches Southern Conference champion West Virginia and the Ivy League champion. Princeton and Dartmouth, tied for the Ivy lead, close their regular season Wednesday. Princeton is at Penn and Brown is at Dartmouth. If the rivals remain tied a playoff will be held Saturday night at Yale's gym. Princeton gained the tie by whipping Dartmouth 83-67 last Friday. The teams have 13-1 Ivy records.

Khrushchev Eases Away From May 27 German Deadline; Gives West Dark Warning

Whoever Uses His Elbow Will Break It

LEIPZIG, East Germany — UP — Premier Khrushchev eased away from his May 27 deadline on Berlin in a free-wheeling talk yesterday and offered lightly to sign a Western-drafted German peace treaty.

He punctuated that with another warning to the West:

"Whoever bumps us with his elbow will break it."

The Sovie leader took the floor in high good humor after drinking a series of toasts to peace and trade—in white wine, cognac and red wine—at an impromptu luncheon given by Leipzig's mayor.

He said his deadline for an end to the four-power occupation of Berlin might be postponed, if the West will negotiate sensibly, until June 27 or maybe July 27.

"We are in no hurry," he added and, for what it was worth, tossed in an old Russian saying:

"Never count your chickens until fail."

At the same time he reiterated that the Soviet Union will sign a separate peace treaty with Communist East Germany, an eager potential heir to Soviet occupation controls, if the West refuses to sign an all-German treaty. His government has proposed that foeign ministers meet next month to consider the Berlin issue and a German peace treaty.

In light-hearted banter with three British parliamentarians in town for Leipzig's spring trade fair, Khrushchev remarked with a smile:

That drew the biggest laugh of the day.

"Write out a peace treaty and we'll sign it," Khrushchev jokingly told the Britons, conservative Burnabi Drayson and laborites Ian Mikardo and Arthur Lewis.

That did not mean, of course, that he would sign anything he disagreed with. Despite his amiability, he indicated no real concesaions.

There was a hint of apology in another remark:

"I haven't said anything new, but repetition is the mother of wisdom."

He added a new point: the Soviet Union will not turn over to East Germany the control of the Western world's military lifelines to West Berlin unless it signs a separate treaty with the East Germans first.

What he did not say was that such a treaty could be signed at any time. The East German communists are clamoring for it in the hope it would give their regime greater status in the eyes of the world.

West Berlin is isolated 110 miles inside East Germany. Last Nov. 27 Khrushchev threatened to let the East Germans take over the road, rail and air routes into the city unless he got an agreement in six months for his plan to convert West Berlin into a demilitarized free city.

The United States, Britain and France and allied West Germany made it plain they intended to stand fast. They still look on the East German regime as a Soviet front. They do not recognize it as a government.

DAVE BRUBECK
. . . gives his definition of jazz

Brubeck Defines Jazz; Appears Here Today

"I define jazz as an improvised music based on European harmony and African rhythms," say Dave Brubeck, pianist, composer, teacher, and star of the 'Lost Weekend' concert this afternoon.

Brubeck stands as an authority on the subject, recognized around the world as one of the greatest modern jazz musicians.

Tickets for the concert will be available at the door of Memorial Hall immediately preceeding his 3-5 p.m. concert for $2.50, stag or drag. The tickets are good for the Lost Weekend Dance at Woollen Gym tonight from 8-12 p.m.

Brubeck opened college as a field for modern jazz in a personal college circuit in 1953. "It's better in every way for us to go to the students, and play in their own schools under concert conditions," he said. "What's more, we feel as though we're really doing something to help the students learn about the jazz heritage which is theirs to enjoy."

The bespectacled jazzman was playing a great range of music by the time he was five, and at 13 he played a wide variety of music for dance bands. After discharge from the army he organized "The Big 8" and became a national figure on NBC-TV.

In the past two years Brubeck has appeared all around the globe. Last year he embarked on a State Department tour of Europe, followed by a trip to Asia on the President's special Cultural Exchange Program.

The versatile Brubeck, with about two dozen record albums on the pop market, appeals to all age groups.

Phi Backs Government Subsidies

The Phi Society voted confidence in government policies of subsidies for industry and agriculture in its meeting Tuesday night.

The members of the society resoundingly defeated a resolution that the United States reassert the principles of capitalism by gradually abolishing subsidies for industry and agriculture, penalties for success, and other hindrances of free enterprise.

The meeting was attended by members of the Chapel Hill High School Debate Squad and their coach. Members of the Debate Team asked questions of speakers and remaining afterwards for informal discussion.

In introducing the bill of the evening, Rep. David Matthews denounced the movement of the U. S. government toward socialism through subsidy programs for private enterprise. He cited the Soviet Union as an example of what happens when there is "inequitable" distribution of income, attributing its spectacular gains to its lack of penalties for success, such as the graduated income tax.

Rep. Bill Jackson scored the advocates of "old guard Republicism" and their "outworn" theories. Rep. Stan Black listed three primary aims of government; satisfying national defense needs, maintaining relatively full employment and smoothing out the business cycle. He said subsidies and the graduated income tax were in line with these stated policies.

The farm problem was laid at the feet of the farmers by Rep. Glenn Johnson, who said the private producer should stand or fail by himself. Rep. Ron Pruitt pointed out the tariff as a form of subsidy blocking free trade which should be eliminated.

In the voting, the bill went down to defeat in a vote of both the members of the Phi and of all those present in the hall.

Critic Glen Johnson declared Stan Black Speaker of the Evening for his logical presentation.

It was announced that next week's bill will be for the unification of the United States and Canada into a single nation.

Kemp Goofed; Didn't Know About Brubeck

By KEN WHEELER

Kemp goofed. It might have been the first time, but he really goofed. He failed to know a star will be here.

The Daily Tar Heel discovered the fact when a reporter was dispatched to Kemp's record cubbyhole to investigate the background of one Dave Brubeck, appearing this afternoon in Memorial Auditorium.

Tar Heel staffers agree that it markes the first time that the music pedagogue of the campus failed to dig out the albums of a coming performer and plaster the walks of UNC with advertising material.

Whatever the reason, Brubeck will be here and Kemp will, for sure, utilize these last few hours before the jazzman's appearance to move those jazz albums.

University Day, Carnival Coincide

In conjunction with Consolidated University Day, the N. C. State College Union Social Committee will sponsor Carnival Weekend on April 17-18.

The Carnival Weekend opens with a Carnival Dance at 8:30 p.m., April 17, with music supplied by the Duke Ambassadors. The carnival will end at midnight on Consolidated University Day, April 18.

Booths for money-making projects, the Carnival Dance, a Consolidated University Dance, a Carnival Queen and a Consolidated University Queen will be the highlights of the weekend.

Organizations of the participating schools—N. C. State College, UNC at Chapel Hill and Woman's College—are eligible for entry in the attractions of the carnival.

Applications and rules for the Carnival Weekend are being sent to organizations on the campuses of the three schools; organizations not receiving this information by March 15 are asked to contact the chairman of the College Union Social Committee at State.

Campus Chest Still Short Of Goal

Campus Chest contributions have been coming in slowly during the week. Through early Thursday, $848.36 had been collected toward the goal of $3,000.

Solicitors in dormitories and among faculty members are working toward reaching the goal before the Campus Chest drive officially ends Saturday.

The annual drive is the only campus-wide solicitation for charities allowed at UNC.

The budget this year includes allocations for the World University Service, the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program and the Orange County Class for Mentally Retarded Children.

If the $3,000 goal is reached, $1,200 will go to the World University Service to aid foreign students. Another $1,200 will go for the Goettingen scholarships for Carolina and German students. The remaining $600 will be turned over to the mentally retarded children's class.

In the selection of the three agencies to benefit from the drive, the Campus Chest Board chose organizations that aid students. The Board has emphasized the "students helping students" idea in its drive.

Professor Returns From Symposium

Dr. Charles N. Reilley has just returned from Pittsburgh, Pa. where he was invited symposium speaker for the Pittsburgh Conference on Analytical Chemistry.

The symposium was on "Advances in Electroanalytical Methods Employing Chelons.

Yack Office Headquarters For UP

The University Party headquarters will be in the Yackety-Yack office in Graham Memorial, Monday through Friday, 2-5 p.m.

The Platform Committee will meet at 1:30 this afternoon in the Woodhouse Conference Room in Graham Memorial. "Any other interested persons not on the committee are invited to come and give their suggestions," Minter said.

Final approval of the platform will be at the Tuesday night meeting.

Revisions In Nominating Procedures Authorized

Support Voted For Original Budget Request

By STAN BLACK

The Student Legislature revised the Elections Law dealing with nominating procedures last night by passing a bill introduced by Dave Jones (SP) under special orders.

The changes eliminated the reponsibility of the administration in determining the eligibility of nominees for student government posts and placed it directly in the hands of the Elections Board itself.

According to Dave Jones, there has been in the past much confusion and misunderstanding caused by poor communications between the administration and the Elections Board on matters of academic standing. By placing authority in the Board itself, the confusion will be eliminated.

A definition of a "student in good standing" was inserted in the Elections Law in the revision. It was further provided that the requirements of the revision will not apply to any nominees already approved by the Elections Board, but that all nominations in the future, including those not yet made for the upcoming election, will be approved by the Elections Board under the new provisions.

The Legislature also established an International Students' Board to coordinate the activities of various campus organizations concerned with the foreign students on the UNC campus.

The introducer of the bill, Jim Crownover (SP), stated that much valuable information on world affairs could be brought to the attention of the student body if the foreign student source were tapped.

Other duties of the International Students' Board will be concerned with matters such as housing, orientation, social activities, and so on.

A resolution declaring the Legislature's support of the University's budget requests for the biennium was passed unanimously amid favorable comment deploring the cuts made in the budget by the state Budget Committee.

Norman B. Smith's (Ind.) bill to establish a committee to study the pay, deployment, responsibilities, & working time of several classes of University employees was passed after considerable discussion on its appropriateness. A study will be made of the functions of building custodians, dormitory counselor, and employees of the building and grounds department.

A committee was established to administer the television repair fund which, according to Jim Scott (SP) is available for the use of dormitories needing repairs on their television sets.

APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Aycock, Friday Stick To First Budget Aims

By NEIL MURPHY

Chancellor William B. Aycock announced Thursday that he and President William C. Friday intend to appear before the Joint Appropriations Committee of the State Legislature on March 18 to "support our original requests" for the budget.

Aycock went on to point out that both the University and the State Board of Higher Education were in full agreement on the items included in the capital improvements budget. This budget includes improvements to the University for a 10 year period.

"We made our recommendations and we're standing on them," J. Harris Purks, Chairman of the State Board of Higher Education, said Wednesday. "Our recommendations were identical with those of the University on capital improvements."

This means that Carolina's proposed Student Union Building which was not recommended by the Advisory Budget Commission will be requested by Purks, Friday and Aycock.

President Friday and Chancellor Aycock do not plan at present to attend the regular meeting of the Board of Higher Education on March 11. The open meeting was described by Aycock as "just the usual regular meeting."

Aycock pointed out that at the Joint Appropriations Committee meeting the University would support its own requests for the operations budget and that the Board of Higher Education would support theirs.

"We are going for own original requests on the operations budget and the Board of Higher Education will support its recommendations," said Aycock. The requests of the University are higher than those recommended by the board.

"They will support their operation budget and we will support ours. We are in agreement on the capital improvements for the next 10 years," Aycock stated.

Furtado Appoints 8 To Various Committees

"These appoinments were made after a great deal of consideration of the positions and applications. As always, it was difficult to make a decision, but it is my belief that the appointees will attempt to do all in their power to meet the demands of the various tasks," Furtado stated.

David Lefler was appointed to the Student Audit Board. He joins four other members who are responsible for governing the accounting and fiscal policy involved in the $1,750,000 handled annually by the Student Activities Fund Office.

New appointees to the Elections Board are Stewart Priddy, Gay Wilson, Jose Lopes, Don Black and Bill Norton. This 15-member committee is responsible for the preparation and administration of the campus elections.

Bill Miller and Troy Blanton were appointed to the committee set up last week by the Legislature to investigate he feasibility of establishing a recreation and picnic area in Victory Village.

Foreign Policy Topic

Students are invited to hear Michael Harrington, New York free lance writer, discuss United States foreign policy at 6:45 tonight in the upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall.

Speaking for the spring Y conference this weekend, he will arrive here this afternoon.

"The World . . . Policy and Perspective" is the theme for the conference which begins Saturday. Studens may register today in the Y.

Nancy Baker To Edit Women's Rush Manual

Nancy Baker became the editor of 1959 rush manual by appointment of the Panhellenic Council at its meeting Wednesday, March 4.

Miss Baker, a junior from Oak Hill, W. Va., served as editor of business and professional sections of the Yackety-Yack for the current year and editor of the Greenbriar College yearbook her sophomore year. She is an elementary education major and Kappa Delta Sorority member.

The Rush Manual is published during the summer and sent to incoming co-eds. The theme for the coming issue is "Blast Off for Sorority Land," carrying out a space-age idea.

Peggy O'Neal has been named as art editor. No other positions have been filled.

Florida University Hosts Accounting Association

Florida State University will be host to the Southeastern regional meeting of the American Accounting Assn. Five men from the School of Business Administration will participate in the two-day meeting (March 6-7) in Tallahassee, Fla.

The following UNC representatives from the field of accounting will be attending the meeting: Dr. William A. Terrill, associate professor, Dr. H. Q. Langenderfer, associate professor; Dr. Isaac N. Reynolds, assistant professor; W. Phillip Windham, instructor; and Eugene R. Crotty, lecturer.

Dr. Terrill will serve as chairman of the discussion panel of "The Place of the Concepts of Electric Data Processing in Elementary Accounting.

CONTRIBUTION TOTALS $100,000

B. A. School Given Grant

A major stimulus to the faculty of the School of Business Administration was announced here today with the establishment of the Drexel Research Professorship at the School of Business by the Drexel Furniture Company.

A total of $100,000 has been contributed by the Morganton Company to the Business Foundation of North Carolina, a private corporation established by leading North Carolina businessmen in 1946 for the purpose of assisting the Chapel Hill School of Business Administration in the development of a comprehensive program of business education, research, and service.

Annual income from the Drexel gift will be used to enable a School of Business Administration faculty member to devote full attention to basic research. The Drexel Research Professorship will be in the nature of a distinguished professorship in the research field.

In commenting on the announcement Maurice W. Lee, Dean of the School of Business Administration, cited the Drexel Research Professorship as a major contribution to the School both from the standpoint of the research it will make possible and the encouragement it will give to outstanding faculty performance.

A former president of the Business Foundation, Mr. R. O. Huffman, Drexel President, was given special mention by Dean Lee, who described the furniture executive as one of the state's forward looking business leaders. "Mr. Huffman's identification with higher education in North Carolina, particularly in the area of business and economic study and research, continues to be an inspiration to those of us who are concerned with the economic development of the South," Lee stated.

A recent publication of the School of Business Administration entitled "Business and Economic Research at Chapel Hill" describes more than 80 research projects now being undertaken by members of the School of Business faculty. Much of this research has been carried on by faculty members who have major teaching responsibilities. The Drexel Research Professorship will enable one or more faculty members to undertake a full time, intensive research program.

Carolina Handbook Has Several Positions Open

Interviews for the positions of editor, assistant editor, section editors and office staff for the 1959 edition will be held at the beginning of the week.

Interested students have been asked to fill out an application blank, leave it in the YMCA office and sign the appointment list for an interview. The deadline for returning applications is Tuesday morning.

The Carolina Handbook has been a publication of the YMCA since 1891, and it is the University's official orientation guide for all new students: freshmen, transfer students or graduate students.

From the first edition of 16 pages the handbook has been expanded to the present 150-page edition with sections dealing with all phases of campus life.

In 1957 the student government made an appropriation to help support the publication. During 1958, as a member of the Publications Board, the handbook operated with a budget of $3,600.

Anyone having questions concerning the Carolina Handbook should contact Sue Campbell, editor, at 8-484 in the afternoons or 8-9148 after 7 p.m.

A Waste

The plight of Pembroke State College is the plight of the the state's higher educational system.

For while UNC at Chapel Hill has an enrollment of 7,500, with plans for growth double that, Pembroke has 400 students in a college built for 1400.

It is a sad plight in that there is not a means of coordination of a statewide system. Here at Carolina, the University has such coordination that it is literally dependent on the future of two other institutions with very different ideas and purposes. Meanwhile Pembroke with only the minimal ties to the General Assembly is floundering with inadequate attendance and overadequate facilities, save dormitories, which the Advisory Budget Commission, in the wisdom it has shown in other matters, saw fit to cut out.

It is no wonder that this University feels an obligation to grow, if the educational administrators in this state have no more sense than to plan a state system as it is now.

What is necessary is a centralized authority over all higher institutions. Each one should have a purpose, and each an enrollment quota. Each should aim at a vocation or vocations, and some should be educational institutions that are communities of individuals committed to the pursuit of truth.

A state system presents the possibility of offering an intellectual differentiation between one college and another, so that one could offer a top level educational opportunity.

It is high time that this state consolidated its educational resources in order that as a whole the state of North Carolina can be an educational leader and that the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill can be the outstanding higher educational public institution in the nation. This is a lot to ask, but it is possible.

Honor Code

A student mentioned to the editor that the Honor Code was quite similar to a loyalty oath, only at a student level. And upon inspection there is a great deal of truth in the statement.

An honor pledge is surely an unnecessary measure, for if a person really cheated, he would have no hesitation in signing any pledge. Moreover, the statement included in the Honor Code makes it an honor violation if a person does not report another's violation of the code. It is something entirely different to place one on his honor neither to give information or to receive it during the course of an examination, and it is another to consider that a person's honor extends to a mass enforcement system of a code of laws.

The similarity is further apparent when one notes that each student must sign a pledge to uphold the Honor Code before finishing orientation and gaining admission to the University.

A person's honor should be assumed. No rigorous system of pledges, and codes should be necessary. Violations should be dealt with, but violations should be contained strictly within the context of not lying, cheating, or stealing.

It is high time the Honor Code made sense.

Latest information has it that even the much discussed "Beatnik" (a la Kerouac) is not above taking a job in the organization world.

Of course, these individuals make certain stipulations before they commit themselves to the "enemy" world of conformity, organizational pride, nine-to-five hours, and company rules.

In the March, 1959, issue of MADEMOISELLE, a highly informative article entitled "Beatniks in Business," explains the attitudes of the middle-ground beatniks (the young people who feel negatively about work but who work anyway) towards their jobs.

The MADEMOISELLE survey of a number of such individuals revealed the following general likenesses:

One: The Beatniks all have a definite aversion to becoming job-oriented. That is to say, they are highly insulted if they are at a party and someone asks them, "What do you do?" They prefer to be asked, "What are you?"

Two: The Beatnik employees can be found in the jobs where they would least be expected—advertising, engineering, secretarial pools, drug companies, etc. They seem to gravitate towards fields which demand little of their personal individuality. The theory is that this way one can save oneself for the after-work concentrations that "really count." (Beatnik employees discuss folk music and poetry during coffee breaks, and enroll in night courses of philosophy, art, and contemporary religion).

Three: In order to satisfy themselves that they are not falling into the Organizational rut, they slam many personal codes on themselves. They maintain an air of perpetual disdain for the company as such. The article quotes one "Beat" young secretary as saying she had become quite upset with herself on the day when she finally resolved herself to the fact that the company's name SHOULD be typed in capital letters. "When I realized this . . . I felt I had been brainwashed."

Other self-imposed checks are classified in the field of "evening up the score." Beatniks will comply with work hours, rules, and other company policy for a certain length of time. Then they will "get even" by subtly gypping the organization which has held them down. One girl wired in that she had been thrown from a horse and sprained her ankle and in this way managed a couple of weeks paid vacation. Other Beatniks content themselves with raiding the company storeroom for supplies such as pencils, reams of paper, and other items which might be needed to finish an unfinished novel—or letter to a sweetheart. Others call in sick every now and then, or pad their expense account "just to even up things."

The article explains this "I owe it to myself" attitude of the Beatniks by citing the "strong parallel in morality here between attitudes toward the company and the widespread cheating on examinations seen of late in college students."

It seems logical to conclude that, since most Beat employees have been to college for some period of time at least, there may be some connection with the disdain they held for the standardized routine of the college "system" and the disdain they hold for the organized compactness of the company "system."

If the theory holds that "one is a product of his environment," it seems altogether possible that one who is made dissatisfied with systems in school life will grow up into a dissatisfied organization man. The systems are similar and produce the same effect on embryonic Beatniks and mature Beatniks.

But sometimes, royalty checks and rich relatives don't come through. And one has to eat. Even if one is a Beatnik.

That is why Beatniks can be spotted wearing gray flannel suits or nylon stockings, depending on the gender of the Beatnik; holding to subway ceiling supports; riding the elevator in a Madison Avenue building; and drawing a weekly paycheck.

They are the HIDDEN DISSUADERS.

"You've Got To Pull More Of The Load"

Notes On A Midwinter Conference

Bob Beard

The purposes of the Foreign Student Leadership Project, a committee initiated by the National Student Association three years ago, are to bring as many foreign students to America as possible in order for them to study our student governments, and exchange ideas about them and other relevant matters. The exchange of ideas takes place at two conferences held during the year: the mid-winter conference held to informally give these visiting students first impression of American student life and government with American representatives, and with which this article is concerned; and the formal spring conference. Jose (Pepe) Lopez, an Economics student from Bolivia and FSLP participant on campus, along with a member of our own Foreign Exchange Committee, attended this meet and gathered these notes which should be of interest to the student body.

Two main discussions heads dominated the conference: (1) comparative interest in international affairs among students of America and other parts of the world, and (2) comparative American and foreign student governments.

The main difference between American students and foreign is that our interests are predominately social, whereas theirs are political. One Indian student suggested that our lack of political interest reflects old iolationism tendencies which prevailed immediately following World War I. American students argued that since few of us can take part in our country's politics, i. e., vote, until our senior year, and since our government is firmly established and handles its affairs in a satisfactory manner, our confidence in it allows us to turn our attention to problems which are closer at hand, e. g., who to date to the party this weekend, or even campus activities. Certainly our inability to take any active part in national or international politics should warrant some laxity, but the fault lies in the extremity of our confidence in our government; confidence which overlaps deeply into political, certainly international, indifference.

But the main body of argument displaced the fault, at least the crux of the fault, from the student to the educational system itself in America. The average American freshman is much more immature and ill-prepared on entering college than is his foreign counterpart. Therefore his course are necessarily simple, dull, often boring. Work and innumerable quizzes tire the student even more. Most of all however, the student finds his time sapped away so that when he has a moment to himself he devotes it to personal activities in the form of relaxation or its antithesis, 'letting off steam.'

However, should a political crisis decisions. Since we live in a roughly democratic country, the decisions will rest on us. Therefore we must needs be more politically aware.

A Japanese student remarked that we, even the country as a whole, base any awareness we might have on mass communicative sytems. He meant the newsbits that are spoonfed us between the feature and the cartoon, that are going off the air when we switch Maverick on. Even if we notice these ocassionally, these are fallible since too often they, just as the newspapers, concentrate on the speed with which a news item may be brought to the public, rather than on the complete truth of the matter. Books and longer, more authoritative articles are seldom consulted.

The attitude of the student government reflects the attitudes of the student which it heads. Some of the foreign students were surprised on seeing that our student governments took no active part in national politics. American members replied that national politics were the affair of the national government, and that student welfare was the concern of the student government. Only in case of a crisis in the national government is the concern of the student government national or international politics. Governments such as the one in Budapest which was so instrumental in the Hungarian revolt are flung into national action by just such crises. In this sense the American and foreign student governments are closely similar, the difference being that in the governmental and political situation of the different countries.

Two questions arose on the side of these main arguments which were left unanswered. The first, brought up by foreign students was: If the student government's concern in America is student welfare, why has few or no measures been taken to rectify the burdensome educational systems now in practice? American students argued that the system was the responsibility of the faculty and administration. Also the difficulty in changing such a tremendous thing, which varies in every college in the nation. All the same the foreign students considered their own systems of education superior to ours, and could not understand how such a problem could stand outside the bounds of student welfare.

Too, the argument as to whether a student government's political actions should be in terms of violence, as is demonstrated in most actions taken by foreign student governments, was brought up by American students. This argument was left unfinished with the suggestion that the individual situation in which the student government is participating should determine the type of action to be used. It was obvious that the American students favored more arbitrary methods, as compared to more active measures which the foreign members would use.

Harper's Bizarre

We include some verse by one of the most lesser poets we know.

ON HIS LOVE, WHOSE HANDS HE HELD SO DEAR

Your hands, so smooth, so white, so soft and warm,
I clasped in mine. We whispered our goodbyes,
And I departed, seeing in your eyes
The tears of love. Your hands of beauteous form,
Uplifted in a flutter of farewell,
I'll not forget. "Though long away," I swore,
"Return I someday to this native shore
To claim the maiden who my heart doth swell
With love. Return I someday, and with pride
I'll make her mine. Her hands, so lovely, white
And warm will always be in mine clasped tight."
And so you are now, ten years thence, my bride.
Oh, would that I had more loved foreign lands,
I would not now be loathing dish-pan hands.

He saw the wind
As it sauntered along the street
Whistling, kicking a piece of paper down the gutter, absent-minded brushing
at an overhanging shrub.
He felt the cool air,
The first smattering of impending rain.
He saw the skirmish line
Of water
as it moved steadily down the street.
He heard the thunder barrels
Rolling across the planks of Heaven;
Heard the roar of the falling water.
And the counterpoint of it dripping again from eaves and branches.
He heard the bird,
The frog, the rivulets
returning to the sea.
Of this, he wrote home, "It rained yesterday."

Narcotic

Sidney Dakar

Everyday we read of the increased efforts that are being made to keep narcotics from reaching our citizens. There is another menace that seems to have about the same stupefying effect upon the mind and threaten a much larger group of people. This menace is TV.

After observing the effects TV has had on me and others, I have concluded that drug and TV addiction are similar in many ways. At first there is no habit in either case. In the early stages it is possible to take TV or leave it without becoming an "addict."

I was overseas when the TV craze was getting into full swing in the U. S. Since my return in 1954 I have not lived at home and have never felt inclined to pay extra for a TV in the many rooms in which I have lived. Consequently, until last winter TV never affected my mode of living.

Sitting in my room one night in the fall of 1957 and hearing the first sounds of the coming winter winds, I decided to search for adventure, sunshine and money. My search took me to beautiful Phoenix, Ariz., where I worked as a TV engineer.

This job in the control room required that I look at the video and make adjustments. At first only the better dramas were interesting. After a month or so two or two or three of the quiz shows became interesting. After about three months, almost all of the shows became interesting. In short, I too had become "hooked."

Upon returning to school, I was able to "get the monkey off my back" without any lasting effects. Now I can sit at my desk every night and hear the TV down the hall blasting away (damn it) and have no desire other than trying to close my transom tighter. The hypnotic eye of the monster has lost its power over me. Some of my fellow students are not so fortunate. One would think that the magnetic fields generated by the deflection plates were escaping their shield and pulling the victims toward the phosphorescent glow of the dying electrons. They give the same rapt attention to the afternoon kiddy cartoons as one would give to the President while he was reading a declaration of war.

We usually only hear of the advanced cases of TV addiction. The case of a 12 year old English boy was recently publicized. The boy's father had taken him to a psychiatrist. The father reported that the boy sat before the TV set for 14 hours each day in a stupor, that the son refused to go outside and play, to go to school, or to even go to the store and spend money. The boy rarely spoke anymore. In short, he had become a TV zombie. Obviously this one of the more advanced stages of the disease.

A minister went recently to a home that had lost a loved one. He wanted to make the final arrangements for the funeral. He could get no attention from any of the rest of the family. Their favorite program was on TV. They were oblivious to his pleas for attention. He left in desperation. We have all probably experienced minor forms of this while visiting friends.

Recently I lived in a private home in which the husband and wife looked at TV every night, regardless of the programs that might be on. On certain nights the fellow used to lament, "well, there isn't anything good on tonight." Yet, he would still watch TV. The thought never seemed to occur to him to turn off the TV and find a good book. Obviously he was "hooked." As one who had also been "hooked," I was forced to move because of my fear of associating with those who are in the advanced stages of the disease.

Foible's Fable

Frank Crowther

I thought I'd just write this thing down in my scratch book and maybe go back to read it someday. It ain't gonna do nobody much good now, but it kinda makes me feel better anyhow.

I been doin' a good spell of thinkin' about this damned ole mess we're in and it all seems to go back to this one winter years ago when I was livin' on the Potomac river across from the big capitol. There was a lotta hell-raisin' in those days in the big city and the hand-picked officials kept on spending more and more money gettin' ready to blow themselves higher than an oak tree. They dedicated, so they said, more than $40 billion that year alone for somethin' they called "national defense." That was a lotta hickory nuts, though, cause they was only tryin' to keep the economy from splittin' right down the seam.

You could see the dust risin' every evenin' when they rung the "it's 4:30-I'll-be-home-before-you" bell. Everybody left town at the same time and you shoudda seen them crack 'em up durin' the rainy spells. Killed more than fifty thousand that y'ar. It was like the only war they had so everybody made a good effort.

Well, that ain't really what I want to say. It was about February, I guess, that we had that crisis. An', you know, nobody thought of it as a crisis. They had this secretary of state who came down with insides' trouble — cancer of the abdominal tract or somethin' of the likes. Lots of his friends pooh-poohed all the worry talk by sayin' that a government runs on its mind and not its stomach and a whole patch of people said that that was right after all and went back to their hootin' and hollerin' like nothin' was about to happen. They put all their bright heads together and only came up with crop failure.

We're gonna have to admit that it was the fault of that president we had about that time. He's that fellow that these guys in the newspapers lately have been callin' the modern Benedict Arnold. I guess he was a pretty good guy. I mean, if you took to considerin' the spirit of those times. Why everybody called him by his nickname and he played golf like the rest and really did hanker for westerns. In case there ain't no more history books, these westerns were about the cowboys who settled the west of the country. They weren't really much special. Everybody was a hero or a bad guy, like the books said, and they'd spend most of their days sittin' on the porch outside some saloon just talkin' kinda slow-loke and spittin' and watching things go by. Either that or inside beltin' down some drink and grumblin' about nothin' much in particular. Well, this president was kinda like that too. He even talked just like a cowboy, real casual, never saying much—at least that you'd understand—and sayin' his "yups" and "nopes" right on cue. To tell the truth, he'd probably made a good cowboy.

When this secretary of state got sick, like I said, it was patsy-footsy for a time while the administrators and the bureaucrats (that's what they were called) finalized some kinda position. What they really did was to put all them experts to work to find out what the other guys in town were up to. You see, all them groups had their own gang of experts who would spend all their time doin' nothin' but to check up on the sly and see what the other fellows was doin', like spyin' on themselves. You actual can't blame them too bad, since this was the only way a fellow could find out just what was happenin', except you could read the papers.

Pretty quick, there was a few of them boys who said that we should get a new secretary of state quick like since this sick fellow was gonna hafta go sooner or later and why not sooner since we gotta get on with it. Well, brother, the old fur got to flyin' smethin' bad 'cause this presidsent was good buddies with the sick one. He kept on sayin' that this secretary was one of the most dedicated fellows he ever seen, real school and horse sense smart and scout's honor true blue honest to goodness best one we'd ever had. I think he said somethin' about him bein' a irreplaceable or something like that. I had a better word but it ain't much good to say it now.

Well, they watied too dern long and the hogs done busted outta the pen. We lost Germany that summer and you could see what'd happen next like frost on the cherry blossomes. Friends, it spread faster than the plague and there we were surrounded. Some guy in England said somethin' about rallyin' the English to another finest hour, but she didn't quite come off. We had a breather for a spell when they decided to get Africa out of the way, then India saw the pork in the fire so they just slipped under the fence since they didn't have to far to go anyhow.

They said this noon that South America was all but harvested and it was only a matter of time for us. I mean, it's like the red coats are comin' and the odds are so bad that all the Paul Reveres are goin' to the woods for one last big hunt and fish instead of spreading some big alarm. Tell the truth, I'm headin' for the same. The dogwood trees are bloomin' this time of year and you know how good and fresh the air is up there. I'll pick some flowers for mother too and may as well turn the animals loose. When that's done, I'm just gonna sit on the front porch and wait for the dirty bastards.

The Awful Truth

Planetarium Plans Opening Of Morehead Southern Line

Model Railway will be unveiled to the public at the Morehead Planetarium here March 15, Manager A. F. Jenzano announced today.

Although the exhibit in the North Science gallery will be incomplete, Jenzano said it is being opened at the early date so that the public may be able to observe periodic development and progress in construction. "This will be a continuing project," he said, "and we hope it will never be completed."

Special viewing provisions will be made for small children, and later on the railroad will be operated at regular hours.

The model railroad — called HO scale to differentiate the exhibit from "toy" trains—will occupy more than half the large exhibit room. Freight and passenger trains will travel over more than 600 feet of narrow gauge track, laid against a scenic background.

All the equipment and materials as well as the labor to install the permanent exhibit have been contributed by manufacturers, local suppliers and model railroad enthusiasts. Already the project has been under construction about a year.

Gilbert Clark, who was with Pacific Mills before they were closed down at Carrboro, has been in charge of the project for the past several months, contributing his time.

Others who have greatly assisted have included Robert L. Blake, professor of medical illustration at Duke University, who has built several hundred miniature dwellings and done much of the landscaping; Dr. S. Y. Tyree of the UNC Chemistry Department; William R. Profitt, a UNC graduate student; and Planetarium technicians.

WALTER ALLEN JR.
. . . speaks at workshop

Allen Chosen For Summer Workshop

Walter Allen Jr., professor of Latin, has been chosen to be lecturer and consultant at the Latin Workshop of the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C.

The subject of the workshop, from June 12 to June 23, will be "On the Teaching of Latin in the Modern World." Dr. Allen's special topic will be "The Classics in Translation."

Dr. Allen, best known for his studies and teaching in Latin and Greek literature, is also a recognized authority on teaching the classics in translation. He has taught such courses since 1936, at Princeton and Yale as well as at UNC and also at the University of Michigan in the summer session of 1953. Some of his courses here are also cross-listed with the Departments of Comparative Literature and History.

In his lecture Dr. Allen will discuss courses in classics in translation as one means by which the classics continue to exert their traditional cultural influence. He will give practical suggestions for the effective teaching of the classics in translation, and he will be available for consultation to the members of the workshop.

Principals' Conference Here In April

A state wide work conference for North Carolina junior high school principals will be held here on Tuesday and Wednesday, April 7-8, with some 100 person expected to attend.

The junior high schools' instructional program will be the main discussion area for this second annual conference on the University of North Carolina campus.

W. B. McIver of Greensboro is chairman of a conference steering committee, which includes Harry S. Howard of Goldsboro, T. B. Hall of Durham, and C. A. Holzclaw of Asheville.

Joining with them in planning the sessions are Dean Arnold Perry, Guy B. Phillips, J. Minor Gwynn and Samuel Holton of the UNC School of Education staff, and A. B. Combs of the State Department of Public Instruction.

Program Head Wanted

Although the Graduate Club works with the undergraduate orientation committee, it has a program of its own which introduces Carolina to about 500 new graduate students.

The duty of the chairman will be to manage the mechanics of the program and work with the counselors. The chairman also works with the graduate office in setting up the prorgam.

Interested persons should contact either Bob Rennick or Nola Hatten.

Bliss Guest Speaker For Dentistry Course

DR. CECIL H. BLISS
. . . lectures postgraduate course

Dr. Cecil H. Bliss of Sioux City, Iowa will be guest lecturer at a two-day postgraduate course at the School of Dentistry today and Saturday.

The course is expected to attract dentists from throughout North Carolina and neighboring states. The title of the course is "Dental Practice and Management and its Analysis."

Dr. Bliss lectured here at the School of Dentistry in December and his lecture was attended by more than one-third of all dentists in North Carolina. Also attending Dr. Bliss's December lecture were numerous dentists from neighboring states.

Dr. Bliss attended the State University of Iowa College of Dentistry and was later a member of the faculty of that school. He was a guest lecturer in practice administration at the University of Iowa from 1934 to 1957, and at the present time holds a similar position with the Dental School of the University of Texas. He has delivered over 400 lectures on psychology and practice administration in the United States, Canada and the Hawaiian Islands.

Among the topics that will be covered by Dr. Bliss are: a philosophy of practice, practice analysis, and motivation factors involved in presenting denistry.

English Specialist To Speak At Duke

Kenan Professor Richmond P. Bond, a specialist in 18th century English literature, will be a featured speaker at a special conference at Duke University this weekend.

The Duke Graduate English Club and English Department are sponsoring the annual Eighteenth Century Conference on Friday and Saturday, with prominent professors invited to read papers.

Dr. Bond's paper to be given Saturday morning will concern "Messrs. Bickerstaff and Spectator." The UNC Kenan professor is widely known for his studies of the Tatler and the Spectator, periodicals published in the early 1700's by Addison and Steele in London.

Bulletin Stresses Tie Of Science, Religion

"As knowledge advances, science ceases to scoff at religion; and religion ceases to frown on science."

These words were written by the late Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes and perhaps have more meaning today than at the time they were written.

This thought forms the theme of one of the articles in the current issue of the Bulletin of the School of Medicine of the University of North Carolina, which is now being distributed.

The article, "Reflections on the Interplay of Scientific and Christian Thought," was written by Dr. George D. Penick, associate professor of pathology of the UNC School of Medicine.

The publication is issued four times during each academic year by the School of Medicine in cooperation with the Whitehead Medical Society and the Medical Foundation of North Carolina. The editor of this issue is Dr. Ernest Craige of the UNC School of Medicine.

Dr. Frederick C. Wellman, former teacher of medicine and now retired in Chapel Hill, has contributed a poem on Arabic medicine, which is illustrated with early Arabic drawings.

"Bloodtypes and Anthropology" was written by Dr. W. S. Pollitzer of the UNC School of Medicine. In this article the author suggests that inherited traits like bloodtypes may be useful in the classifications of the people of the earth.

Dr. J. G. Mebane of Rutherfordton is featured in "Presenting the Alumni" and Dr. Robert D. Langdell of the Department of Pathology is featured in "Presenting the Faculty."

Two Attend Fla. Music Convention

Earl Slocum and Herbert Fred of the Music Department, are attending the annual convention of the American Bandmasters Association March 3-7 in Miami, Fla.

Both Slocum and Fred are elected members of the Association, which is an honorary organization of about 150 outstanding bandmasters in the United States and Canada. There are currently only six members of the organization from North Carolina.

Professor Slocum, elected to membership of the American Bandmasters Assn. in 1942, is serving as parliamentarin for the convention and guest conductor of the University of Miami Band in concert.

Fred, who is instructor of music at UNC, has just been elected to membership in the organization.

Carolina Clobbers Clemson 93-69

Will Face Blue Devils In ACC Semi-Finals

By ELLIOTT COOPER

RALEIGH — The old saying that what happens twice happens thrice came true for Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Heels here yesterday as they defeated Clemson in the opening round of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament for the third consecutive year. This time the score was 93-69.

The win gives the Tar Heels the right to meet Duke, victors over Wake Forest by a 78-71 count in the first game, tonight at 9:30 in the second round.

Carolina was in control of the game from the opening horn, and the outcome of the contest was never in doubt after the first ten minutes of play. The only question seemed to be just what would the final point spread amount to.

The Heels were led by a tremendous individual performance from Lee Shaffer who scored 21 points and got an equal number of rebounds. Behind Shaffer came Doug Moe had 18 points, 14 of them in the first half. The other Carolina double—figure men were Dick Kepley with 14, York Larese with 13, and Lou Brown who had 10. Brown got 6 of his points in the last forty seconds of play as he hit for three straight baskets.

The Carolina offense was simply overpowering and the losers could find no way to control it. The passing of Moe, Larese, and Salz set up numerous layups and clear jump shots.

Carolina played man-to-man all the way and forced the Tigers to take their shots from outside rather than work the ball into the pivot. Clemson used both a zone and a man-for-man but neither worked for them. Duke Coach Hal Bradley summed up the situation as, "too much brain for what they've (Clemson) got."

For the Tar Heels their scoring percentage was a hot 48 percent while the losers hit for an even 40, but only 32 in the first half. Carolina made good on 36 of 75 shots from the floor to establish their mark.

At the half the Tar Heels owned a 14 point lead at 42-28, after the break Carolina came out and started to increase this lead which had been as high as 20. The closest that Clemson would come in the last half was 12 after two minutes had gone by. Held to 3 points in the first half, Shaffer pumped in 18 during the final twenty minutes of play to keep the Heels between 15 and 20 points ahead until the last minute.

The Tar Heels took the opening tap and went to work right away. It was Salz, Kepley twice, two foul shots by Moe, and a snowbird layup by Larese to give Carolina a quick 10-1 lead after less than four minutes of play.

The Tigers came out in a zone. Midway in the half after Carolina had built up a 20-8 lead, Clemson Coach Press Maravich switched to a man-for-man. By this time, however, Moe, who was doing all the damage to the Clemson defense had already stuck in 10 points.

For the Tar Heels smart passing was the key to the 14 point margin that they enjoyed after the first twenty minutes. One play which was typical of the Carolina style occurred when Moe brought the ball down court on a fast break, cut into the center and passed off to Kepley who had an easy layup for 2 points.

Carolina enjoyed its biggest lead of the half with 5:07 left to go when they had Clemson 36-16. In the remaining minutes McGuire substituted an entire new team into the Tar Heel lineup.

Duke Victor Over Wake In ACC Game

Duke's sophomore studded Blue Devils rallied in the closing minutes of the second half to stave off a Wake Forest comeback and beat the Deacons 78-71 in a first round ACC tournament game in Raleigh yesterday.

Duke's victory puts them in the semi-finals against North Carolina tonight in the third meeting of the two teams this year. Carolina won the first two games.

Howard Hurt starred for the Blue Devils as they had to fight Deacon comeback which brought Wake Forest within 4 points, when Duke had been leading by 14.

State Beats Gamecocks

North Carolina State's Wolfpack came from behind to cop a 75-72 overtime victory from South Carolina's Gamecock's in the first round of the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament.

With approximately two minutes to go, State charged back from a five point deficit to tie the score an 68-68 at the end of regulation time. State got a one point lead in the overtime period and was never headed.

The Wolfpack will meet the winner of the Maryland-Virginia game in the 7:30 p.m. match tonight. The winner of that game will meet either Carolina or Duke in the finals.

Cavaliers Top Terps

Virginia's game Cavaliers, trailing throughout the first half and until the last minute of the second, snatched victory from the jaws of defeat as they beat Maryland's Terrapins by 66-65 in a first round game in the ACC tournament in Raleigh last night.

Virginia will meet State in the semi-finals in the first game tonight.

Maryland was ahead as much as 12 points during the game, but could not hold the lead at the end rush, when three first string Terps fouled out.

McGuire Calls Weaver Prejudiced

By the Associated Press

North Carolina University basketball Coach Frank McGuire has told some 600 UNC almuni that Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Jim Weaver is "prejudiced."

McGuire's comments, made in a letter sent Feb. 26, to members of the University's Educational Foundation Inc., resulted from Weaver's ruling on a riot which marked the windup of a UNC-Wake Forest basketball game Feb. 12 at Winston-Salem.

The mailing of the letter, over McGuire's name was confirmed Thursday by UNC Publicity Director Pete Ivey in answer to inquiries from newspapermen.

McGuire asserted in the letter that Weaver in his ruling on the fracas had "actually slandered Lee Shaffer and myself by issuing an official reprimand."

"I emphatically do not agree with his judgment, and I truly believe he is prejudiced having been the athletic director at Wake Forest for a number of years," McGuire wrote.

Weaver said he had "no comment whatsoever" on McGuire's statements.

Ivey said that McGuire sends out a letter weekly during basketball season reporting on the UNC team to members of the Educational Foundation, an organization of alumni which raises funds for athletic scholarships.

COACH FRANK McGUIRE
. . . a blast of cold air

In his ruling on the incident, Weaver placed both UNC and Wake Forest basketball squads on probation, said that McGuire and Wake Forest Coach Bones McKinney had failed to maintain disipline on their benches, and ordered reprimands for several players on the two teams, including Shaffer.

McGuire declared that if Shaffer were reprimanded it would be for something "he definitely did not do."

"The only thing Lee did was accept punches from two Wake Forest basketball players which ended in the now famous 'headlock' by Wake Forest's (Dave) Budd," he declared.

"Personally, I was hurt by Weasic) me," McGuire added. He said he had received letters from many UNC alumni supporting him by "saying I have done much to promote sportsmanship from our crowd and from our players in the seven years I have been here."

He told the alumni "any action you people wish to take in defense or Shaffer or even myself will be most appreciated."

McGuire noted that UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock had issued a statement defending McGuire and Shaffer. He added "The University officials are behind me" and "We are not through fighting this as yet."

Unbeaten Fencers In Triple Meet

By BOB PEEBLES

The undefeated UNC fencing team under the coaching of fencing masters Pebley Barrow and Dave Evans enters a triple meet with the Citdel and VMI Saturday at 1:00 in Woollen Gym.

UNC carries a 2-0 record into the meet having defeated VMI in Lexington 15-12 on their first outing and edging AMA on their home strip 14-13 in the last meeting two Saturdays ago. The Carolina foilsmen also defeated the VMI foil team 11-5 in a pre-season practice match.

The Citadel fencing team, arriving here from Charleston, S. C., goes into the meet with only a foil team and a sabre team. The UNC and VMI swordsmen have teams entering in foil, sabre, and epee.

Starting for Carolina on the strips Saturday in foil will be Carroll Raver, Charles Lucks, and Guy Ellis. Starting sabremen against VMI will be Mike Collins, Steve Merman, and Bob Aldridge, with Matthews and Williams entering in bouts against Citadel. Starting fencers in epee will be Bob Peebles, Bob Finley, and Clarence Simpson, with Herb Scott substituting.

Beginning at 1:00 Carolina will fence all weapons with VMI on three strips. At 2:30 UNC fences Citadel in foil and sabre, followed by VMI and the Citadel fencing foil and sabre at 4:00. Officiating will be Dave Evans and Pebley Barrow for the foil bouts, with Dr. John B. Hill and Al Deal in sabre, and Luke Forrest directing the epee bouts.

UNC Wrestlers Compete Today At Atlantic Coast Tourney

The Carolina wrestling squad will be trying to finish its season with a bang, as it participate in the 1959 Atlantic Coast Conference Wrestling Championships at the University of Virginia today.

To do so, the Tar Heel grapplers wil have to rise to greater heights than they reached during the regular season, when they compiled a lackluster 4-7 record. Last year in the tournament held at College Park, Md., the Carolina team placed third in the team scoring which determines the team and individual championships of the ACC.

ROGER WILLIAMS

Williams Uses Guitars, Bass As Accompanists

Pianist Roger Williams will use accompanists for some selections in his concert here Sunday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

A pair of guitars and bass will back up Williams during parts of the concert. Williams will also use his miniature piano, "Sebastian," during the program.

Carolina students will be admitted to the concert on admission of identification cards. Student wives may purchase tickets for $1. Townspeople may buy tickets for $2, but only after 7:45 p.m. Sunday at the door.

Williams' concert here is a part of his busy 12 week coast-to-coast tour this spring. In addition, he has a schedule of recordings and television commitments. His records are no sideline for him. In a few years Williams has sold more recordings than any other pianist.

The Williams' program Sunday will be a sampling of all types of music, with accent on the popular and standards. He will also include novelty selections during the concert.

Williams is being brought to Chapel Hill by the Student Entertainment Series. Chairman of this student group is Bob Borden.

ON VERSE—STORY

Could Be Worse

By RON SHUMATE

The Petite Dramatique
Will listen in two weeks
To poetry written
By students who are smitten
With the urge to pen verse,
Be it prolix or terse.

What all this boils down to is the poetry reading to be held March 22 at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Directors of the reading, Russell Link and Jack Jackson, have decided to include a section of poetry by Carolina students in the program.

Poetic students should bring their compositions to Gerrard Hall at 7 p.m.

Petite Dramatique will also present poems by Eliot, Shakespeare, MacLeish, Williams, Mallay and others.

The theme of the program will be "Carnival of Humanity."

Joel Carter, Baritone, Sings In Concert Series

The third concert of the spring semester Tuesday Evening Series will be presented by Joel Carter, baritone and Glenn Watkins, pianist, in Hill Hall, March 10 at 8 p.m.

Tuesday's program will include Schumann's "Dichterliebe," a cycle of 16 songs set to poetry by Heine; a group of songs by the American composer, Ernest Bacon; "Le Bestiaire," a group of six songs by Francis Poulenc; and an aria, "Oh, 'tis on earth defiled,'" from Howard Hanson's opera, "Merry Mount."

The song recital, sponsored by the Music Department, is open to the public with no admission charge.

Dr. Carter, chairman of instruction in voice here, has been in Chapel Hill since 1949. He is director of the UNC Glee Club and the Chapel Hill Choral Club.

He has made frequent appearance as leading baritone in both musical comedies and operas. He recently appeared as Escamillo in the Music Department's production of "Carmen," and has sung the roles of Figaro and Papageno in Mozart's operas.

Dr. Watkins, chairman of instruction in organ and teacher of theory in the Music Department, was appointed to the UNC faculty last fall. He was assistant professor and university organist of Southern Illinois University before coming here.

A graduate of the University of Michigan and the Eastman School of Music, he has also studied with Nadia Boulanger in Fontainebleau.

Dr. Watkins spent a year in London and Oxford as a Fulbright scholar in musicology in addition to his studies in France.

Smith Bill Goes Thru Legislature

By DEE DANIELS

A bill, introduced by Norman B. Smith (SP) to establish a committee to study the pay, deployment, responsibilities and working time of several classes of University employees was passed over considerable opposition at the Student Legislature Thursday night.

Opposing the measure, Charlie Gray (UP) remarked, "I think it is up to the administration to check up on these affairs." He suggested that representatives speak with the chancellor concerning the bill and if he approved, the Legislature should pass it.

Don Dotson (SP) said the bill would be more accurately referred to as a study committee. He didn't believe the intention of the bill was investigation, but that it manifested part of the interest the Legislature should show in financial matters.

Gray suggested an amendment to allow the committee to go directly to the administration for discussion of the matter instead of "being a committee to snoop around checking on salaries."

The amendment was defeated, but the bill was approved as it was originally phrased.

Four new bills were introduced Thursday night.

Dave Jones' (SP) proposal, revising the Election Laws on nominating procedures, was passed under special orders.

Jim Crownover (SP) introduced a measure making a holdover Legislature session mandatory to provide for a one week indoctrination period for all incoming legislators after elections.

Both old and new legislators would be required to attend the holdover session.

Golden Fleece Hears Editor After Tapping

Lenoir Chambers, editor of the Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk, Va., will be the speaker at a meeting of the order of Golden Fleece after the tapping ceremonies here Monday, March 16.

Chambers, who was tapped in 1913, will address inductees into the honorary order at a banquet at the Carolina Inn at 6:30 p.m.

Alumni of the Golden Fleece will attend the tapping ceremonies at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall, and also the dinner at the Inn.

The Golden Fleece is considered the highest honorary organization on the UNC campus.

The order is now 56 years old, having begun in 1903. Lenoir Chambers is a former North Carolina journalist and former journalism teacher and director of the University News Bureau prior to joining the editorial staff of the Norfolk newspapers.

DR. CLARK PLEADS

Back Health Affairs Division

A plea for the support of the UNC Division of Health Affairs has been made by Dr. Henry T. Clark Jr., administrator of the division.

Dr. Clark, speaking at Thursday's meeting of the Chapel Hill Rotary Club, pointed out that although the size of the student body of the division was growing and operating costs were increasing, the N. C. Advisory Budget Commission had not recommended needed increases in the division's budget.

The Division of Health Affairs is made up of the UNC Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, Pharmacy and Public Health and N. C. Memorial Hospital.

The UNC health administrator explained the ABC had not allowed for a needed increase in personnel by the division or for needed salary increases for faculty members. He said this same situation existed not only in regard to the Division of Health Affairs, but throughout the entire University.

On the matter of salary increases for faculty members, Dr. Clark explained the division's future appeared bleak under the present ABC recommendations:

"There is a scarcity of teachers in the health fields. We are not in a position to compete with other schools, because of our salary range, to secure and hold professrs. Aside from this, practically any doctor, dentist or other members of our faculty would make more money in private practice or private industry than we are in a position to pay."

Dr. Clark urged the people of North Carolina to lend their support, through their representatives in the General Assembly, to the Division of Health Affairs.

"We need the support and the interest of each person in the state to maintain the high standards of the Division of Health Affairs. With this support we can continue to give the people of North Carolina the dentists, doctors, nurses, pharmacists and public health workers that they need."

In round figures, according to Dr. Clark, the present budget for the Division of Health Affairs is 10 million dollars.

"It should be pointed out, however," he explained, "that only about 35 per cent of this money comes from state appropriations. The remainder of it comes from two sources that are about evenly divided. Approximately half of the remainder comes from hospital fees and tuition charges while the other half is accounted for by grants and gifts to the division."

Carolina Beats Blue Devils 74-71

Meets State Tonight; Will Play In NCAA

By ELLIOTT COOPER

RALEIGH—It's on to New York for Coach Frank McGuire's Tar Hels. Carolina won the ACC right to advance to NCAA play-offs by defeating Duke 74-71 after State had whipped Virginia 66-63 in the first game of last night's semi-final round at Reynolds Coliseum.

Since State is not eligible to participate in the NCAA eliminations, the Tar Heels will go on no matter who wins tonight's 8 o'clock championship tilt.

Duke kept the pressure on Carolina throughout the entire final 20 minutes of play after being behind 39-28 at halftime.

For the second straight day the Heels got outstanding offensive play from Lee Shaffer, as the big blond dumped in 23 points. Four points back of Shaffer was York Larese who had to sit on the bench much of the second half because of having four personal fouls.

Duke was led in the scoring column by Carroll Youngkin who had 21, but it was little John Frye who kept the Blue Devils in the ball game during the closing moments as he hit for 14 in the final four minutes.

Carolina played it man-for-man all the way, and in the first half it was quite effective in making Duke shoot from outside. Hurt by having both Larese and Kepley with four fouls, Carolina was not as sharp on defense in the second half, and twice the Blue Devils came within one point of tying the score.

As a team neither squad was impressive from the floor, as the Tar Heel hit of 26 of 67 shots for 38.8 per cent, while limiting Duke to 31 per cent.

Duke came out for the start of the game like a house afire, and after five minutes of play they had doubled the Carolina score at 10-5. From this point on the Tar Heels began the rally that carried them on to victory.

Shaffer tied the score at the 12:35 mark with a jump shot that made the count 11-all. After this tying tally Saltz got a layup. Moe a foul shot, Larese a jump, and Shaffer a three-point play, all before the Blue Devils could hit again.

BEGINS LECTURE CAMPAIGN

Faculty Backs Budget

By NEIL MURPHY

Members of the UNC faculty will begin a traveling lecture campaign next week to inform the state of Carolina's budget needs. Dean Alexander Heard of the Graduate School has received more than 100 responses from faculty members showing their willingness to assist in making the University's needs known.

"A large number of faculty members have volunteered to do anything they can to assist in getting the budget requests restored," Heard said Friday. "And a large number of these offered to meet informally or speak to faculty and alumni groups throughout the state."

Dean Heard pointed out that the Universiy gets many requests for speakers through the alumni secretary, J. Maryon Saunders, and that the kick-off of the speaking program will be the first of next week.

Speaking of the publicity given the budget by The Daily Tar Heel. Heard said, "The students have the biggest stake of all in this. Any interest they voice is a good sign."

Another point of the University's interest program is the writing of letters to legislators and trustees of the University.

To aid the speakers and correspondents, a group has been appointed to do research and gather important information which is furnished the faculty by Heard. This group consists of Prof. Harold A. Bierck, Dean Henry Brandis, Dr. Henry T. Clark, Dean Fred Weaver, Louis R. Wilson and Prof. Arnold K. King.

One of the facts gathered by this committee, cited as an example by Heard, was a report showing that requests for graduate assistantships (financial assistance) have risen 48 per cent in the past two years.

HANDBOOK POSITIONS

Interviews for positions on the Carolina Handbook staff will be held at the beginning of the week.

Interested students have been asked to fill out an application blank, leave it in the YMCA office and sign the appointment list for an interview. The deadline for returning applications is Tuesday morning.

Campus Chest Lacks $2000 Reaching Goal

"Gunsmoke" promises to be exceptionally good tonight on TV. And if you don't won't to watch this popular show, there's (hopefully) a basketball game on radio.

This suggested entertainment for tonight has one notable advantage: it's free. But the annoying problem of the unused money can be easily eliminated when solicitors make their last official rounds to collect for the 1959 Campus Chest today.

The Campus Chest Board set a goal of $3,000 for the annual drive, but through Thursday a mere $1,000 has been contributed or pledged. The drive began the first of the week and continues through tonight.

Solicitors in dormitories will continue to canvass residents for donations throughout today and tonight. Other student solicitors have made the rounds among the faculty and in Glen Lennox and Victory Village.

If this year's Campus Chest drive is successful, the money will be divided among the following participating agencies; $1,200 for the World University Service (to aid foreign students), $1,200 for the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program (for Carolina and German scholars) and $600 for the Orange County Mentally Retarded Children's Campus Chest drive this year is Class.

Candidate Cites Need Of DTH

Editorial candidate Dave Jones said Friday The Daily Tar Heel needed a greater coverage of the campus and proposed an increase in the newspaper's reportorial staff.

"Every effort must be made to get as many students working on the paper as possible, and when the new group of journalism students come in the fall, the editor should personally try to get them to work for The Daily Tar Heel," Jones said.

He added that this would be beneficial to both the newspaper and the student in that he would have a training laboratory for his work.

In commenting on how he would run his campaign, Jones said, "I am not going to campaign against the present editor, since he isn't running in this election."

He said his grounds for campaign would be present issues and newspaper improvement.

Jones said, "I think the present editor has done a fine job, but in any case there is always room for improvement."

Jones pointed out that developing a large qualified reportorial staff was the key to a newspaper's success.

In Jones' words, "If you don't have the facts, you cannot editorialize, press for advances or anything else."

He reemphasized the need for a training program which would enable reporters to take over for the managing editor and news editor's jobs during the year.

"Although these people will not have had experience, they will learn by their mistakes. Only through doing can a person get a firm knowledge of what is necessary to put out a newspaper," Jones explained.

Jones indicated that he would present his entire platform to the Student Party meeting on March 23, and said even if he received the endorsement, he would not make the paper a one party paper.

Editorial Board Is Mentioned

Davis Young, candidate for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel, proposed more extensive coverage of coed activities and the use of a board to write editorials, in a statement issued Friday.

Young elaborated, "In the dim distant past, The Daily Tar Heel provided extensive space for the coverage of social, athletic and intellectual activities among our women students."

He said, as it is now, a visitor from Mars would have trouble realizing that UNC is a coeducational institution.

"Perhaps the necessary space can be found by eliminating editorials which urge the students not to contribute to the Campus Chest," Young said.

He commented that more space should be devoted to such coed activities as sororities, women's dormitories, YWCA, Women's Residence Council, Town Girl's Association, Stray Greeks, Panhellenic Council and Carolina Women's Council than is presently allotted.

Young also said he would introduce to the paper an editorial board, composed of four or five students, each a specialist in some area. "Naturally, though, the editor will continue to bear responsibility for the editorials and indeed for the entire paper," he pointed out.

In the future, Young said he will elaborate on a business management policy.

Playmakers Announce Tryouts

The Carolina Playmakers have announced that tryouts for roles in three new one-act plays will be held at 4 p.m. Monday in the Playmakers Theatre.

The plays are "With Apologies, Euripides," by Douglas McDermott, of San Marino, Calif.; "An Age of Reason," by Robert Meritt, of Yonkers, N. Y.; and "We Might Become Examples," by Arthur McDonald, of Dalton, Ga.

These productions are completely student produced. They will be presented March 19 and March 20.

Tryouts are open to all students. Copies of the plays are available in the office of the Carolina Playmakers, 101 Saunders Hall, for those who wish to read the scripts before trying out.

NAVY PROGRAM

Young men or women interested in the Navy officer candidate programs will have a chance to talk with representatives of the Raleigh Recruiting office and Naval Aviation Cadet Information office here March 18 and 19.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

WUNC-TV To Carry Menotti's New Opera

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will televise Gian Carlo Menotti's newest opera, "Maria Golovin," live from New York at 5 p.m. Sunday.

The two-hour production will be presented in cooperation with the NBC television network and features the NBC Opera Company. Franca Duval will sing the lead role of Maria. Other principals are Richard Cross as Donato, Patricia Neway as Donato's mother, and Ruth Kobart as Agata.

"Maria Golovin" was writtien by Menotti especially for the Brussels World Fair last year. It was presented on Broadway recently, but closed after five performances. It is set in modern-day Europe and tells the story of an unusual and destructive love affair.

Other operas by Menotti are "The Medium," "The Consul," "Amahl and the Night Visitors," "The Saint of Bleeker Street" and "The Telephone."

In order to carry this special opera production on Channel 4, "Meet the Press' usually seen at 6 o'clock will be moved up to 4:30, and "Chet Huntley Reporting," usually seen at 6:30, will not be televised.

Frosh Forum Will Feature Poetry, Jazz

The Freshman Forum will present a program on poetry and jazz March 12 at 7:30 p.m. featuring local writers reading their own material.

This will be an experiment in the new sound of poetry and jazz that is currently gaining attention across the nation.

Trial readings will be held in Gerrard Hall Monday, March 9, at 6:30 p.m. for persons interested in reading their material.

The poetry Forum is being held to present the power of poetry as oral messages, which became silent mesages with the printing press.

All freshmen may participate in the programs.

The Freshman Forum has also planned to present a one-act play by Samuel Beckett, "The Endgame," next month.

There will be an arts workshop at Cherry Grove, S. C., in May.

ZBT Holds 32nd Anniversary Banquet

Zeta Beta Tau fraternity held its 32nd anniversary banquet last weekend.

E. L. Pinney, of the UNC social science deparment, was the speaker at the banquet held at the Castle Rastaurant in Durham.

New officers installed at the time were: president, Michael Fleisher; vice president, Peter Liman; secretary, Thomas Blumenfield; and treasurer, Jerry Shapiro.

Canterbury Club Elects New Officers

Sharon Sullivan, taking over Nan Robinson's position as secretary, is a Kappa Kappa Gamma from Chapel Hill; and Dick Verrone, filling Penny Boone's place as treasurer, is a sophomore from New Bern.

Continuing in their positions are Tony Dees as acolyte chairman and Tommy Taylor as chairman of the student lay readers.

In Praise

It isn't often that the editor gets a chance to single out an individual for praise, and it is probably less frequent that he does this, but it is getting close to the end of the year, and even the most hard bitten of editors, as no doubt most of the campus thinks this one is, may wax somewhat sentimental.

The individual to be singled out is named Jim Jordan, a name that has appeared only a very few times in The Daily Tar Heel and probably will give rise to the question, "Who's he?"

Well, he isn't president, he isn't editor, and he isn't a big wheel student politician, although he would be a capable person in any position he might want to fill.

This year he undertook a fairly thankless job, a job that would bring little notoriety but very much work. And he has made the job something, and the organization he heads worthwhile.

The freshman forum was little more than a good idea in past years, but under Jordan's leadership, it has been programming worthwhile intellectual outlets for freshmen during the entire year. He has had setbacks. A few weeks after rush this fall, half the original group ceased to attend meetings, but his work continued so that presently a great number of students either participate or take part in the work and programs of the forum. Indeed, of all the YMCA's trial balloons in the field of trying to stimulate intellectual interest, the Freshman Forum has been the most successful.

So if the acidity of the editor's tongue is curbed for at least one editorial, it is for good reason and a deserving person—Jim Jordan.

Reascns

When one starts searching for the reasons for intellectual apathy on this campus, one need look no farther than teacher deployment for one answer.

Of all the entering freshmen, only those who have demonstrated ability and who show a high aptitude and achievement on entrance examinations are offered the opportunity to study under full time faculty personnel during their first two years. Indeed, only those in special advanced sections are guaranteed this necessity.

However, the other 1100 freshmen, who for the most part need the guidance, stimulation, and experience of a person who has been teaching for several years are forced to take courses under graduate instructors.

Admittedly graduate instructors need practice teaching, if they are going to be capable instructors after they finish graduate work, but the sacrifical lambs of their struggling attempts to find themselves should not be those who need the most capable guidance.

Perhaps one could keep more freshmen in school than the slightly over 40 percent that do remain by graduation, if proper instruction and guidance was available for the entering freshman.

This, the University of North Carolina, is not yet an educational factory devoted to the production of teachers. It still is an institution of higher learning in which the attempt is made to take the brightest talents in the state and develop their minds so that they are thinking individuals. At least, this is what one would like to believe after reading the University catalogue.

It would not take too much effort to change the teacher deployment so that freshmen can have the instruction they vitally need. It might just breed a more solid University.

Legislature

The Student Legislature followed the path of a similar body at W. C. in passing a resolution pressing for budgetary increases for the University of North Carolina. It was not a controversial measure, but nevertheless it was a good one.

Editor:

The right of voluntary association is an inherent right under our system of government. Labor unions are associations of free men and women who are banded together to promote their common interests. In North Carolina and throughout the South in general there is strong and often violent opposition to the idea of organized labor. A recent incident as Franklin and the present situation in Henderson are examples of this. I would assume from my contacts with Carolina students that the Unions are the offenders in their minds. I believe that this assumption of theirs is in error. Therefore, briefly, I shall try to give our side of the picture.

First, let me state that I write as the editor of a labor newspaper and from the viewpoint of the AFL-CIO. However, facts are facts regardless of one's personal viewpoint.

The ugly picture of violence entered North Carolina several days ago when Robert Beame, a representative of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers was attacked in his motel room at Franklin by four men and brutally beaten. Files which he had were stolen and he was in effect kidnapped by a mob of about twenty-five men and "escorted" out of North Carolina. He was denied the protection of the law by the mayor, police, and sherrif's office in Franklin. He was refused the right to use a telephone and to contact the state patrol. Instead, with the assistance of the local officials, he was run out of the state. Union officials have requested a Senate investigation of the incident and the situation leading up to it.

Further violence entered the picture when the Harriet-Henderson Mills decided to re-open by hiring strikebreakers. A supervisor was apparently thrown from a window of the plant and was hospitalized. The facts of the incident are still obscure. It is a fact, however, that he was assisted by the strikers in getting into an ambulance and to a hospital.

Several minor incidents, for example the throwing of some firecrackers, were played up by the press in general. Then Governor Hodges got into the act by sending extra state patrolmen to the scene. This action was resented by union members who disliked seeing strikebreakers escorted through their picket lines by state patrolmen.

The next development was the brutal beating of Boyd Payton, Southern Vice President of the Textile Workers Union of America and chief negotiator for the Union in the dispute, by unknown thugs who lured him from his motel room by pretending to be an official of one of the Local Unions. This came even as Payton was making radio appeals for nonviolence in broadcasts paid for by the Union. The result of this act of willful violence created such an explosive atmosphere that presently some one hundred and thirty state patrolmen are in Henderson.

It would appear that the management of the Harriet-Henderson Mills has determined to "bust" the Union in their Mills. The Union is determined to fight for its existence and protect the rights of the workers. It is hoped that a fair and just agreement can be reached to end the strike. The Union is pledged to this end.

As for the violence, we have publicly called for a full investigation by both state and federal authorities. The Senate Rackets Committee should hold a complete investigation into the incidents of both Franklin and Henderson. Those responsible should be prosecuted. We of the labor movement have asked for the same. We have nothing to fear from the McClellan Committee. Can management say the same? To the present they have not. I only ask that labor be given a fair hearing. For in the same we rest our case.

I maintain the right of workers to organize and to remain organized — even in North Carolina.

On The Carolina Gentlemen

P. W. Carlton

What is a Carolina Gentleman? This question has been asked many times. Consider one aspect of the CG: Date habits.

The Carolina gentleman is undoubtedly the most intrepid hunter of "les femmes" on the face of this earth. He spends [illegible] cent of time pursuing them and the other ten either thinking about them or telling his friends about his latest conquests. . . (And oh, so egotistically!) His pursuit of women is almost scientific, so perfected is his modus operadi.

In class, the CG checks all the decent looking females, pinpoints their positions, then memorizes their names from the seating chart. After this its only a matter of time until he's on the most intimate terms with the unfortunate mademoiselles, who are often bewildered at being greeted by total strangers with pepsodent leers.

The CG is incorrigible. He can smell girls over distance of several miles. He can detect them in the dark. He is often used by less sensitive "Dookies" and State farmers to procure dates in difficult situations. Given a few minutes to sniff and peer, the CG unerringly points covey of ravishing beauties.

CG's are often guilty of the dirtiest forms of snaking. They steal dates with embarassing candor, never becoming ruffled by the discomfiture of the offended parties or by the stomped on toes and smashed fingers involved . . At WCUNC, the CG's descend like eagles (or is it the plague) upon the frightened campus, gobbling up the unfortunate students and spiriting them off to dens of iniquity like the Bore and Castle, etc. It is said that the dean of women at WC once attempted to intercede for a grief-stricken State senior who had just lost his date to an interprising Carolina Frosh, (who'd had limited snaking experience). She appealed to the sensibilities of the frosh's companions, who were properly appreciative of the situation. In the end, one of them gave the disgruntled state man a dollar to go see a movie and spent the evening trying to get the dean of women to date him. . (There is the possibility of some minor exaggeration here. . Maybe the boy was from Duke rather than State).

Yes, the Carolina Gentleman can be found in almost any environment fashionable or otherwise, in his ceaseless search for womanhood. One cannot help but admire his perserverance, his loyalty, his nerve. He accepts the most adverse conditions with staunch courage. Consider, for instance, the documented experience of an unfortunate CG. (This experience has been verified by historians who visited the field and walked over the entire course of action.)

The CG arrives in Greensboro in the afternoon, spends a pleasant evening chasing his non-student date around her apartment, then about midnight borrows her car and money to return to his own quarters. After several unsuccessful attempts to secure a late date on the Main streets of town and being chased away from the WC campus, at gunpoint, by the night watchmen, he sorrowfully turns with leaden tires toward that black hole of Morpheus, the dormitory (ha) of the YMCA. This place is enough to deter the staunchest troupel in his search for companions. Anyone who has ever spent a night in this foul dungeon knows the lack of exaggeration in this description . . It is a concrete room with 20-25 iron frame, sagging, double decker bunks, each holding a mattress apparently stuffed with golf balls, so lumpy is its surface. Each inmate is equipped with the blessings of the desk clerk and a blanket which exudes a distinctly equestrian odor. Draping his clothing over the bedpost, the weary CG rolls up in the wooly rag and attempts to sleep. The chorus of snores emitted by his heterogeneous grouping of companions is at least nauseating. It is hinted that a former CG composed his famous Cantata, "The Damnation of John Barleycorn," as the result of listening to this serenade for one night. This little interlude is a graphic representation of the trials that stouthearted CG's undergo each weekend just to be with their girls, to whom they are supremely faithful-as a group, you understand, not as individuals.

The CG is delightfully naughty, lying like a hound dog as the occasion demands. You'd be amazed at his capacity for sugar-coated untruth. (Ask any coed.) But still we must admire him. He represents the spirit of the num, the fire of youth, and all that is sporting and adventuresome. His stoic reply to excoriation or praise remains: "Vive le difference."

Harper's Bizarre

We walked into Lenoir Hall the other day, and the first person we encountered was a student worker, whistling listlessly as he pushed his broom about.

We greeted him, but received no answer. Again we spoke, and again there was no answer. Puzzled, we walked to the tobacco counter. "A pack of cigarettes, please."

No answer.

"Pall Mall, please."

The cashier handed us a pack.

"Twenty-three?""

A nod confirmed the price.

More confused, we walked to the line and filled our tray. At the cashier's stand the spell was finally broken. Smiling, we asked, "How are you today?"

"Seventy-three," the cashier said.

Dumfounded, we moved toward a clean table. As we ate, we noticed the prevading silence about us. Another friend of ours, a floor man, was working that shift. As he pushed his cart by the table, we spoke: "Hey. What's going on here? Why the silent treatment?"

"Why won't anyone talk?"

He couldn't stand it any longer. We saw a tear glint in his eye as he pushed the cart hurriedly away.

Perhaps fifteen minutes later this same floor man, usually a brilliant conversationist, passed our table again. A note fluttered down from his hand.

Catching the spirit of the thing, we hid it in our notebook and walked back to the dorm.

Locking the door, we opened the folded message and read: "Very sorry. Word came down from the boss. No more talking with customers or other workers. Cashiers, floor men, servers—all under strict surveilance. Don't know what penalty is—hear it's horrible. Very, very sorry."

The note was unsigned, but we burned it anyway, and scattered the ashes in secret places. —J. Harpie

Democracy

Sidney Dakar

Robert M. Hutchins has been one of our most ardent idealists in the field of political thought. Mr. Hutchins has always taken every opportunity to tell us how democracy is better than any other form of government. Today Mr. Hutchins still believes that democracy is the best form of government, but he is seriously questioning the belief that democracy will continue to be popular or, for that matter, whether democracy will continue to exist at all. Every thoughtful American should read Mr. Hutchins' article in the Saturday Review. When such idealists as Mr. Hutchins start to doubt the effectiveness of democracy, it is time we all did a little soul searching.

It seems to me that democracy can only function effectively in the lands of plenty. Every week or so we hear that another country has given up the experiment in democracy and has taken on some form of dictatorial rule. Sooner or later we are going to be forced to ask ourselves whether most people really want democracy. It would be an understatement to say that the vast majority of the earth's multitudes have much stronger desires than a love for democracy, hunger is only one. It seems obvious that the 600 million in China prefer to eat rather than to have democracy.

When we consider other situations, no such simple answer will suffice. The most recent example of major importance is the French who voted overwhelmingly in favor of giving up some freedom and putting a single man in control of their fate. We might next ask ourselves if people prefer security to democracy. Certainly the French were not starving when they voted to give up some freedom. They certainly were not ignorant masses, which is the way many people answer the China question. The French are, in fact, some of the best educated and culturally proud people in the world.

Take Germany as another example. During the thirties much intellectual activity was centered in Germany. It was in this very atmosphere that Hitler rose to an all-powerful position. Many people say that the majority of German people did not want Hitler in control, but this point is debatable. It is rather hard to see how such a mass movement of such fanatical and devoted nature could be effected without at least the passive acquiescence of the populace.

Actually, there are plenty of examples right here in the U. S which show that people prefer security to freedom. Most of the pressure groups in Washington are not crying for freedom but to be relieved from it. Certainly the American farmers do not want freedom. Certainly the businessmen in this country do not want freedom. All we can hear is their cry to be relieved from the harsh world of competition. I believe their phrase is "protection from 'inferior' overseas workers."

After considering some of these factors, it is difficult to see how democracy is going to survive without harder work on our part. We have not only been unable to spread democracy over the world but we have not even convinced most people that it is the best form of government. What does freedom of the press, mean to a peasant who cannot read? What does freedom of speech mean to the man who has no radio and who lives in the jungles or deserts? The vast majority of people over the world are not interested in these intellectual concepts. We in America preach "freedom to," but the majority of the masses over the world would be very happy if they could only achieve "freedom from."

The Infirmary

Ron Shumate

The following is a diary, in prose form, of a few days spent in a daze in a place called The Infirmary.

First of all let's decide just what the Infirmary is.

It is a hospital—of sorts. Webster says an infirmary is a "Hospital, or place where the infirm or sick are lodged and nursed, or where patients who are not resident are treated."

We entered said infirmary or an otherwise wheery-beery-boh Tuesday morn. We had good reason to be admitted to this place as we were one of Webster's infirmed persons. But we won't go into the doctor's diagnoses just now.

First of all we were given a bed in a 8-bed ward. This place was in reality only a room—why it is called a "ward" will be most apparent later.

Next we were given a quaint little cuplet of pills—two white pills and one very pretty pink capsule. Next a nurse crammed a thermometer in our mouth—this was the mere beginning of a long series of temp-taking. At the same time, the nursie grabbed our wrist to take pulse. Luckily, we still had pulse.

Soon came a vampire. She was one of the prettiest vampires we've seen in some time—quite unlike most vampires. She very ardently and skillfully extracted a vial full of our own blood—red blood; then she dumped it into a tube which was in a "Frosty Treat" Dixie cup.

In parting she said "Blood always leaves me speechless." We never did figure that one out.

Later on came lunch. Strange as it may seem, the meal (and those to follow) wasn't the worst we've ever choked down—but certainly didn't measure up to Howard Johnson's.

Wednesday was a realitively uneventful day—if that's at all possible in the place.

Thursday we got out for a few hours to attend classes. We were quite weak, both mentally and physically, from being bed-ridden for two days.

We wandered back around one of the clock. By this time we felt great. As the infirmary is supposed to be a place for the infirmed (as was noted above) the administration (meaning doctors, nurses and orderlies) were appalled to learn that we felt well.

Immediately the wheels began to turn to change this shocking turn of events. We were given two ounces of castor oil. (They HAD to give it to us, because we'd have certainly never bought the stuff on our own!!).

Therefore and thereafter, until the dawning of the following day, we had no rest. All through the night (and this was no song either) we tossed, turned and made frequent mad dashes for another sector of the building.

Friday was worse.

We had a breakfast which consisted of two pieces of toast, jelly, knife, spoon, fork, napkin and chicory—er, coffee. (Get the point?).

The reason for the budgeary breakfast (meaning "small") was that we were scheduled for x-rays at 1:15 p.m. We were told that there would be no lunch for us—until after the x-rays. But we had a lunch of fish, salad, beans, more chicory, pie and other real foods. We never did figure that one out, either.

So, at one p.m. we were taken—in a wheelchair—down to X-ray. We had been up walking around for some time—and were capable of walking still more. After that castor oil, if one couldn't walk . . we shudder to think of it. But we went to X-ray in a wheelchair, nevertheless.

But on the way to X-ray we stopped off at the office to answer questions for some form of form. Strangely enough, we did not have to sign a non-Communist oath.

Following the question and answer period we were presented with a bill. Guess they wanted to be sure we got the bill before we went to X-ray, in case something drastic happened.

So we sat in the waiting room—which is very appropriately named. For wait we did. For three solid hours we waited. But we don't have too many complaints about the waiting. We had plenty of time to read. We read such magazines as "Time," "Life," "U. S. News and World Report," "Reader's Digest," and a clever little thing on cancer—a nice cheery sort of thing. (Note: All of the above mentioned magazines were at least six months old). Finally we were summoned. To another waiing room across the hall. (Well, at least it was Some progress!).

But here things were different. A female kept dashing through looking efficient—in more ways than one. We never did figure out whether she was wearing a sweater or just had fuzzy blue skin. From the looks of things, the latter seems more likely! As someone once said, she had curves in places where most girls don't even have places. She was a real deck of cards. Stacked!

Then there was the receptionist from the other waiting room who scurried in every so often with little green forms—and I'd almost swear she piled all of them on top of our little green form.

The gentleman (we know he was, because he offered us a cigarette when we were on the verge of a nicotine fit) who was running things in X-ray was a very congenial type of fellow. And how he managed to be congenial with all the hustle, bustle and the blue-skinned, buxon blonde we never did figure out.

Finally (and we nearly mean that literally) we got into the X-ray room. A raven-haired little thing plopped us down on a steel table and commenced—to take X-rays.

Finally she finished and we paraded back to our room. Walking. After the ride down we sure could've used a ride back. Guess the wheelchair was out of gas. Or else the orderly was off in a back room somewhere taking a snooze.

That night was rather routine also. "Turn off that TV. Out with he lights." This was the cry of the nurse at precisely 10 p.m. However, after much persuasion, bribery and so forth, she allowed us to stay up until every bit of 10:30. (She'll probably lose her pulse-taking license for this).

Came the dawn we were again rudely awakened and another thermometer was crammed down our gullet. And at 7 a.m. we rolled out of the sack (literally) to have our beds made up.

And finally, at 9 a.m., following a hard-boiled egg and prune breakfast, we were given our walking papers.

But we broke another rule by running—out of the place.

Moral: Don't call us, we'll call you!

Rev. Jordan Addresses Community Church Sun.

The Rev. Clarence Jordan will be guest speaker at the regular Sunday morning worship service of the Chapel Hill Community Church Sunday. The service will be at 11 a.m. in Hill Music Hall.

This was an attempt to create a truly Christian community of committed souls, pacifists, men and women of all races, and a community of common property ownership.

REV. CLARENCE JORDAN

He founded the community on 500 run-down acres of farm land, and introduced progressive farming techniques to the farmers of the region and was able to raise the standard of living of the entire area.

Racial tension flared and buildings of the community were bombed and many installations completely destroyed shortly after the Supreme Court decision.

The farm had to be converted to a pecan processing plant to supply a livelihood for its members because all forms of credit were cut off and insurances were cancelled.

The Rev. Jordan was born in Talbotton, Ga., and educated in the public schools of Talbot Co. He graduated from the University of Georgia with a B. S. in agriculture.

He entered the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville Ky., receiving his Th M. in May 1936.

was presented by Tom Cordle (SP). If the bill is sanctioned, the Student Lgeislature would recommend that: slow signs be erected at the southeast corner of Cobb for traffic entering from Country Club Road and at the fork for traffic entering from Raleigh Road, that the bump at the entrance of the same road be fixed and speed breakers in the pavement be placed across the Cobb parking lot entrance.

Scoring big with slick ideas like the Electronic Secretary® answering unit, product of America's second largest telephone system

Your phone is always "tended" when an Electronic Secretary unit is on your "line." For it answers calls in your absence and takes messages as well!

Here's how it works. When your phone rings, a recorded voice informs the caller that you are out—and invites him to leave his name, number and any information he wishes you to have.

When you return—or when you phone in—all calls are repeated to you word for word. Result: no more "missed" messages, no more lost business, no more worrying about leaving the phone unattended any hour of the day or night.

This is just one of many ways Gen Tel is adding new dimensions to telephone communication. We know that, in an America which is expanding fast on all fronts, it is imperative to expand both telephone service and telephone versatility.

And we're meeting the challenge by developing new products and better methods for bringing more and more people together.

Maryland Again Favored For ACC Indoor Crown

Maryland's coming loaded again to the track wars and, according to all the advance evidence, the Terps, king pins in recent years, will be odds-on favorites in the sixth annual Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games in Woollen Gymnasium here Saturday, March 14.

Last Year, Jim Kehoe's talented track and field men ran up a winning score of 52 2-5 points, trailed by North Carolina (29 1-5), and Duke (18 1-2) and South Carolina (18 1-2). They are bringing back their aces, along with a group of sparkling freshmen, which makes them appear to be stronger than ever.

Terps Have Three Champs

The Terps will have three defending champions in Elliott Thompson in the broad jump, Tom Tait in the high jump, and Don Whittaker in the 60 dash. In all, eight winners of last winter's 11 individual events (excluding the relays) will be on hand.

"It should be the finest Indoor Games in history," says Dale Ransom, chairman of the ACC track committee. Director C. P. (Chuck) Erickson and meet manager Joe Hilton, who have been setting up the machinery for the mammoth track show, are in agreement.

Only Burr Grimm, the distance runner, is missing from the ranks of 1958 Terp winners, and most of their other point makers of last year will be back. Brilliant sophomores who, as freshmen, cleaned up the 1958 freshman division, add strength to their team.

DAVE SCURLOCK
DEFENDS TITLES — Carolina middle-distance man Dave Scurlock, winner of both the 600-yard and the half-mile run in last year's ACC Indoor Games will defend his marks next Saturday.

Tar Heel Stars

North Carolina's Tar Heels will have a group of challengers to Maryland's dominance in distance runner Wayne Bishop, half miler-sprinter Dave Scurlock, sprinter John Sylvester, hurdler Linden Deborde, miler Cowles Liipfert and pole vaulter Ward Sims, among others.

Duke's standouts, all of whom collected points last winter, include distance runners Cary Weisiger and Tom Bazemore, sprinter Jim Elder and jumper Jim Booher. South Carolina will be headed by shop put champion Dave Coates, low and high hurdler title holder Don Goodroe and celebrated distance runner Billy Latham.

Activity for the meet, part of which will be televised over WUNC-TV, will begin Saturday morning March 14, with the main program opening Saturday night at 6:30 o'clock.

Wrestlers Win Four

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—Four Carolina wrestlers headed into the finals in the Atlantic Coast Conference wrestling championships held yesterday and today at the University of Virginia here.

In overall team points the University of Maryland, perennial kingpin of the conference, lead with 18 team points, while Carolina and Virginia are tied for second with 8 points.

Duke and Wake Froest tied for fourth with 4 points.

Henry Rhyne, Perrin Henderson, Dave Atkinson, and John Matney headed into the finals for Carolina to face representatives of the four other schools. Maryland has eight wrestlers in the finals.

Atkinson was able to decision Warren Duke in the 167 lb. division, and Matney pinned Duke's Crummie in the 191 lb. group.

Carolina's losses included London who was pinned by Virginia's Wise, Champlin who was pinned by Carlton of Wake Forest, Perrini who was decisioned by Giondi of Maryland, Russell who was decisioned by Besmier of Maryland.

Kincey who was pinned by Maryland's Dean, and Hurley who was decisioned in the heavyweight division by Virginia's Standing.

FINAL FIGURES

York Larese, out last season with injuries, led the Carolina basketball team in the regular season with 324 points, an average of 15.7 per game. He also had the best shooting percentage, .467.

Center Dick Kepley was the squad's top rebounder with 151 and Doug Moe was second with 142.

WRIGHT WINS

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — (AP) — Katherine Mickey Wright, the blonde bomber of the Ladies Professional Golf Assn. tour, Thursday shot one of her finest competitive rounds, a rain-sodden two-under-par 70, and took the first round lead in the $6,000 Jacksonville Women's Open.

State Whips Virginia 66-63; In ACC Finals

North Carolina State's Wolfpack withstood a strong Virginia challenge to outlast the Cavaliers 66-63 in the semi-final round of the ACC basketball tournament in Raleigh last night.

State will meet the winner of the Carolina-Duke game in the finals tonight.

Virginia led most of the way, but it was State's George Stepanovich and Bob MacGillivray as well as State's superior bench strength that made the difference.

In both halves Virginia came out ahead, but were soon overtaken by the Wolfpack quintet.

Statistically State outshot the Cavaliers with a 37 percent field goal accuracy mark against Virginia's 35 percent. Virginia, on the other hand, compiled a phenomenal 87 per cent free throw average against State's 69 per cent, but this didn't tell the story as Virginia fouled State more times.

High scorer for the evening was Guard Paul Adkins of Virginia with 18 points, as he was the team's sparkplug throughout the evening. Herb Busch was second high for the Cavaliers with 16, but compiled three fouls early in the game so that his service was limited in the first half.

Top man for the Wolfpack was Stepanovich, who rebounded well and scored sixteen points. MacGillivray and Richter each hit for 14, while Lou Pucillo hit for eleven.

The game was tied six times in the second half before State went ahead to stay with two minutes left on a tap in by MacGillivray. Bill Metzger fouled out and Pucillo hit two free throws to put the Wolfpack ahead by four.

Adkins converted a foul, but that was as close as Virginia ever got, as State went ahead by five 64-59 on two free throws by MacGillivray.

State started the half, leading by three points and held on to a slim lead for about four minutes. Virginia tied the game three times before going ahead 50-48. For the next ten minutes, it was all Virginia, but not enough to clinch the final decision.

State led at the end of the first half, but the Wolfpack had to fight to get that lead. State's lead in the entire first half was at its highest point only 3 points. This was the margin at the end of the half when the Wolfpack led 38-35.

Virginia scored first on a shot by Metzger, but a lay-up by Stepanovich quickly tied the score. State then went ahead 4-2, 5-4, and 7-4 on a toss by Pucillo. However, within a minute the Cavaliers had tied the score and went ahead.

For the next five minutes Virginia built its lead up to eight points on a shot by Metzger, and from then on they tried to hold on to their lead.

UNIVERSITY VOLLEYBALL

Now that the University Volleyball League has reached mid-season, three teams are now enjoying the lead in the league.

Carl Blyth with his White Team hold a 3-1 record at mid-season. Along with his team is Bo Shepard with the Green Team, and Henry House with his Blue Team. Each of these teams have 3-1 records.

In fourth place is Pete Mullis and his Red Team with a 2-2 record. He is followed by Mike Ronman and the Yellow Team who is presently holding a 1-3 record. Last is Marvin Allen and the Grey Team, and they have four defeats in four games.

Football Coaches To Stage Clinic

DURHAM—Coaches Bill Murray of Duke, Jim Tatum of North Carolina, Earle Edwards of N. C. State and Paul Amen of Wake Forest will spill out their coaching secrets when the second annual Dixie Footbal Clinic is held at Duke University, March 12-13-14.

These four outstanding grid mentors, all of whom employ a different style of play and coach at schools which have long been arch-rivals on the gridiron, compose the "faculty" of the clinic.

Varied Formations

The visiting coaches will be able to get every phase of fooball that is taught. Tatum uses the split-T and at times has employed the single wing, Murray uses his own adaptation of the split-T, with lonesome end thrown in, Edwards uses them all with his multiple offense, while Amen is versed in the Army style of football as originated by Coach Red Blaik.

In their lectures and in live demonstrations on the field the four coaches will cover fundamental line drills and techniques, pass protection versus defensive tactics, he multiple offense, all phases of the kicking game, developing of line skills, variations of pass offense, blocking patterns, changing defenses and defensive drills, the belly series, goal line and short yardage defenses, the split-T offense, the sweep series, stunting and angling, organization of practices, and many other departments of the game.

Lecture Schedule

The schedule calls for each coach to lecture for one hour each day and for live demonstrations each afternoon by members of the football teams of the four institutions who will be engaging in spring practices at the time.

Murray and Tatum are veteran head coaches and rank with the top 10 in he nation. Tatum won national acclaim at Maryland while Murray is in the unusual position of having run the gamut of coaching—high school, small college and major college.

While Edwards and Amen are more or less newcomers in the head coaching field, each of them has years of experience as assistants at two of the top football schools in the nation—Edwards at Michigan State and Amen at Army.

Reservations for the clinic can be made by writing Dixie Football Clinic, Duke Station, Durham, N.C.

VEECK READY

CHICAGO — (AP) — The way was cleared in probate court Thursday for Bill Veeck and his syndicate to purchase controlling interest in the Chicago White Sox.

Judge Robert Dunne dismissed a petition by Sox Vice President Chuck Comiskey seeking to prevent his sister, Dorothy Comiskey Rigney, from selling her 54 per cent of the club to Veeck and seven colleagues.

Veeck exercised his option to buy out Dorothy on Feb. 17 and has until March 31 to complete the $2,700,000 deal which would leave Chuck a minority stockholder with 46 per cent of the American League club.

Student Party Readies For 'Big 4' Nominations

By STAN BLACK

Candidates for SP's nomination of the "big four" student government offices have been lining up support during the past weeks for this meeting.

The SP meeting has been set for 7 p.m. Monday in Roland Parker I and II when the party will name candidates for president, vice president, secretary and treasurer of the student body in the April 7 elections.

In the race for the presidential nomination are Ralph Cummings and Norman B. Smith. Cummings is now vice president of the student body. Smith is chairman both of Student Legislature's Ways and Means Committee and of the Committee on State Affairs.

Equally interested in the SP "big four" nominations are two prospective candidates for vice president.

The position of secretary of the student body will probably go to either Martha Morgan or Ann Lucas.

Thus far, Erwin Fuller appears to be the only active candidate for the SP nomination for treasurer of the student body.

Another nomination to be made Monday night is the Student Party candidate for secretary of the senior class.

Two candidates for editor of the Yackety Yack, Jerry Adams and Mike Smith, will appear before SP to seek the party endorsement. Both Adams and Smith were present at last week's SP meeting. At that meeting, they were asked if they would consider running as co-editors for the pisition. The two will have made some decision by the SP meeting Monday night.

PHOSPHORUS for the sundial so people can tell the time at night . . . that's an idea, but the senior class gift to the University probably will be something a little different. To decide on just what the class gift will be, members of the senior class Gift Committee are now getting suggestions from seniors. Members of this committee are seated, left to right, Mary Montgomery, Cami Pilcher, Betsy Sojourner, Lee Arbogast and Harley Shuford, chairman; and standing, left to right, Lou White, Rudy Edwards, Bob Carter and John Whitaker.

Senior Class Looking For Gift Suggestions

The suggestion box in Y Court Monday through Friday this week is for seniors who have ideas for a senior class gift to the University.

From these suggestions, the senior class Gift Committee will make the finale decision of what gift the class of '59 will leave.

This year, the senior class has between $400 and $800 to spend on the gift.

In past years, senior classes have given such things as a trophy case in Woollen Gymnasium, a globe for the Library, the loud speaker system in Memorial Hall, a rostrum for Memorial Hall, a punch bowl for Graham Memorial, stone benches by the Old Well, records for Graham Memorial and several portraits.

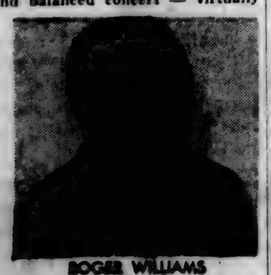
Uses No Program

"No Program?" Many a ticket-holder is heard to ask the usher at a Roger Williams concert.

There's no economy drive in the printing department — the reason is simply that even Williams doesn't know what his program will be from show to show, day to day. He prefers to "feel out" the audience, savor its response and arrange his program as he goes, providing his listeners with the style and kind of music to which they are most responsive.

Williams' versality and a repertory that ranges through all categories of music make it possible for Williams to present a polished and balanced concert — virtually "ad lib."



ROGER WILLIAMS

Williams will appear here in Memomrial Hall tonight at 8 o'clock. Carolina students will be admitted to the concert on presen tation of identification cards. Student wives may purchase tickets for $1. Townspeople may buy tickets at the door for $2, but only after 7:45 p.m.

The concert is part of Williams' 12-week coast-to-coast tour. In addiion, he has a schedule of recordings and television committments. His records are no sideline for him. In only a few years he has sold more recordings than any other pianist.

His well-known recording of "Autumn Leaves" is an example of his popularity in the record field.

"Till," "Almost Paradise," "Near You," "Songs of the Fabulous Fifties" or the "Fabulous Century" are some of his other more well-know records nad albums.

A pair of guitars and bass will back up Williams during parts of the concert. Williams will also use his miniature piano, "Sebastian," during the program.

ROBERT FROST
. . . THE poet

Poet Frost To Appear Here Fri.

Words of wisdom from the dean of American poets will be offered UNC students Friday when Robert Frost returns to Chapel Hill to give a public reading.

Frost will speak at 8:30 p.m. in Hill Hall, reading some of his poems and commenting on life in general.

The English Department will sponsor his talk, and Prof. and Mrs. Clifford P. Lyons will act as hosts to Frost during his stay in Chapel Hill.

Frost, who will be 85 years old on March 26, wil be returning to his farm in Ripton, Vt., after a winter stay in Florida. He spends two months each year at Amherst, Mass., lecturing and advising students at Amherst College.

The four-time ulitzer Prize winner holds many honorary degrees including those from Oxford and Cambridge in England.

State Beats Carolina For ACC Title

Khrushchev Demands Withdrawal

BERLIN, — (AP) — Soviet Premier Khrushchev came to Berlin Saturday and demanded the withdrawal of Allied troops from this former German capital.

He declared "Order must be brought to Berlin."

Then he went on to define that order as acceptance of the Soviet proposal to transform West Berlin into a so-called demilitarized free city.

Khrushchev also renewed his demand for the signing of a World War II peace treaty that would give recognition to East Germany as a state.

"We are waiting for an answer (from the western powers) to our proposals," Khrushchev said. 'We hope the answer will be sensible."

Khrushchev came here from the trade fair city of Leipzig, where he spent four days.

A cavalcade of more than 20 black limousines sped Khrushchev and his party to East Berlin along a 140-mile stretch of heavily guarded autobahn. Tommygunners were posted at the highway bridges.

Accompanying Khrushchev to the giant rally on Stalinallee, East Berlin's show street, were his East German hosts, Communist Party boss Walter Ulbricht and Premier Otto Grotewohl.

Khrushchev looked tired on his arrival for a three-day visit in East Berlin. Bareheaded and wearing a light gray topcoat, he was not his usual bouncing self on the flag-decked speaker's platform.

He spoke in a hoarse voice for only 10 minutes before the bored-looking crowd.

Before leaving Leipzig, Krushchev warned the West of the peril of a new war and declared the Soviet Union never would permit the liquidation of communism in East Germany.

He told 2,000 trade unionists from East and West Germany that a small incident in the explosive Berlin crisis could trigger World War III.

Tar Heels Still Go To NCAA Tournament

RALEIGH — "Our boys tried their hearts out, but they were just defeated by a better team tonight." So spoke Carolina Coach Frank McGuire as he accepted the ACC invitation to play in the NCAA eliminations immediately after State College had beaten his Tar Heels 80-56 for the Conference championship.

There was no doubt about the fact that the Wolfpack wanted the big one as they led the whole way in a game that had virtually everything. For State mentor Everett Case, the smashing victory of his team in the finals more than made up for the two regular season defeats that Carolina had pinned on his squad.

The winners were led by a terrific individual performance on the part of senior guard Lou Pucillo who threw in 23 points in his last collegiate appearence.

The fans in attendance at the Colliseum got a little something extra for their money when the lights went out with less than six minutes left remaining in the second half. A little over a minute later when they came back on the clock showed 5:50 left in the game and the question of elapsed time had to be settled before action could continue.

More electrical "atmosphere" came less than 2 minutes later; this time the clock at the scoreboard went out of order.

The trouble with Carolina last night can be summed up in a word: "State." The Tar Heels did not play as well as they have on occasions this year, but the Wolfpack was tremendous.

The aggressive play of the winners was the key to victory as they got off 73 shots at the basket compared to Carolina's 47 and hauled in 22 more rebounds.

In the early stages of the second half the Heels made their run for he lead and came within two of tying it up when Lee Shaffer hit on a technical foul try to make the score 42-40 State at the 15:11 mark.

For Carolina, the key play of the game came with 10:11 remaining and the Tar Heels 4 points down. At this juncture the two officials momentarily disagreed on a call as to whether the infraction was a charging or a blocking foul. Referee Charley Eckman prevailed and MacGillivray converted a three point play to give State a margin of seven rather than have Harvey Salz on the foul line for Carolina.

State took command of the opening half right from the horn and were never headed. Richter and Pucillo both hit on layups to give the Wolfpack a quick 4-0 lead.

Carolina came within 1 point of tying the score twice but always fell behind before they could pull even. At the 13:25 mark Shaffer hit on a jump shot to cut the State margin to 11-10. Four minutes later Doug Moe made good on a pair of free throws and again Carolina was witnin one, this time at 18-17.

Yack Budget Approved By Board

The Publications Board Friday approved the Yackety-Yack budget for the coming year, after making numerous amendments.

The Board authorized Chairman Harold O'Tuel to present a bill to the Student Legislature asking that the Ram and Ewe, the campus humor magazine, which has yet to see publication this year, be dropped from the list of campus publications, and that the money that was appropriated to it be reverted to the general surplus.

Some of the money, O'Tuel pointed out, must be used to pay debts incurred last year, but this, he added, would not amount to more than $50.

O'Tuel obtained the approval of the Publications Board on a bill, currently before the Student Legislature to appropriate $500 to the new campus publication, Playbill, a program magazine for various campus events. He elaborated on this measure by explaining that moneys from the Ram and Ewe could be applied to Playbill.

Many changes in the Yack budget were made, so that the budget would square with expected enrollment increase and would not have any luxury items. Editor Cameron Cooke declared himself satisfied with the final result.

University Party Will Get Platform

The University Party members at a meeting Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II. The Platform Committee will present the platform for final approval for the Party.

Party Chairman John Minter has reminded all the candidates that the "UP headquarters" are open from 2-5 p.m. Monday through Friday in the Yackety-Yack office of Graham Memorial. All U candidates have been asked to check by the office several times a week to keep the publicity committee informed on their actions.

Carter And Watkins Give Recital Tuesday

Joel Carter and Glenn Watkins, both of the UNC Music Department, will present a recital of songs by Schumann, Poulenc, Bacon and Hanson in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. The concert is open to the public.

Featured on Tuesday's program, the third in a series sponsored by the UNC Music Department, is Robert Schumann's song cycle, "Dichterliebe." The set of 16 songs was composed in 1840 to poems from Heine's "Buch der Lieder."

Ernest Bacon, director of the music school at the University of Syracuse, is the composer of dramatic, choral and orchestral works. Dr. Carter, a baritone, will sing four of his songs set to poetry by Robert Burns and Walter Whitman. Dr. Watkins, pianist, will accompany Carter during the program.

"Le Bestiaire" was composed by Francis Poulenc to six poems from "The Book of Beasts" by Apollonaire. Written in 1919, the work was originally scored for voice and chamber orchestra. Each song describes some creature from the animal kingdom.

Carter and Watkins have chosen an opera aria as the final selection on their program. "Oh, 'tis on earth defiled" is from Howard Hanson's opera, "Merry Mount," based on a story by Nathaniel Hawthorne and produced at the Metropolitan in 1934.

Dr. Carter, chairman of voice instruction in the UNC Music Department, directs the Chapel Hill Choral Club and the UNC glee Club. Dr. Watkins, assistant professor in organ and theory, joined the University faculty last September. He was formerly associated with Southern Illinois University.

Interfraternity Council Calls Deferred Rush Impractical

Deferred rush is impractical from a financial standpoint and is detrimental both for freshmen and the Uiversity.

In a statement of reasons for opposing the delay of rush from the fall to the spring semester, the Interfraternity Council listed seven reasons for its view that "deferred rush is impractical and undesirable."

The IFC's statement said, "The possible benefits of deferred rush are greatly outweighed by the damage that would be done to fraternities."

The IFC's views on deferred rush were incorporated in a statement released Saturday, "Since this matter affects fraternities more acutely than anyone else, we feel that fraternities should make the decision for or against deferred rush, not an outside group."

Heading the lists of reasons against deferred rush was the belief that fraternities could not bear the financial burden. In the statement, the IFC has estimated that expenses during the five-month wait under a deferred rush system would be shared by one-third to one-fourth fewer persons. This would mean that the bill per member would be raised one-third to one-fourth.

In addition, the financial burden would adversely affect fraternities with mortgages or those that might want to undertake new construction or additions to heir houses.

The IFC statement further pointed out that dirty rush would be difficult, if not impossible, to control under a deferred rush system.

Not only will deferred rush have a detrimental effect on fraternities, but the freshmen themselves will lose a number of benefits the IFC believes.

The freshman would not have the special attention from such fraternity programs as the "Big Brothers" and study halls. The "Big Brother" orients the freshman to Carolina and helps him feel at ease in his "home away from home." The study halls are incentives for the freshman to make his C average for fraternity membership.

The freshman would also lose other special benefits in a shortened, weakened pledge training during the second semester.

In addition, the freshman would be discriminated against if silence were imposed for a full semester.

The University itself would be adversly affected, the IFC statement charged, because the dormitories would have no relief from crowded facilities until the second semester.

Underlying much of reasoning of the IFC against deferred rush is the voluntary aspect of pledging. Since freshmen are free to join or not to join, the IFC believes the matter of rush should be left to fraternities which are affected by the system used.

The IFC's statement was drawn up by a special committee, headed by Walker Blanon.

An Announcement

Defense Secretary Neil McElroy announced yesterday that the United States was safe from surprise attack. This is a mighty pronouncement, but in the light of present day reality it means very little.

It is estimated that it takes approximately twenty minutes for an intercontinental ballistics missile to negotiate the distance between Russia and the United States. It is possible that after fifteen minutes of flight, the rocket might be detected and preparations for enemy attack will be underway. Yet, this isn't quite enough time to protect the United States from destruction and a large percentage of the population from slaughter. Sure, we knew it was coming, but so what!

There are some statements that are significant and are historically worthwhile, and then there are those like the Secretary of Defense's.

Pioneer IV

The launching of Pioneer IV is a momentous achievement and U.S. scientists are to be congratulated for their work.

There ought to be a sobering note injected into this week of happy achievement, and this note is that the Russians accomplished the same feat about a month before.

Apparently the missile lag gap is closing, but it is equally obvious that it has not closed yet.

Why

The reason for the above image shattering is simple. The people of the United States have a tendency to be smug and complacement and have a desire to rest on their laurels.

Yet, in this age there is no safety or security without work, and intelligent thought, and people who have propensity for leisure usually are not able to muster either.

It may be well true that the United States has developed a successful anti-missile-missile, and it may be well true that any massive preparation for war could be detected, but it is not true that the United States is safe.

It may be well true that the United States has a rocket orbiting around the sun, but it is not true that the United States is ahead in the missiles race.

In a rapidly moving world there is no time for complacency. And for those who might think that the United States is in wonderful shape, one might point again to the fact that the Gaither report has not been released. When it is, the public might have some indication that the U.S. is in good shape.

A Suggestion

One student suggested the editor write an editorial in favor of reducing the tuition of foreign students to the state levels on the basis that these students are a great addition to the community are worth the money in their contribution.

Complying with this request, the editor so advocates. The campus climate is indeed better if the area represented is diverse and if an interchange of ideas from other parts of the world is available.

On A Letter

Frank McGuire's letter to the Education Foundation is currently a subject of controversy. Every indication points to the fact that McGuire and Chancellor Aycock are right in their estimation of the situation, and if so, their stand is courageous.

It is unfortunate that Coach McGuire said Friday that the letter should not have been made public. McGuire is right that too much has been made of this already, but if a person has the courage to send a statement of his feelings to 600 people, he has somewhat of an obligation to back it up publicly without crying about the lack of tact of the press. A letter of this sort is public information.

The World News In Review

Josie Morris

As May 27 comes closer and closer the newspapers are carrying more and more of "what are we going to do?" articles involving top government officials. This week is no exception.

The cold war continues. Last week President Eisenhower said he will not budge an inch; Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev said he will not budge an inch. Although the tension still mounts, perhaps a ray of hope can be seen.

The Russian premier, Khrushchev, reversed himself and conditionally agreed to a foreign ministers' conference on the Berlin crisis in notes that warned the German issue could cause war "a hundred times more serious" than all past conflicts.

Khrushchev withdrew his rejection of the western plan for a foreign ministers' meeting after pleas from visiting Prime Minister Harold MacMillan of Great Britain. Observers took it as a victory for the British statesman who was officially reported "cheerful" after six glum days of icy negotiations.

The Soviet notes handed to the ambassadors of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany urged a summit conference as having "the greatest chance" of success.

But could the Russians pull a surprise attack on the United States? Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy says this is almost impossible.

McElroy, speaking at a news conference Thursday, said that the preparations and military movements required for an attack with convential arms probably would be observable and known.

And, he said, it is believed a surprise attack with missiles in the forseeable future is almost impossible.

McElroy also stated this week that the United States' military forces are ready to back up President Eisenhower's avowed determination to stand fast on American rights in Berlin.

"We think we have a definite offensive superiority over the Russians at this time," McElroy said discussing the situation with the House Space Committee.

News of a cold war and news of a hot war. This is what the North Carolina newspaper reader got this week.

The Harriet-Henderson Cotton Mills continue to strike.

Violence broke out once again as an ugly-tempered crowd of some 200 persns formed a gantlet outside the struck South Henderson textile mill Tuesday. The crowd became a howling mob when a worker brandished a pistol.

The crisis occurred at the end of the work shift. This was the beginning of the third week of limited operations of the mills, struck for 16 weeks.

The crowd let the first three cars of workers emerge from the plant through jeers. They met the fourth with a volly of rocks and sticks.

On signal, a dozen highway patrol cars glided swiftly to the plant gates, seven from one direction, five from another.

The crowd, shuting defiance, fanned out. About 20 patrolmen and officers formed a line, facing the group.

About 200 yards away, a worker's car stopped. Someone shouted, "He pulled a gun." The mob rushed the car, but the worker roared away.

One officer said, he thought he heard a shot amid the din, but he couldn't be sure. No one was hurt.

Several car windows were broken and three policemen were hit by rocks bouncing off the cars. The most serious injury was a bruised arm suffered by one policeman.

Turning to things a bit higher than strikes, we see that the United States has added another planet to outer space. America's Pioneer IV lunar probe has passed the moon and is moving into a permanent orbit around the sun, scientists said Wednesday.

Dr. Hower J. Stewart, chief of planning for national Acronautic and space Administration, said the tiny man-made planet set off from Cape Caneveral, Florida would have a lifetime "comparable to the life of our universe."

In Raleigh more down-to-earth events were taking place. Constitutional changes to improve North Carolina's system of justice were proposed in identical bills offered in the House and Senate Thursday.

Democratic party Chairman Paul Butler, speaking in New Jersey, discounted Adlai Stevenson's candidacy for the 1960 presidential race.

He pointed out that he thought John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts ts was the frontrunner at the present time, but that Jersey's Governor Robert Meyner, Sen. Stuart Symington, and Hubert Humphrey were among to potential candidates.

Rioting broke out in Bolivia, as demonstrators protested a TIME magazine article by stoning the U. S. embassy in La Paz, forcing members of the embassy to evacuate the city.

More violence broke out in a different area of the world as bloodshed mounted in South Africa.

Following the declaration and the arrest, rioting broke out and 23 Africans were reported dead Wednesday in Northern Rhodesia, as rioters were ruthlessly surpressed.

A bill to make Hawaii the 50th state was reported unanimously favorable by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in the Senate. The chances for passage of the bill appeared good.

The visit in all probability would be concerned with mutual problems relating to the Berlin crisis.

A U. S.-Pakistani anti-aggression treaty touched off a furor in India, when Indian communist representatives brought up the question of whether the treat was aimed at India.

Pakistani spokesmen replied that the treaty was aimed at all aggressors whether it be the communists, the Indians, or the forces of Kashmir.

United States' spokesmen pointed out that the treaty applied only to communist aggression.

The Good Earth

The First Duty Of A University Professor

Editor:

I am deeply disturbed by the underlying assumptions of the Advisory Budget Commissions recommendations concerning the University at Chapel Hill. I refer to two ideas made explicit in the recommendations: (1) the faculty at Chapel Hill has a 'low work load' and therefore can take care of the anticipated increase in enrollment without additional academic personnel; and (2) "the State has a right to expect that the first duty of the teacher is to teach." (See Vol. I, p. xii).

It is the latter assumption that is basic: the former derives from it. No one acquainted with what goes on in Chapel Hill would think that our work load is light. He would know of the long hours (often midnight hours) spent in keeping up with the extensive and rapidly increasing quantity of new literature in one's field; in continually trying out and experimenting with new pedogogical devices; in doing research and writing articles, monographs and books at the growing edge of knowledge; in serious, critical, searching discussion of problems in one's area with one's colleagues; in keeping in contact with others of one's profession and their as yet unpublished work and findings; in keeping up with educational developments in one's area in other institutions; in working with graduate and undergraduate students informally; in directing their research and writing; in counselling them about their academic, vocational and personal problems; in serving on committees and boards concerned with the life and policies of the University and the problems of the faculty and students; in serving the community, state and nation in various ways in which only the specialist can; in teaching classes and grading papers; and in many other things—all of which go into the making of a university and contributes to and enriches the education of her students and the life of the state and nation now and for years to come.

The idea that the faculty has a low work load can only derive from those who think of the university professor solely as a teacher and of his work in terms of the number of hours he spends in the classroom per week. So it is the assumption that it is the primary duty of the university professor to teach that needs to be exposed.

The high school teacher can spend twenty hours per week in classroom teaching because the subject matter he is teaching is fairly cut-and-dried. He can rely upon textbooks to a considerable extent. His primary duty is to teach. Unfortunately it is often the case that college teaching is simply an extension of high school teaching. It can hardly be otherwise when the college professor is required to teach fifteen hours per week. I know, for I have done it. The students and the society are the ones who pay the greatest price for this kind of false economy. Their professors cannot be completely wrapped up in their subject-matter with an inquiring spirit, actively probing for new advances. How then can their students be challenged and inspired by the intellectual enterprize? More often than not the "canned" material they are given is twenty to thirty years behind the times, because their professors simply cannot keep up with the new advances in their fields. The best undergraduate colleges in this country require their professors to teach in the classroom only nine hours per week. But the case with a university is far more serious. The university is educating professional researchers, university and college professors, and professional people of all types as well as providing a college education for undergraduates. If the professors are required to teach twelve hours in the classroom and to work with large numbers of undergraduate students, they will have time and energy to do little, if anything, in the way of pioneering at the frontiers of their fields; they will not be able to keep fully abreast with what others are doing; their graduate students will suffer and even begin their careers with an already obsolete education; in turn when they become college teachers their students' education will suffer from a compounded deficiency; and from these undereducated people will come high school teachers who will pass on their deficits to a still later generation: and so the society pays at many levels and at many times for this false assumption and the false economy based on it.

A university is primarily a community of scholars engaged in advancing the scope of the human mind and refining its thought and sensibility in all areas of human concern and in training a new generation of scholars to join them and to continue their work. It is proper that an undergraduate college should be part of a university; for in such a community the undergraduate is not merely taught from the storehouse of "canned" knowledge, but he becomes acquainted with and perhaps excited and inspired by his contacts with creative, searching minds working at the frontiers of learning.

It is absurd to think that we can have an educational system all the way from the elementary school to the university staffed with people whose primary duty is to teach and to demand from them all a full work load of classroom teaching. It is like expecting all the people involved in the food industry to be retail grocermen. How long would the food industry function without farmers and food-procesers! But the farmer does not have a light work load simply because he spends very little time in retailing his products.

It is as absurd to expect a university faculty to train others to advance human knowledge without themselves being actively engaged in pioneering work as it is to expect professors of medical schools to train physicians without themselves being actively engaged in medical work.

We have a great university at Chapel Hill. It is the best investment this state has ever made. It is largely underwritten by the faculty itself in terms of low salaries and long hours of work. This is unfair. It deserves to be strengthened and better supported. The underlying thinking of the Advisory Budget Commision, if it should prevail, would destroy it as a true university and the state and nation would suffer for generations to come.

E. M. ADAMS

IFC Report

Tucker Yates

The 1958-59 Executive branch of the Interfraternity Council came into office last year at a crucial time for fraternities on the University of North Carolina campus. A few short weeks before, a misrepresentation of facts concerning a fraternity party became such "hot" information that it was carried by an Associated Press wire literally around the world. Imaginations ran wild as the story was magnified and exaggerated to a ridiculous extent; however, when the true facts were revealed to the newspaper, in most cases they were not even printed. In others, they were buried somewhere in the second or third sections. Thus, the I F C, during the past year, has had to work under this cloud of thwarted public opinion. I personally feel that it has done so admirably. I want to mention that The Daily Tar Heel, under the editorship of Doug Eisele, defended Carolina's fraternities by printing the true story.

In an effort to improve fraternities on this campus, the IFC did several things during the past year. Many long hours were spent discussing the entire situation with members of the administration, faculty and presidents of the fraternities. Feeling that loud, Sunday afternoon parties were in poor taste, the IFC took the initiative to correct this element which affected not only its own members, but the public as well. Such parties were abolished and violators of such are tried by the IFC Court.

Under the consitution and by-laws of the IFC, hazing is explicitly defined and as such is prohibited. Up until last spring the judiciary body was hampered by a system of graduated penalties. In order for the Court to deal adequately and with more discretion in this important offense, the by-laws were revised by erasing the penalties and suggesting a minimum fine of $100. In addition to this, various things have been done to curb what hazing still exists. Only a concentrated effort on the part of the fraternities, through the IFC, can this be completely done; great headway has already been made.

Last fall, a committee was set up under the Vice-President of the IFC to coordinate the social chairmen of the various fraternities. This was done in order to create smoother and more satisfactory transactions between the social chairmen and the Student Affairs Office in approving social functions.

Realizing the gambling had reached preposterous proportions at this university, the IFC took a stand with the Interdormitory Council and the Student Council in backing the state and university policy prohibiting this. The satisfactory results on our campus are evident.

The IFC succeded in passing an important motion this year which is finally acceptable to all concerned. Although it required a great deal of time and energy, this is something which was greatly needed; I feel that the right desion has been reached. Due to the fact that placing a "stop" on university diplomas for failure to pay fraternity bills will not stand up in court, the following bill was passed:

"(1) All fraternities which utilize the services of the Student Activities Fund submit to Mr. Dodmond on May 15 of each year a list of all fraternity members owing in excess of $50 to the fraternity. (It is assumed that all possible efforts have been made by the fraternity treasurer to collect these accounts.) The list will be made out in triplicate on a standardized form to be drawn up by the Auditor of the Student Activities Fund. The fraternity treasurer will keep one copy of this form.

(2) The Student Activities Fund Auditor, upon receipt of the two remaining copies, will forward to the office of the Assistant Dean of Sudent Affairs one copy of this form.

(3) A standardized form letter will be sent immediately to the parents of all students reported to this office requesting that some arrangements be made to pay the bills.

(4) Unless some word is received from the parents by June 1, a notation will be placed in the student's permanent file in the Central Office of Records.

(5) When the bill is ultimately paid, Mr. Dodmond will automatically be cognizant of it and will notify the Office of the Assistant Dean of Student Affairs, which can in turn remove the notation from the student's permanent file."

This is merely a service to the fraternities that may be used or not. Ed Moore is to be highly commended for his work on this.

Last spring, when the Campus Chest was unable to reach its desired amount, the IFC contributed a check for $100, pushing the drive to $2005 and thus bettering its goal by $5.00. In conjunction with the Pan-Hellenic Council, a charity concert featuring Ralph Marterie and his orchestra was held. The proceeds, netting $500, went to the Negro Recreation Center here in Chapel Hill. It was decided to discontinue this concert after last year due to the lack of general student support and interest. Even though the fraternities and sororities had agreed to an assessment of tickets, it was felt that contributing to charity in this manner wasn't in the right spirit. At the preset time, the IFC, together with the Pan-Hellenic Council, is sponsoring a blood drive among the fraternity and sorority members to make it possible for the hospital to perform heart operations on children.

It was decided last fall to allow the Journalism fraternity, Sigma Delta Chi, to publish the IFC handbook for the coming rush season. By doing this, Sigma Delta Chi will have a worthwhile project, and certainly the IFC will benefit by having what promises to be a better handbook.

Through the kind efforts of Mr. Howard Henry, the IFC has recently acquired office space in the basement of Smith dormitory. This is something which has long been needed.

Phi Gamma Delta Names New Officers

Phi Gamma Delta leaders were named last week for the coming year. Winning the president's post was Hugh Patterson, a junior of Elenton. Patterson is a Morehead Scholar and chairman of the Men's Honor Council.

Applications To Be Distributed

Applications for women orientation counselors for the coming year will be distributed to the residences Monday and Tuesday.

The applications, due to the house presidents by Friday, March 13, will be explained and given to interested girls at house meetings.

During the following week, beginning on Wednesday, March 25, five-minute interviews will be held with applicants by the Women's Orientation Committee, of which Belinda Foy is women's coordinator.

Approximately 100 counselors will be needed.

MORE BEAUTIFUL, YOUNGER-LOOKING SKIN...

YOURS WITH NEW POLYDERM!

SCIENCE DISCOVERS AGING, DRY SKIN NEEDS ESSENTIAL POLYUNSATURATES TO FRESHEN, BEAUTIFY COMPLEXION

Recently, science discovered that young, 20-year-old skin is almost twice as abundant in vital elements called essential polyunsaturates as skin at forty. As you grow older, or as you deplete your natural supply through low-fat diets, these essential polyunsaturates drain away. Dry, lifeless skin, wrinkles, premature lines and crow's feet may follow.

Rich, concentrated Polyderm lets you "beauty-feed" these essential polyunsaturates back to your skin... helping your complexion bloom again with radiance and vigor.

In just a few days you begin to see a noticeable improvement. Fine lines fade. Pores seem finer, and your skin is smoother, healthier-looking.

Six Sororities Lead Chest Drive Effort

By WALKER BLANTON

Six Carolina sororities have contributed more than any other group to the 1959 Campus Chest drive, said Chairman Doug Kellam Saturday.

But the contributions still fell short of the Campus Chest goal, and, as a result, the drive has been extended, Miss Kellam said.

Of over $1,200 collected or pledged to the Campus Chest, $338.46 came from six sororities. (Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, which has not yet moved into the sorority house, did not contribute in a body but through the dormitories.)

Since the $3,000 Campus Chest goal is short about $1,800 solicitors in dormitories will continue to ask students for contributions through Monday.

Another means of raising money for the Campus Chest will go into effect Monday. YW-YMCA members and student government leaders will be asked to take part in the $5 program, in which each person participating is responsible for soliciting $5.

In addition to the sororities' donations, eight women's dorms have contributed $275.52, 20 men's dorms, $245.65; 24 fraternities, $214.00 ($250.00 more has been pledged but not yet collected); 20 faculty members, $94.50; Glen Lennox and Victory Village, $81.59. The total amount collected is approximately two-thirds short of the $3,000 goal.

A table will be set up in Y Building this week by Campus Chest to solicit money from students.

'Scotty' Leaves UNC Post

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Edward "Scotty" Scott, the campus policeman who has been at UNC for nearly three years, will don his blue uniform and walk his beat for the last time March 15.

Although Scotty's offficial duties consist of directing traffic, especially during concerts and plays, and generally "watching over" the campus from 3:30-11 every night, he has gone beyond these duties to help students and townspeople alike.

Recently he sponsored a benefit dance so that a 16-year-old boy might undergo an expensive operation.

He always carries a prayer book with him "just in case somebody needs it."

Students of the Chapel Hill High School have asked him to sponsor a dance for them in near future.

"I was in the service (Air Force) for 20 years," said Scotty, "And I didn't mind leaving it half as much after 20 years as I mind leaving this place after only three."

"I don't think there's a building on this campus that I don't have friends in," declared Scotty. "If there is just I haven't been in that building."

Meeting people has been Scotty's biggest joy while on campus, "especially the new freshmen when their parents would bring them on campus for the first time and I would take them on guided tours."

Speaking of UNC, Scotty said, "I think it's one of the best schools in the country — and I know we have the best baskeball team in the country! As for the football team, it had the best line anywhere this fall."

Scotty is resigning "for personal reasons" to manage a filling station and grocery store on the Pittsboro Road about six miles north of Chapel Hill.

"And I want to see all those students out there filling up," he said.

Nothing To Do?

The newspaper needs new staff members to write news, columns, sports and do art work. Most of the work done on the paper is completed between 2 and 5 p.m. daily. This time is usually convenient for students who have classes in the morning hours.

Students interested in work on The Daily Tar Heel may come to the newspaper office in Graham Memorial any afternoon.

A staff meeting will be announced soon.

High Schoolers Mob Basketball Players

By KEN WHEEER

"I touched Doug Moe!" quipped Moe's basketball teammate Hugh Donohue following the mobbing of Moe by some 20 high schoolers at the Monogram Club during lunch Saturday.

One eccentric youngster, starting a Moe scrapbook, managed to secure his apple (minus two bites), his plate (thoroughly washed), and nearly took his lemon, but finally decided it was a bit dirty. She also managed about five autographs.

The group made the rounds, signing York Larese, Moe and Harvey Salz, followed by the entire team as each member entered the dining room.

Salz, pulling the smooth move of the day, pointed out Joe Quigg, telling the youngsters, "There's Joe Quigg over there. You remember him, don't you? You know, the 1957 national champs and all that?" When they started to leave, he halted them: "Hey, Pete Brennan's coming in a minute!"

One high school boy terribly confused the issue by getting the autographs of only Don Walsh and Ken McComb, freshman stars, leaving the varsity players for the mobbing girls.

Larese seemed thoroughly confused by the entire proceedings of Moe's number one fan. "What you going to do with his apple?" he asked.

"Put it in my scrapbook," she replied.

"Whatta you mean, you gonna spread it all over?" he quizzed.

Foster Quits At Wisconsin

MADISON, Wis. — (AP) — Bud Foster quit Saturday as basketball coach of the University of Wisconsin after a quarter century of service, thus beating his alma mater to the expected punch. He then accepted a position on the faculty.

The 52-year-old Kansan, who was dean of Big Ten basketball coaches, had been operating on a one-year reprieve since last season with the understanding that he produce a winner or else. He didn't.

Resignation Accepted

The university board of regents, acting on the recommendation of the athletic board, accepted Foster's resignation Saturday on the eve of the Badgers' final game of their worst season in history.

Foster was named professor of athletics and director of grants-in-aid and related programs at the university. His annual salary of $11,450 will be continued in his new post.

No Successor Yet

No immediate mention was made of a successor, but there is some sentiment for John Erickson, the first full-time assistant coach Foster ever had. Erickson, 30, a resident of Rockford, Ill., was hired last year when the athletic board loosened its purse strings in an effort to hoist Wisconsin out of the basketball depths.

Dr. Conrad A. Elvehjem, president of the university, said that in submitting his resignation to the athletic board Wednesday, Foster did so "in the hope of seeing an improvement in the future of Wisconsin's basketball."

"There have been no pressures from within the university for Foster's resignation," Dr. Elvehjem asserted.

Delany Breaks Record; Scores 31st

NEW YORK — (AP) — Ron Delany shattered his own world indoor mile record with a fantastic 4:01.4 clocking and Al Lawrence an Australian from the University of Houston, lowered the 2-mile record with an equally remarkable 8:46.8 performance Saturday night in the Knights of Columbus Games.

Delany had the scare of his 23-year-old life in beating out Istvan Rozsavolgyi by a couple of feet after trailing until the last five yards.

But Lawrence, a radio-TV student from Sydney, had an easy time. He went to the front at the start and stayed right there.

So Bill Dellinger's indoor record of 8:50 lasted only a little over a month. Dellinger, America's No. 1 hope for the 5,000 meters in the 1960 Olympics, was not in the race. But it was the same Lawrence who forced him to a world indoor record three miles 13:37 a couple of weeks ago.

Delany not only shattered his own two-week-old record of 4:02.5 but scored his 31st straight indoor mile victory and 36th in a row on boards overall. It was four years ago Saturday night in this same K. of C. meet that he started the streak.

HOW THAT RING GETS AROUND!

THE TAREYTON RING MARKS THE REAL THING!

THE REAL THING IN MILDNESS . . .
THE REAL THING IN FINE TOBACCO TASTE!

They were introduced only last semester, and already, New Dual Filter Tareytons are the big smoke on American campuses! How come? It's because the unique Dual Filter does more than just give you high filtration. It selects and balances the flavor elements in the smoke to bring out the best in fine tobacco taste. Try Tareytons today—in the bright new pack!

1. It combines the efficient filtering action of a pure white outer filter . . .

2. with the additional filtering action of ACTIVATED CHARCOAL in a unique inner filter. The extraordinary purifying ability of Activated Charcoal is widely known to science. It has been definitely proved that it makes the smoke of a cigarette milder and smoother.

Seminar Program Outlined For Y European Journey

By PAT BROWDER

Only 87 more days!

This phrase means a lot to the 15 students who have decided to fly to Paris, June 5, to participate in the YMCA-YWCA "Seminars Abroad" program this summer.

In general it means a relatively inexpensive chance to visit and talk with students and professors of eight European countries, as well as visit their famous sights and cities. For a few of the group, these words anticipate a month's stay in the Soviet Union.

The "Seminars Abroad" program began for Carolina students last year when a group of 30 spent 89 days on board ship, travelling in eight countries, taking part in Student Seminars, and living in the homes of European families. At the end, all who had taken part evaluated it as the most significant educational experience of their lives — so much so, that it was almost immediately decided to repeat the program this summer and add the trip to the Soviet Union.

The Seminar is composed of three parts: weekly discussion groups meeting on campus until June 1 to study the countries to be visited; the program aboard itself between June 5 and Aug. 1 or Aug. 23 for those including the visit to Russia; and a period of free time between Aug. 1 and the return to America for each member to be on his own to return to points of interest or to see parts of Europe not included in the planned program.

Three of the weekly discussions have been held on Switzerland, Paris and Germany. These meetings are on Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the Library Assembly Room. A member of the faculty or student body who is familiar with the country and is an experienced traveller leads a discussion moderated by Jim Carse, the Y's advisor to the group who will travel with them this summer. Tomorrow's program will be on the Berlin crisis, featuring Dr. Richard Cromwell of the Social Science Department.

Then on June 5, the group with Carse flies by jet in seven hours to Paris where a week is spent visiting the city and Versailles, and in talking with French students and professors.

On June 12, the group leaves by train to Lucerne and spends three days touring Switzerland. Italy is then visited, also by train, during June 16-29, touring Milan, Florence, Rome, Naples and Capri, and Venice.

The tour continues to Munich by train on June 30 and then switches to Volkswagen transportation for a four day tour northward, arriving on July 8 in Berlin by air from Haover. In Berlin, the group will stay in the homes of Berlin families and meet in daily seminars with students and political authorities.

Leaving Berlin by air on July 17, the tour arrives in Copenhagen for a three day stay. Those participating in the Russian seminar leave the rest of the group here and travel by boat to Stokholm, Helsinki and from there by car to Leningrad. The remainder of the group continues with visits to Hamburg and Amsterdam, and ends with a four day stay in England. The group is then free to stay on in Europe or return to America by boat or air.

The Russian itinerary is still in the planning stage. Those students that have already decided to take this part of the trip are at present holding planning sessions with Jim Carse at 3:30 on Wednesdays in the Library Assembly Room. Temporary plans are to spend five days in Moscow and then leave for Kiev, Minsk, Warsaw, Prague, and Vienna, returning to Munich to fly to Paris and London on Aug. 23. All travelling in the Soviet Union will be done by a car rented in Copenhagen.

In addition to the 15 already planning to go, the tour can accommodate an additional 15 for either the Russian or European Seminars or for both. The total cost for the European trip has been set at $1,160, and the Russian tour at approximately $1,100. For both the Seminars combined the charge will be around $1,500. Since a great part of the cost is involved in transportation abroad and back, the prices are subject to any changes the transportation authorities wish to inflict.

The deadline for all applications is April 15, with a $100 of the total cost due them. Further information can be obtained from Jim Carse in the YMCA office at 6761 where all applications for the trip and for passports and visas are available.

Three Grad Students Win H. B. Earhart Fellowships

H. B. Earhart Fellowships totaling more than $5,500 have been awarded to three University of North Carolina School of Business Administration graduate students for the 1959-60 academic year it was announced today by Maurice W. Lee, Dean of the School of Business, and Professor G. T. Schwenning, local sponsor for the Earhart Fellowship Program.

Richard Lamar Rowan of Birmingham, Alabama will receive a senior Earhart Fellowship valued at $2,500 in addition to the cost of his tuition. Charles Frederick Floyd, Hillsboro, and David Stafford Ball, Winston-Salem, will each receive a junior Earhart Fellowship with a stipend of $1,500 plus tuition. The students will be enrolled in programs of graduate study in economics at Chapel Hill.

The non-service Fellowships are awarded annually by the H. B. Earhart Foundation of Ann Arbor, Michigan to outstanding students in the fields of economics and business administration. Special consideration is given to candidates evidencing an ability and desire to teach. Junior Earhart Fellowships are subject to renewal until the candidate has completed his Master's Degree requirements.

Rowan, Floyd and Ball represent the largest single group of Earhart Fellowship recipients to study at the Chapel Hill School of Business Administration.

Professor Schwenning, Editor of The Southern Economic Journal, and Professor of Business Administration, will serve as coordinator of the study program. He has been local Earhart sponsor for the past several years.

Pi Phi Fifth Sorority To Work In Robbins

Pi Phis, turned salesgirls, will work in Robbins Department Store today from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. to raise money for Panhellenic Council charities.

Members of Pi Beta Phi sorority are the fifth UNC sorority to work in the Chapel Hill store. A percentage of all sales made during the day are turned over to Panhellenic.

The sororities that have already participated in this project include Kappa Kappa Gamma, Delta Delta Delta, Alpha Delta Pi and Kappa Delta.

Faculty Changes Approved

Nine UNC faculty changes were approved Monday by the Executive Committee of the University Board of Trustees on the recommendation of Chancellor William B. Aycock.

The Executive Committee was presented with the recommendations at a meeting in Raleigh Monday.

The faculty changes include the following:

Eugene Charles Lushei was appointed assistant professor in the Department of Philosophy. Lushei was a laboratory assistant in physics at the University of Nebraska and a tutor in logic at Oxford University. He is a member of the Mind Association, Oxford Graduate Philosophical Society and the American Association of Rhodes Scholars.

Leaves of absence were granted to George Mills Harper, July 1959 to January 1960; Samuel Huntington Hobbs Jr., spring semester 1960; Guy B. Johnson, academic 1959-60; Roy Lee Ingram, spring semester, 1960; Eugen Merzbacher, academic 1959-60; Robert B. Sharpe, spring semester 1960; and Harold McCurdy, September 1959 to September 1960.

The resignation of John Alexander McMahon, professor in the Institute of Government, was accepted.

Petite Dramatique Deadline Is Today

Students with poetry to submit for the Petite Dramatique poetry reading later this month have been reminded that the deadline to get in their compositions is today.

The poetry may be submitted at a meeting of the GMAB drama committee today at 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The poetry reading will be held March 22 at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Music Dept. Concert Slated For Hill Hall

The third of a series of musical programs sponored by the UNC Music Department will be held tonight in Hill Hall at 8 o'clock.

Joel Carter and Glenn Watkins of the Music Department will present a recital of songs by Schuman, Poulene, Bacon and Hanson.

Robert Schumann's song cycle, "Dichterliebe," will be featured in tonight's concert. The set of 16 songs was composed in 1840 to poems from Heine's "Buch der Lieder."

Ernest Bacn, director of the music school at Syracuse University, is the composer of dramatic, choral and orchestral works.

Dr. Carter will sing four of his songs set to poetry by Robert Burns and Walt Whitman. Dr. Watkins, pianist, will accompany Carter.

Carter and Watkins have chosen an opera aria as the final selection on their prgram. "Oh, This On Earth Defiled" is from Howard Hanson's opera, "Merry Mount."

The concert is open to the public.

Coed Honor Council Interviews Begin

Interviews with coeds interested in running for Women's Honor Council will begin Wednesday by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

The interviewing will be held from 2 to 6 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Applicants have been asked to sign an appointment sheet on the door of the Woodhouse Conference Room in Graham Memorial, where the interviews will be held.

The Bi-Partisan Board endorses candidates it believes are qualified to hold a position on the council. Any coed may be an independent candidate, however.

Fleischmann To Discuss 'Beats'

The first forum sponsored by the Current Affairs Committee of GMAB will have Dr. Bernard Fleischmann of the English Department in an informal program on the Beat Generation.

Dr. Fleischmann has had personal relationships with several of the Beat Generation authors.

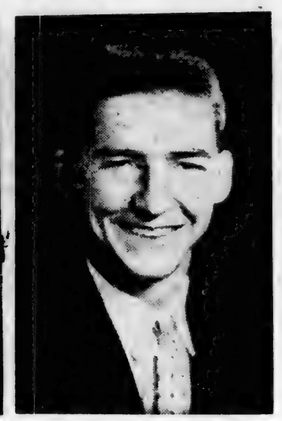
The program will consist of questions to Dr. Fleischmann on this new and controversial subject.

Dr. Fleischmann is considered an authority on this matter since he has worked with several of the more outstanding authors and has spent some time in translating their poetry into German. He has also written articles on the topic and has been invited to speak on the subject throughout the nation.

Other topics on the agenda for other forums this year include a political rally in Gerrard Hall, consisting of the big four student body candidates from each party. Later in the year the Current Affairs Committee will sponsor a race relations panel.

Smith Nominated By SP For Student Body Presidency

NORMAN SMITH
. . . SP Presidential nominee



JIM CROWNOVER
. . . for vice-president

Other Posts Go To Lucas, Fuller And Crownover

Norman B. Smith was nominated for President of the Student Body last night by the Student Party after two hours of debate. Smith defeated Ralph Cummings, vice president of the Student Body for the nomination.

In a speech before the voting Smith pledged himself to action. He listed several basic areas of concern, among them fraternities, budgetary concern, academic affairs, reorganization of various facets of student government.

He came out in favor of deferred rush and for breeding better relationships with the townspeople of Chapel Hill. He advocated pushing for a student union, even if on the last extremity it would mean partial self-liquidation.

"If elected, my administration will be one of action, of fulfillment of responsibility, and progress," candidate Smith said. He added, "I believe that net accomplishments are the only measure by which an administration can be judged."

The party declined to endorse Yack editor candidates Mike Smith and Jerry Adams, because, according to no endorsement speakers, the election of editors can be handled by the Publications Board.

Erwin Fuller was acclaimed by the SP as its nominee for Student Body treasurer. Fuller is a member of the Student Council and the Student Audit Board.

In commenting on the presidential nomination Vice-President Ralph Cummings said that he intended to support the entire SP ticket. He added that although, he did not agree with all the views of candidate Smith, he believed that Smith would do a good job as president.

"The Student Party again last night showed the campus its sincerity of purpose by nominating Norman Smith for President of the Student Body, Jim Crownover for Vice-President of the Student Body, Ann Lucas for Secretary of the Student Body, and Erwin Fuller for Treasurer of the Student Body.

"The purpose of the Student Party is to promote the welfare and best interests of the students at the University of North Carolina by securing for the student government the services of the best qualified students and by promoting within student government, policies calculated to promote the interests of all students. It is the responsibility of every member to advance this purpose by active interest and participation in Student Party and Student Government activities. This year the Sudent Party is providing the campus with a superior slate of candidates for all offices.

"For president Norman Smith is unquestionably the most qualified candidate. Norman has served commendably as chairman of the Dormitory Rent Committee, Chairman of the Committee on State Affairs and Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the Student Legislature.

"For Vice-President Jim Crownover possesses extremely extraordinary capabilities, having served the Student Party as its floorleader, having served as Chairman of the Campus Stores Committee, and having served his dormitory as Dorm Manager.

"For Secretary Ann Lucas and her ingenuity would truly be an asset to the student government executive team. Ann has served well on the GMAB Publicity Committee.

"For Treasurer Erwin Fuller and his financial ability are unexcelled. Erwin has served the campus faithfuly during the past year as Secretary of the Audit Board.

Scabbard And Blade Makes Plans For Ball

Preparations are underway for the annual Scabbard and Blade Military Ball, David Ellis, Jr., captain, announced Saturday.

The ball will be held in the Crystal Ballroom of the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham March 21 from 9 to 12 p.m., Ellis said.

Both the Naval ROTC battalion and the Air Force Corps of Cadets are invited to attend the ball, which is the major social function for both ROTC units at Carolina each year.

Traditionally, the Military Ball is held at the Naval Armory. "This year we wanted to do something different and decided to hold the ball at the Washington Duke," Ellis said.

A queen and court will be chosen for the ball. The queen and her attendants will be presented with favors by the Carolina unit of Scabbard and Blade, Company L of the 8th Regiment.

Finance—Cadet Phillip T. Williams and Mid'n Charles D. Sheets, co-chairmen.

Decorations—Cadet James A. Singleton, chairman; Mid'n Ted C. Moore, ass't; Mid'n J. T. Alexander; Mid'n Hugh L. Patterson.

CORRECTION

The grocery store and filling station which Scotty, the campus policeman, will be managing after March 15, is south of Chapel Hill on the Pittsboro Road instead of north, as was stated in The Daily Tar Heel Sunday.

Drive Short

Oh, good grief!

The Campus Chest drive is still short of its $3,00 goal.

In an effort to raise enough money to reach this goal, the Campus Chest Board has asked students in the Y and in student government to be responsible for raising $5 each.

Any student may still make contributions even though dormitory solicitors have finished their work. The Campus Chest Board has set up "money boxes" in Lenoir Hall, the Scuttlebutt and Y Building for donations.

UP Platform Considered Tonight At 7

A series of controversial planks will be brought up tonight when the University Party meets to draw up its platform for the April 7 campus elections.

The meeting will get underway at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II.

The manner of selecting the editor of The Daily Tar Heel will be one plank considered by the UP, party Chairman John Minter said Monday.

Minter listed other issues which will be discussed at the meeting for possible inclusion in the platform: Legislature seat redistricting, the judicial system, deferred rush, discriminatory clauses in fraternity charters, the IFC Court, women's dorm regulations and the National Student Association on the UNC campus.

MED SCHOOL FIRE

An electrical fire broke out in a second story room of the Medical School last night about 10 p.m. The room was filled with smoke but damage "was very slight," according to the Chapel Hill Fire Department.

Mock U. N. Gets Three From UNC

Carolina students may still become members of a United Nations "delegation."

When the U. N. Model Assembly is held here in April, the participating universities and colleges will form "delegations" of the member nations in the United Nations.

UNC will have three delegations, the United States, Nationalist China and a Southeast Asia country.

Members of UNC's United States and Nationalist China are already formulating ideas and arguments for these countries' policies. Work by the other delegation will begin as soon as members are selected.

The members of this third delegation (a Southeast Asia country) will be selected soon. UNC students still have an opportunity to be on this delegation and may apply for membership by contacting Cynthia Grant or by attending a meeting of the Collegiate Council for the United Nation on Tuesday. The weekly Tuesday meetings are held at 4 p.m. on the second floor of the Y Building.

UNC students on the United States delegation include: Joe Oppenheimer, chairman; Vince Muleri, Kathy Ross, Ann Holswade and Dave Matthews. On the Nationalist China delegation are: Sipra Bose, chairman; Jose Lopez, Ann McCory, Roger Foushee and Nola Hatten.

The Model Assembly will be held for three days, April 9, 10 and 11.

Canada, U. S. Unification Topic Of Phi

Should Canada and the United States join together as a single, unified nation?

For many years there has been talk of combination of these two great English-speaking North American countries. There are many similarities between the two, ranging from dress and culture to capitalism and industrialism.

A basic feeling of firm friendship has made it easy for Canada and the United States to cooperate in numerous projects, including the recently completed St. Lawrence Seaway. The longest unguarded stretch of border in the world runs between the two from Maine to Washington.

The way is not completely open for unification, however, since there is much national sentiment in Canada deeply opposed to and actually afraid of domination by the industrial giant to the south.

Anyone interested in participating in or hearing the debate has been invited to attend the meeting at 8 p.m. today in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East.

Honor System

In a letter somewhere else on this page, a member of the Women's Honor Council has raised issue with the editor's views on the honor code. Within this letter a very important and worthwhile question is raised, one that should be dealt with. The question is "why write about the honor system if it is one of the symbols of Carolina's greatness?"

The answer is by no means simple, but in its simplest formulation it can be stated — "the editor does not believe in the Honor System, Code, or Councils."

If the Honor System is a symbol of Carolina's greatness, then the editor would really hate to see what is a symbol of Carolina's weakness.

As an educational experiment in self-government, the system is a failure, for the vast majority of honor council offenses are reported by faculty members.

As a substitute for a proctor system, the honor system does no more than set up a system of from ten to 100 proctors in each class.

As a method of keeping dishonesty at a minimum, the system has met with no notable success, and indeed violations of the honor system are all too prevalent.

As a system of law, it makes little sense, for offenses and punishments are not outlined in detail and procedures are outlined only in the most sketchy form.

As an idea, it could be much better, since as an idea it is supposed to place the student on his own honor not to lie, cheat, or steal. Indeed, if this were the letter of the code as well as the spirit, it might be its saving grace, but this is not so in that it incorporates its checking mechanism and sets up its own spy system. If it were the same in letter and spirit, it would be similar to the system at Stanford in which each student is placed on his honor and there are no trials or courts of enforcement. This is an honor system, and its only impracticality is that professors often grade on the curve, and a cheating student often can upset the curve. If it were not the case, then it would be possible for a real honor system to exist, for the lack of knowledge on the part of the cheater would be his own punishment in later life.

Without delving into particular cases, it is safe to say that the problem of honor as handled by students has resulted in severer penalties than would have been probable under a proctor system, where usually a student would just flunk the exam he cheated on.

However, this editorial is not written to argue the merits of proctor system over an honor system. It is written in favor of a third alternative — a system of codified law in which each defendant is tried under the same court system for each offense and has certain rights guaranteed to him. It is a system whereby the defendant will be tried under the same court for the same offense whether the defendant is male or female. It is a system with a built in series of precedents in its legal codification. It is a system that is truly educational in that it puts students seriously to the task of lawmaking, and dealing with actual legal trial situations. Incorporated into this would be an executive authority that would be responsible for enforcement, for the present system of enforcement is a travesty on justice and good government.

It is not necessary to elaborate here the details of such a system, but it is necessary to point out that when faced with a choice of the Carolina honor system and no system, the editor would choose no system, since the Carolina system is not an honor system. When faced with a choice of the honor system versus the proctor system, the editor would have to abstain, for the worth of either is negligible.

For the sake of the letter writer who feels that certain subjects should not be touched, it might be pointed out that the editor ran on the presumption that there is no subject sacrosanct from the scrutiny of the pen. In an iconoclastic year, he has come to grips with such idols as country, conventional interpretations of God, faith, hope, and charity, and other writers on the page have dealt with such forbidden dinner table topics as sex and politics. One thing should be made clear, and this is that is not ofr iconoclasm's sake, that the editor is iconoclastic, for in the first place it should be readily apparent that the editor has a set of beliefs that are affirmative and not negative. Indeed, each editorial is written with the idea in mind of getting students to question their basic environment to doubt their very existence, until they are able to come up with a firm set of beliefs that will stand the acid test of time, scrutiny, and workability. Each editorial is written with the belief in mind that anything is subject to improvement and this, of course, includes the editor.

HOW WIVES BEHAVE OVERSEAS

By Harlan Cleveland

'Tis best that some female review this article, which appears in the March issue of Harper's, before an embittered male sees it as a possible defense for his long-founded suspicions. Mr. Cleveland, in his sex tensive effort, sees fit to publicize the influence of American wives abroad, and influence was never in more dangerous hands, says he.

Cleveland points out in detail what many have known to be a general truth: women (again generally speaking) have a limited idea of adventure, experience, and culture. Cleveland's intent is to show the attitudes of women whose husbands have chosen (persuaded by their wives, rather, to work in foreign countries. How do those women feel as they approach a new life in a new country?

Their main malady, upon reaching foreign shores, is "culture shock," to use Cleveland's phrase. No wonder these traveling spouses experience "culture shock." More than likely, they have barely heard of their adopted country, much less of its culture.

There is no need for the transplanted wife to embark on a search for the facts and figures concerning her new state, however. It is not even necessary for her to learn "yes" or "okay" in a foreign tongue. If she is patient, all the comforts of home, an American home, will be provided for her: a super market, movie theater, an American restaurant. This happens, that is, if she is "fortunate" enough to be placed in an "Army Suburb." If not, she may have to "rough it" with the natives.

Cleveland points out that the American wife, eager to leave the rut of American housewifery and enjoy the financial rewards of her husband's foreign employment, is not so eager upon reaching foreign sail. She prefers not to leave her "Little America," even if it means renewing her life of daily drudgery in such limited quarters. One of these migrating wives was asked if she had ever ventered out into her new country in the year of her resident there. Her reply: "I went down to Ginza once, but it was too crowded with Japanese."

Still, rewards are gained, and husband, wife and children return to the U.S.A. much enriched by their foreign adventures. The husband has a healthier-looking bank account, and the wife is radiant in the knowledge thta she has shown her foreign neighbors the customs and traditions of the New World. Her role has been an important one—she has been a "good-will ambassador." She is stimulated by the experiences and challenges of her travels, and she revels in the knowledge that her children are so well-traveled at such an early age. (Actually, they are out of it, for they know nothing of baseball, Charlie Brown, or Mr. Dillon.)

Still, we women love to travel . . . New horizons are always exciting. Japan would be nice — so oriental.

Jonathan Yardley:

I was heartily pleased with your articles which roundly criticized the business people. I am a student of the Classics myself and, as such, go for culture like a cracker goes for coca-cola or an undergrad for white socks. I am in total agreement with your thesis that the Business Administration schools are turning out a horde of the most uncouth barbarians, although I must say that I thought it a bit pedestrian of you to go down into the agora and harangue so bitterly against them. Poor taste, don't you think? But the upshot of it all is that I must confess to being little more cultured than these people when it comes to those things which you constantly refer to as forming a basic part of the cultured man'skn owledge. What I propose would, I think, be of great profit and advantage to all: that is, instead of merely telling the unwashed what they lack, that you make haste to remedy this deplorable situation by running a series of illuminating and penetrating articles informing us as to why Napoleon lived, who Plato was, etc. I am certain that you and your fellows will be able to handle this in a most satisfactory manner and I am looking forward to this series of articles. If you lack a title for them I am sure this will be simple to remedy, perhaps something like, A Compendium of Undergraduate Knowledge would do.

Jack Catlin

Editor:

Apparently you have again run short of adequate material for your editorials. I base this judgment on the article titled "Honor Code" in the March 6 issue of the DTH. Please, Mr. Gans, use a little common sense!

I quote ". . . if a person really cheated, he would have no hesitation in signing any pledge." That undoubtedly applies to some people but I would hate to think that your editorial has influenced anyone on this campus to feel that it applies to most people. Inquire around, Mr. Gans, ask the average student if he cheated in his high school (providing the high school did not have an honor system). Chances are he'll admit that he did —the typical answer is "Yes, I did, but so did everyone else"—then ask him if he cheats at Carolina. The chances are just as good that he'll say, no, he does not.

As to your other assertion, ". . . it is another (thing) to consider that a person's honor extends to a mass enforcement system of a code of laws.", I believe you are being rather illogical in view of the other statements contained in the article. You first state that people are not going to be honest just because they sign a pledge, then you say there should be no system of checks whatsoever.

You have attacked the honor system and the councils, now it is the honor code. Just what is your purpose? Carolina is known for its honor system and the few people I have met who don't believe it really works have changed their minds after the first round of quizzes.

There are too many places on this campus where criticism is needed and would be justified. Why not work on them, leave one of the finer aspects of the "Carolina Way" alone.

Do you think Frank was being frank in not acknowledging that

His ideas came from Esquire?

We, the public are unread—there's no doubt of it,

But to write just to be IN the Daily Tar Heel

Is definitely OUT of it.

Anthony Wolff

Alec Guiness is generally known in this country for his comic performances in such movies as "The Lavender Hill Mob," "Kind Hearts and Coronets," and many others. In his native England, however, he is best known for his achievements in a more serious vein, for which he was virtually unknown here until "Bridge On The River Kwai," In fact, Mr. Guiness has to his credit a portrayal of Hamlet — albeit an unsuccessful one — at the Old Vic.

In THE HORSE'S MOUTH, now on view at the Varsity Theatre, Mr. Guiness demonstrates his virtuosity in both the comic and the the tragfe art; and it should be added here that in this movie, as in the best ostensible comedy, the line between the comic and the tragic is often blurred, sometimes non-existent.

In this movie, Mr. Guiness plays a picaresque hero par excellence by the name of Gulley Jimson. Jimson is, to say the least, a man of the spirit, and an artist by temperament; but such an artist and spiritual creature that he cares little for greatness, or comfort, or even for finishing a painting. To such an imagination as Gulley Jimson's, everything is in the becoming: the completion of a painting brings frustration rather than relief, and Jimson must continually analyze his failure and begin again. It is only in beginnings that he finds any real joy; after that comes the struggle, and then the disappointment at the inadequate conclusion. Jimson is so much a creature of the spirit that he is reluctant to commit the social act of painting a saleable painting: not necesarily one which the public will like, but at least one which might be bought if someone did happen to like it. Instead, Gulley Jimson prefers nothing so much as painting on walls — any old wall, no matter whether it be the wall of someone's apartment, the one remaining wall of a church awaiting demolition, or the wall-like side of a great ship: Mr. Jimson will paint them all; and he will paint their surface with creatures of his own imagination, creatures of such intensity and individuality that they are bound to shock us.

Mr. Jimson himself, in fact, is bound to shock us, for as a creature of the spirit he not only paints strange and wondrous paintings: he also does strange and wondrous things. At the age of sixty-seven, he flirts with his mistress of twenty years before, and gives her rear end a pinch; he does not hesitate to bluff his way into the temporary possession of a millionaire's apartment while the owner is away, and then to destroy the place completely. Mr. Jimson attempts blackmail and robbery, is a frequent guest at the local prison, lives in a squalid hulk of a houseboat, and certainly never changes his underwear, much less the rest of his habit.

And yet Gulley Jimson, for all his picaresque idiosyncrasies, his delinquincy, his downright immorality, is nevertheless a most loveable individual. Certainly he is not loveable in the sense that he is someone with whom we would want to spend much time. Needless to say, he would not care much for our company, either.

Obviously, this character is calculated to offend our sense of propriety, our dignity, our every civilized instinct, our very materiality. How, then, can we account for Jimson's undeniable appeal? How can we love — in a very essential sense of that word — a smelly old man who rants at us steals from us, and all in violates every moral and ethical value known to civilized man? The answer must be — there being little else in his favor — simply that we all yearn to be such creatures of the spirit as Gulley Jimson: we'd all (we men) like to pinch the nearest attractive rear when the spirit moved us, and no amount of knowing the reason why we can't is going to stop our desire. Likewise, we would all like to come and go as we please, make free with other people's wives, money and property as we please, and son on ad infinitum. In short, civilization holds a tight rein on our freedom-seeking spirits, and we shall carry on a secret love affair with the Gulley Jimsons of this world until we too, like him, throw off all restrictions. As this is impossible, we shall continue to vest our hopes and longing in the improbable rouges of fiction who live as we cannot in this world.

Alec Guiness serves double duty in this film, receiving credit for the screen adaptation from Joyce Cary's novel as well as for a brilliant, perfect performance in the lead role. The adaptation is excellent: Mr. Guiness has dealt successfully with a long and far from easy novel, without doing much damage to the richness of Cary's characters. In doing away with many episodes in the novel and cutting some of the characters down a bit, Mr. Guiness has done the minimum possible violence to the original. Except for the ending, which is rather arbitrarily altered in the film and which includes a terrible last line which has no right to close so excellent a film, we may safely say that Cary has been rendered faithfully, if not intact.

Taken all in all, this is a beautiful movie (not beautiful like most movies)—a great movie: great in theme, as well as in execution

Fear

James Reston

In this week's New Yorker magazine there is a cartoon of an angry bartender saying to a customer on the other side of the bar: "Look, my friend, one more comparison between our civilization and Ancient Rome's and out you go!"

This helps a little, for in recent weeks we have been told by everybody from Adlai Stevenson to former Senator William Jenner of Indiana that we are sick and soft and going merrily to hell.

What Oswald Spengler in Germany, "The Gloomy Dean" Inge in England, Peter Drucker in Austria and Nikolai Berdyaev in Russia said of Europe in the Thirties, an odd, mixed-bag of liberal intellectuals, right-wing politicians and retired generals is beginning to repeat about America.

We are, they say, living in a demented world, and ducking our responsibilities. As Berdyaev put it better than the modern Cassandras: there is something shaken and shattered in the soul of modern man. We are entering the realm of the unknown and unlived, joylessly and without much hope. We are now in a time of spiritual decadence, of loneliness and dereliction.

The criers of havoc have always been interesting in every age, and they have often been right. Moreover, they have something to say to us today about the dangers of easy education, free, endless idiot - box entertainment, cheap booze, high wages for sloppy work and early casual marriage. But is this a fair indictment?

A Noble Record

This nation has not fled from danger. It has not abused its power. It has not been indifferent to the misery of mankind. It has not lost its capacity for daring or pity.

It has broken its tradition of isolation and taken commitments involving the possibility of war to forty-three different nations all over the world. It has accepted peacetime conscription and a high level of taxation.

These are not the actions of a decadent people. On the contrary, no nation in the history of sovereign states has ever responded to such a challenge with more courage or generosity in time of peace. And the surprising thing is that, after all the disappointed hopes of the postwar generation, the main opposition to the Government comes not from the people who want the nation to do less but from the people who want it to do more.

What have the Governments of the nation asked the people to do since the war that they have not consented to do? They cannot be expected to demand higher taxes and a longer military draft when the President is telling them that all is well at the Pentagon. Nor are they likely to act like pioneers when Washington tells them that all we have to fear is inflation itself.

Tawdry or Golden Age?

Even if the people get the kind of government they deserve—a disturbing thought these days—somebody has to give a lead. This is especially true when the great issues of government become increasingly involved in the mysteries of science and economics and when the air waves are increasingly full of noise and rubbish.

Is it a period of decline, of decadence and dereliction? The American Coalition of Patriotic Societies decided here this week that it was. But Caryl P. Haskins, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, raises a happier question.

"What is a Golden Age?" he asks in his annual report. "All of them were times of fervent intellectual excitement . . . . of some physical security and at least some organizational stability. But in all of them, too, stability and security were far from complete and there is a flavor of a partnership of disorder and hazard with vitality and creativeness. None of them, clearly, were especially 'comfortable' times in which to live. . . . .

"Will such times come again? It is hard to imagine that they will not. Indeed, though we hear our own age criticized as static and as anti-intellectual often enough, perhaps we ourselves are the restless, insecure, anxious, vital participants in an era of intellectual development that other men, sometime, somewhere, may well look back upon as golden too." — The New York Times

IFC Report

Tucker Yates

Part II

I feel that this is a good opportunity to briefly explain the general, overall organization of the Interfraternity Council and also to list several of its functions. The IFC is composed of the president and one elected representative from each of the 24 houses. From this body, the four officers are elected each February. Also elected within this body are seven members to the IFC Court, four of whom are elected in the spring and the three in the fall. Also at each of these times, the Court elects a chairman who becomes the fifth member of the executive committee. In essence, the IFC is the governing body of all the twenty-four fraternities, and the Court enforces the rules. There are various committees set up within the IFC, those being: Scholarship, Rules, Rush, Greek Week, Special Projects, Publicity, and Handbook. The IFC is financed by annual dues of $25 from each fraternity and by fees of $3.00 from each Pledge. Most of this money is used to publish the Handbook and to finance the Rush program. Greek Week and the Bershak Scholarship are paid for by fraternity assessments. We request no money from the student budget. The IFC is a member of the National Interfraternity Conference, which includes 61 fraternities — with over 3,250 undergraduate chapters — with an aggragate membership of more than 1,500,000 college men. We were represented at the annual December meeting in Atlanta this year by Ashe Exum, newly elected President of the IFC. Also, two members attended the Southeastern Interfraternity Conference last Spring at the University of Florida. Much has been learned from attending these conventions.

Perhaps the two most important functions sponsored by the IFC are the Rush program and Greek Week. Last Fall, for the first time during an Orientation Week, the IFC secured a position on the Orientation calendar and held a meeting for all potential rushees in Memorial Auditorium. Sam Magill, Bob Bender (who did a very outstanding job as Rush Chairman), and I spoke on all phases of the Rush program and fraternity life in general. I feel that much was gained from this and hope that it will be continued in the future. Greek Week, this year to be held during the second week in March, was instituted on this campus about 1952 as a much needed and desired replacement of "Hell Week". This lasts four days, Monday through Thursday, and entails competition among the pledge classes for the Outstanding Pledge Class Award. In this competition, scholarship from the Fall semester counts 35%, field day (which consists of various athletic events), 25%, carnival (each fraternity contributes a booth) 25%, and work detail 15%. More than 1,000 man hours of labor are spent working on constructive tasks in various areas of Chapel Hill. Trophies are given to the individual winners of these events and one large trophy is awarded to the overall winner.

At the end of each school year the IFC gives a trophy in the name of Dr. R. B. House to the most outstanding fraternity on this campus. Criteria for this award is based on six factors: scholarship which counts 30%, campus representation and extra-curricular activities 22½%, IFC participation 17½%, intramural participation 15%, social activities 10%, and house appearance 5%. Last year the trophy went to Phi Delta Theta. At the termination of each semester, the IFC also awards a trophy to that house which achieves the best scholarship report. As the final grades for the Fall semester have not been tabulated, the winner of this is not yet known.

During the academic year of 1948-49, the IFC established a scholarship in memory of Andrew Bershak, class of '38. Bershak represented all that is good in the Carolina student through his superior exhibition as a football player and teammate, and through his excellent scholastic record. Each year, every member of a social fraternity at UNC contributes to this scholarship which amounts to $2,000. The awarding of this is handled by the Student Aid Office and is given to an entering freshman boy from North Carolina on the bases of : (1) Ability as indicated by scholarship and participation in extra-curricular activities; (2) Character; and (3) Financial need.

Med Prof To Tour S. America

Dr. Charles H. Burnett of the UNC School of Medicine will leave here Wednesday for a seven-week lecture and study tour of medical centers in Puerto Rico and five South American countries.

Dr. Burnett, professor and head of the UNC Department of Medicine, will visit Colombia, Peru, Chile, Argentina and Brazil. The tour is being sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation. Dr. Burnett will be accompanied by his wife.

The tour is related to the $250,000 program of general development for the Department of Medicine announced last year. The funds for this development program also are being granted by the Rockefeller Foundation and will cover a five-year period.

With the aid of last year's grant, the Department of Medicine has an opportunity to extend its educational services through cooperation with foreign medical centers, especially those of the South American countries.

It was anticipated last year, when the original grant was announced, that some members of the faculty of the School of Medicine would be assigned visiting lecture appointments in foreign countries. In return, professors will be brought from foreign institutions to participate in North Carolina's teaching and research program.

Dr. Burnett has been associated with the University School of Medicine since 1951. A native of Colorado, he received his M.D. degree at the University of Colorado and was an assistant in medicine at Harvard University Medical School, and was an assistant professor and associate professor at Boston University, and was just prior to coming to Chapel Hill professor and chairman of the department of internal medicine at Southwestern Medical School of the University of Texas.

Dr. Burnett served as a major in the U. S. Army Medical Corps during World War II and was in the Mediterranean Theater of Operations. He was one of a survey team which has made continuing study of after-effects of A-bomb radiation in Japan, the survey being sponsored by the Atomic Energy Commission, the National Academy of Science and the Rockefeller Foundation.

Automobile Regulations Reviewed

Students in the General College, not having a "C" average, and all freshmen may have cars on campus weekends provided they observe proper regulations.

Under normal conditions, students may have cars for the weekend if they check with the Student Affairs Office.

Because many students may not be aware of the special car permission, Hugh L. Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, made a statement Monday that permission is available under proper regulations.

Any time a car is brought on campus without legal permission it is an Honor Code violation, Patterson said. "It is time for all mature college men to become aware of their responsibilities whether they apply to the possession of a car or to any other situation."

as Treasurer of the Student Party, as member of Finance Committee of Student Legisature.

"My fellow students would do well to extend responsible student government into another year. The character of this year's administration is best described in the REPORT OF THE VISITING COMMITTEE TO THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA in which was stated: "The Committee visited with and interviewed representative student leaders on several occasions. We were both pleased and impressed with their maturity and sincerity of purpose. They evidenced a keen interest in and appreciation of the more crucial problems now confronting the University. We found a strong and well-functioning student government."

Tar Heels Move Into NCAA Playoffs Against Navy Tonight

NCAA Eliminations Start Across Country Today

By HUGH FULLERTON JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

Ten of the nation's top college basketball teams lead off the 22nd national collegiate basketball championships Tuesday night and by the end of this week almost every team with any claim to fame will have had a crack at tournament competition.

Three first round games in New York and two in Lexington, Ky., will qualify the five winners for NCAA regional tournaments Friday and Saturday. One early starter, De Paul of Chicago, qualified for the Midwest regional last Saturday by nipping Portland 57-56 in a first round game.

In brief, here's how the tournaments shape up:

First round Tuesday at Lexington: Eastern Kentucky vs. Louisville, Bowling Green vs. Marquette. Winners meet defending champion Kentucky and Big Ten champ Michigan State in Mid-east regional at Evanston, Ill., March 13-14.

Mid-West regional March 13-14 at Lawrence, Kans.: Texas Christian vs. Missouri Valley champion and De Paul vs. Kansas State.

Fencers Remain Unbeaten

The Carolina fencers remained unbeaten as they swept through a triangular meet Saturday in Woollen Gymnasium.

The Tar Heels won all of their team matches in both sabre and foil for a possible four out of four match points. V.M.I. came in second as they topped Citadel for two match points.

Carolina's foilmen, with Raver and Luchs leading the way with 5-1 records each, whipped The Citadel 8-1 and VMI 5-4.

The Citadel gave the Tar Heels a more difficult time in the sabre, when Carolina's sabremen eked out a 5-4 win. However, VMI proved easier to beat as the Tar Heels whipped them 7-2.

Carolina's Collins, Aldridge, Mirman, Williams, and Matthews did the work for the Carolina fencers in the sabre, as Mirman and Matthews compiled perfect records of 3-0 and 2-0 respectively.

As the Citadel did not bring a epee team to the meet, epee points were not counted. However, VMI's epee team eked out a narrow 5-4 win over the Tar Heels in an epee match between the two teams with epee men.

Middies Lack Height But Have 16-5 Record

NEW YORK—The Tar Heels, representing the Atlantic Coast Conference, move into Madison Square Garden tonight at 9:30 to meet Navy in the first round of the NCAA eliminations.

The game will be carried in Chapel Hill on television over channel 2, WFMY-TV.

Carolina virtually backs its way into the playoffs because it is not the conference champion. The conference title actually belongs to N. C. State by way of a crushing 80-56 defeat over the Tar Heels in the finals of the ACC tournament Saturday night.

Second Trip

State, however, is on probation and cannot advance to the Eastern Regionals even though it won the right. For Coach Frank McGuire's crew, this will be their second trip to New York in three years as they shoot for a chance at the national title.

The Heels finished the regular season with an 18-3 record and then won two and lost one in the tourney for an overall 20-4 mark coming into tonight's contest. Navy, on the other hand, has compiled an excellent record of 16 wins in 21 games.

One Good Game

In the tournament Carolina played but one good game, that on the first day when it defeated Clemson 93-69. After Thursday, however, the Tar Heels cooled off and narrowly skidded by Duke 74-71 before being whipped in the finals.

Against Clemsn, Carolina got off 73 shots at the basket and made 36 for 48%. In the other two games the Tar Heels shot way below their season mark of .436 as they made 39% against Duke and 36% against State. Clemson was also the only team which Carolina could manage to out rebound.

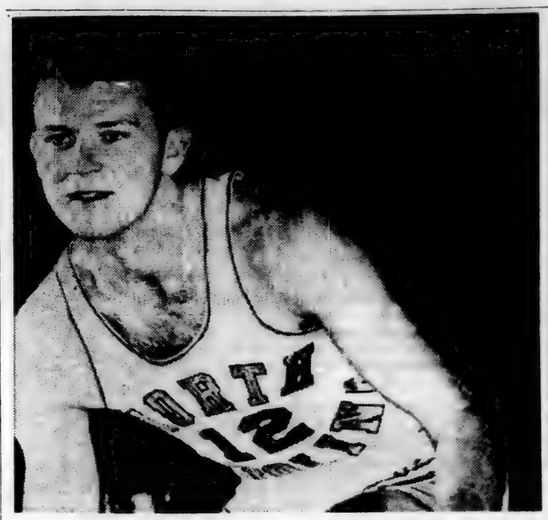
Junior forward Lee Shaffer, the only Tar Heel to place on the All-Tournament first team, led Carolina offensively as he collected 55 points in the three games. Second in the three-day totals was York Larese with 40.

Tough on Defense

Navy Coach Ben Carnevale is labeling his present squad, "the best all-around team I've ever had." Like Carolina, Navy has no super star in the lineup and utilizes the scoring potential of all the first five. Four members of the Navy first string finished the season with a double-figure average with the high man, 6-2 junior Jim Bower, at 15.8.

The main obstacle that the Middies will face when they go against the Tar Heels is a lack of height. Since the Academy has a height limit of 6-6, Jay Metzler, who is just fractions under this mark, is the tallest member of the team.

This year the Navy has excelled on defense, holding opponents to an average of 57 points per game. To accomplish this mark, six points lower than that established by the Tar Heels, Carnevals has relied on a number of varied defenses, sometimes man-to-man, sometimes a zone, and at others a combination of both.



TOURNAMENT TEAM — Junior Lee Shaffer was the lone Tar Heel to make the ACC tourney first team. Other members of the team were State's Lou Pucillo, John Richter, and George Stepanovich plus Paul Adkins of Virginia.

Frosh Numerals

BRAVES WIN

BRADENTON, Fla.—(AP)—A three-run homer by rookie outfielder Lee Maye was the big blow as the Milwaukee Braves punched out a 9-6 exhibition victory over the New York Yankees Monday.

Indoor Track

Carolina's two top journeymen track stars, Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop, returned Sunday from another trip to New York's Madison Square Garden when they ran in the Knights of Columbus Indoor Meet held Saturday night.

Scurlock ran one of his finest races of the year as he whipped around the 6¼-lap 1,000-yard run in a torrid 2:09.6, finishing third, just .3 of second back of winner Tom Murphey.

Bishop, with a time of 9:14, finished fourth in an eleven man field in which Houston's Al Lawrence cracked Bill Dellinger's one month-old world indoor two-mile record. Lawrence's time was 8:46.8.

This was the last big indoor meet for both runners before this Saturday's ACC Indoor Games, in which Scurlock will run the 880 and the mile relay, and Bishop will go the two mile again.

UP Debates Platform Items; To Present Planks Tuesday

Items to be included in the University Party's platform for the spring elections were discussed at the Party's meeting Tuesday night.

The finished platform was not drawn up last night but, according to UP secretary Cynthia Grant, it will be released today for publication in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel.

Among the items discussed at last night's meeting were: a student union; a more flexible policy on regulations in women's dormitories; the redistricting of Student Legislature.

Men's dorms and the Men's Interdormitory Council; the judical system on campus; the National Student Association; fraternities and sororities; date tickets for athletic events; and the editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

During the discussion of the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel members of the party advocated an investigation of the removal of the election of the editor from "partisan politics."

Also discussed was the possibility of installing more telephones in all women's dormitories. Late permissions and telephone calls after 11 p.m. were brought out in the course of the debate.

Presbyterians Check Reactions To Society

The lives of certain well known men and their reaction to society will be analyzed in a series of three programs being sponsored by the Campus Life Committee of the Presbyterian Church.

The movie, "Citizen Kane," will be used during the first program Sunday at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall. This movie, portrays the life of newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst. Stars in the picture are Orson Wells, Joseph Cotten and Ruth Warwick.

Contemporary Affairs Authority Coming Here

The world's foremost authority on American, English and French contemporary affairs will be on campus next week as a guest of the Weil Lecture on American Citizenship.

Dr. Brogan, a fellow of Peterhouse College, Cambridge University will speak in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. March 17, 18 and 19. The subject of this series will be" The Respinsibilities of Citizenship."

The appearance of Dr. Brogan is another of the annual Weil Lectures on American Citizenship which in the past have such speakers as Eleanor Roosevelt, Robert A. Taft, Carlos Romulo, William Allen White and George Catlin.

The Topic of Dr. Brogan's lectures for the days of his appearance here will be: on March 17, "The Responsibilities of Citizenship as seen by a Frenchman;" on March 18, "The Responsibilities of Citizenship as seen by an Englishman;" on March 19, "The Responsibilities of Citizenship as seen by an American."

"Dr. Brogan knows as much about French, American and British contemporary affairs as any man today," said Dr. J. L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty. "He is a very entertaining lecturer and we are looking forward to having him."

Campus Chest Short Of $3000 Goal

Through Tuesday, half the Campus Chestg oal of $3,000 had been contributed by students and faculty members.

The Campus Chest drive officially ended Saturday, but work will continue until the goal is reached. The Campus Chest Board is raising the rest of the money through five-dollar lists and through the use of "money boxes" on campus.

Student government leaders and Y members have been asked to be responsible for raising $5 each.

The "money boxes" in Y Building, Lenoir Hall and the Scuttlebutt are for any other student donations.

Jazz Singer Will Appear In Raleigh

Dakota Staton, jazz singer of "The Late, Late Show," will make her first appearance in Raleigh Sunday, March 22, in the Big Jazz Concert of '59.

For the concert, she will team with another well known name in the jazz music field, Woody Herman. The program will begin at 2:30 p.m. March 22 in the State Fair Arena in Raleigh.

Other jazz artists who will also appear include: Chris Barber and his jazz band, Ottilie Patterson, drummer Graham Burbidge, trumpeter Pat Halcox and Monty Sunshine.

A blues-like misty quality of style has identified Dakota Staton with jazz enthusiasts. Her appearance in Raleigh comes during a career which she began at the age of seven, singing with two sisters. After her two sisters left the trio, Miss Staton began performing alone for special groups and then in night clubs.

Miss Staton and the other jazz stars have been secured for the March 22 concert by the Capital City Jazz Corporation.

Tickets for the jazz concert are on sale in Chapel Hill at Kenny's.

Med Instructor Wins Markle Scholar Award

For the seventh time a member of the faculty of the UNC School of Medicine has been named a Markle Scholar in Medical Science.

This marks the fourth consecutive year UNC has received this honor.

Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, dean of the School of Medicine, was notified Saturday that Dr. Robert Zeppa, instructor in thoracic surgery of the Department of Surgery, had been named a Markle Scholar.

The award carries a cash grant of $30,000 payable at the rate of $6,000 a year over a five year period. It is considered one of the highest honors for promising young men in the field of academic medicine.

The purpose of the program is "to strengthen medical education by offering academic security and financial help to teachers and investigators in medical schools early in their careers."

Dr. Zeppa is the first scholar appointed in the UNC Department of Surgery. Three have been appointed in the Department of Medicine, two in the Department of Pathology and one in the Department of Pediatrics.

The awards were established in 1948 by the John and Mary R. Markle Foundation. Since that time over seven million dollars have been awarded to scholars.

Dr. Zeppa is a native of New York, did his undergraduate work at Columbia College and received his M.D. degree from the Yale University School of Medicine.

His internship was served at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center. He was an assistant resident surgeon here at UNC from 1953 to 1956. He was a resident, also at UNC, in thoracic surgery from 1956 to 1957 and chief resident in general and thoracic surgery from 1957 to 1958.

Petite Musicale Features 2 ECC Faculty Members

Two East Carolina College faculty members, Wolfgang Fetsch and Paul Hickfang, will be guest performers on the fourth Petite Musicale here Sunday.

The program which is open to the public will be held in the lounge of Graham Memorial at 4 p.m. Les Petites Musicales are sponsored by the music committee of Graham Memorial Activities Board.

WOLFGANG FETSCH

PAUL HICKFANG

...pianist and baritone coming here

Dr. Fetsch, a pianist, was born in Mannheim, Germany, where his early musical training was under the direction of his father, continental virtuoso and conductor. He later studied abroad under noted musicians including Leonid Kreutzer and in the United States at Indiana University with Bela Boszormenyi-Nagy. He graduated there with the degree of doctor of music in piano literature and performance.

Before coming to this country, Dr. Fetsch lived with his father in the Far East. He performed extensively in Tokyo, Osaka, Kobe and other Japanese cities.

Dr. Fetsch ha been a member of the East Carolina College Department of Music since 1957. As a teacher of piano, he worked with the U. S. Army Education Program for four years. He was also a faculty member at Osaka Music College and at the University of Denver.

A native of Bonham, Texas, Hickfang received his B.M. degree Bartered Bride." He has also been from the University of Texas School of Fine Arts. He was awarded his master's degree from the University of Michigan where he studied under Chase Baromeo. He spent two years in Germany studying under a Fulbright scholarship.

Hickfang, who is a bass-baritone, has appeared a soloist with the Milwaukee Opera Festival and with the Honolulu Symphony in oratorio and opera concerts. While in Germany he appeared in opera in the Gaernerplatz Theater of the Bavarian State Opera.

Fetsch will perform the third Piano Sonata of Paul Hindemith, the Chopin Ballade in G Minor, Op. 23, and the Chopin Barcarolle, Op. 60.

Hickfang, accompanied by George Perry, will sing the "Ave Signor" from Boito's "Mefistofele," the Hugo Wolf cycle "Michelangelo Lieder," and a group of songs by Gabriel Faure, Michael Head, Charles Widor and Modest Mussorgsky.

The Next Petite Musicale sponsored by GMAB will feature the Pasquier Trio on March 24 at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Navy's Surprising Midshipmen Blast Carolina's Tar Heels By 76-63; Late Rally Fails

Middies' Early Lead Is Never In Danger

Navy's surprising Midshipmen threw everything but the kitchen sink in New York last night as they derailed the Carolina's NCAA hopeful Tar Heels 76-63 to advance to the Eastern Regionals.

The Middies jumped to an early lead and after the count was tied at 2-2 they were never headed.

Although the tallest man on the Navy squad is a shade under 6-6, the Midshipmen outrebounded the Tar Heels all night. The telling point in the contest was the excellent Navy defense, which limited Carolina's two great sophomores, Doug Moe and York Larese, to 13 points between them.

It was obvious from the outset that the Navy coaching staff had done a supreme job of scouting on the Tar Heels. Their defense was keyed to stop Carolina's high-scoring attack and did just that.

Although the Middies led throughout the first half, the score was fairly close until the Heels hit a basket famine with 7:00 left. From 20-17, Navy, the Middies stormed through for 10 straight points and the score was 30-17 before the Tar Heel could catch their breath.

From that point until the end of the contest Carolina never got closer than 10 points. The Teams exchanged baskets until Navy went into the dressing room at halftime the owner of a 12-point margin at 34-22.

Dick Kepley kept the Tar Heels in the contest in the opening half, he dumped in 11 points.

Carolina's famous second-half comeback just wasn't there last night. Although the Heel rallied briefly to 40-31, Navy then went on another spree and pulled ahead 51-33 in a 7-point streak.

Big Lee Shaffer fouled out early in the second half and much of the Tar Heel rebounding strength was gone.

There were only 4 minutes left, and the score was 66-53, before Carolina showed any signs of a rally. The Heels, led by Harvey Salz, came back within ten at 69-59 and 71-61 but Navy kept putting through the foul shots and pulled out of reach.

APO Sets May 3 As Parent's Day

May 3 has been set by Alpha Phi Omega as "Parent's Day" at Carolina. The annual event sponsored by UNC's service fraternity will feature a University wide open house that will include speakers, exhibits, concerts and conducted tours of the campus.

APO President Harold Johnson has asked students to "make suggestions for Parent's Day activities and participate in the activities."

"This will afford the students an excellent chance to show their parents the University's and its facilities," said Harry Hayer, chairman of the Parent's Day Committee.

Presently the AFROTC and the NROTC plan exhibits of arms and equipment. The YMCA and the IDC have pledged their cooperation to the program. GMAB has scheduled a Petite Musicale Sunday night and the "Sound and Fury" will also be presented. The Planetarium will be showing "Color in the Sky" at 3, 4 and 8:30 p.m.

Jim Scott, APO member working with department exhibits, reports that all departments contacted plan to have exhibits and many will hold open house during Parent's Day.

The featured speaker has not yet been scheduled but Johnson has indicated that several persons are being contacted.

Bi-Partisan Selections Board Announcements

The Bi-Partisan Selections Board will meet to interview all women interested in running for Women's Honor Council today, Thursday and Friday from 2-6 p.m. All applicants have been asked to sign up on the door of the Woodhouse Conference Room, second floor of Graham Memorial.

Bi-Partisan Selections Board interviews for Men's Honor Council and Student Council will be held March 17, 18 and 19 from 2-5 p.m.

The interviews will be in the Men's Honor Council room in Graham Memorial, according to Men's Honor Council Chairman Hugh Patterson.

All candidates wishing to run for either of these councils have been requested to sign up for an interviews.

The list of times when the interviews will be held may be found on the door of the Honor Council room.

G. M. SLATE

Activities in Graham Memorial today include:

Budget Committee, 3-5 Grail; Panhellenic Council, 5-6, Grail; Carolina Woman's Council, 7-9, Grail; State Affairs, 4-4:30, Roland Parker 1; Stray Greeks, 7-8, Roland Parker 2; Drinking Rules Committee, 3-5, Roland Parker 2; Ways and Means, 1:30-3:30, Woodhouse Conference Room; Rules Committee, 5-6, Woodhouse Conference Room; Bridge Lessons, 7-9, Rendezvous Room.

Young Will Give Faculty Coverage

Plans for regular coverage of faculty research projects in progress were announced Monday by Davis Young, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

Young said, "The present editor has defined the university as 'a community of scholars seeking truth.' This definition, while somewhat naive, has considerable validity. There is a great deal of important work being done here by our faculty, and students rarely if ever know what it is."

The candidate listed the following examples, drawn from the history department, as the sort of thing he had in mind: the study of businessmen in the French Revolution by by Prof. George Taylor, a study of the welfare concept in western society by James King and a history of the South from 1913 to 1946 by George Tindall.

"These are all important examples of research now being done at UNC," said Young, "and while I realize that the modesty of the professional scholar would shrink at premature disclosure, I do feel that most of the scholars on this campus would gladly discuss certain aspects of their work for the benefit of students."

Young pointed out that the reinvigoration of campus life must begin in the classroom. "The Daily Tar Heel," he said, "can play a crucial role in this area by building up the prestige of those members of our faculty who are working on the advanced frontiers of human knowledge."

BRIDGE LESSONS

Bridge lessons will be held today at 7 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial. The free lessons are being held every Wednesday night.

5 State-Supported Negro Colleges

Schools Want Money

RALEIGH — (AP) — Five state-suppported Negro colleges asked the Joint Appropriations Committee Tuesday for enough money to either gain or retain membership in the Southern Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

The Association is the regular accrediting agency for colleges, both white and Negro, in the South. It has established certain standards regarding library and laboratory facilities and faculty development.

Three of the five institutions — A&T College at Greensboro, Fayetteville State Teachers College and Elizabeth City State Teachers College — currently are not on the association's membership rolls.

The other two — North Carolina College at Durham and Winston-Salem Teachers College — are in danger of losing their accrediation.

In many cases, other states will not accept teachers who are graduated from non-acredited colleges. Accrediation is also necessary for colleges to place its graduates in federal government jobs and in graduate programs of other institutions.

Emil Rosenthal, a Goldsboro businessman who is a trustee of the Fayetteville college, told the group that of six state-supported teachers institutions other than the Consolidated University, only three white schools are accredited.

"We give good training to the whites, and not as good training to the Negroes and then tell the Negroes, 'We hope you like it.'"

He told the joint group that so far no Negroes have applied for admission to East Carolina College, an accredited white institution.

"The money spent for law suits if these people begin to apply for admission to the white schools," he continued, "Would be more than these few thousand dollars these people are asking."

Dr. Warmath T. Gibbs, President of A & T College, asked the joint committee for increases of $244,466 above the amount recommended by the Advisory Budget Commission for each year of the 1959-61 biennium in his budget requests.

WOMEN'S ORIENTATION

A Chance To Serve

By JOAN BROCK

This week Carolina coeds are being extended an opportunity to serve their University in one of its most vital programs — orientation of new women students.

Application blanks for fall orientation counselors will be distributed in womens' dorms within the next three days and interviews will begin next Wednesday.

The duties of an orientation counselor afford unique opportunities for training and for development of leadership. They lend themselves to rewarding experiences for coeds who wish to pass on to others the "Carolina Way of Life."

Beginning in April, several study classes are held to plan and discuss the fall program. A spirit of unity and cooperation prevails as counselors, trainers and University officials work together to devise the best possible program for UNC. One goal predominates — to welcome each coed into the UNC family and to make her feel a part of the campus from the moment she first glimpses the Old Well until the day she receives her cap and gown.

When September arrives, each counselor assumes responsibility for seven girls, whom she has met via mail during the summer. There are inmumerable meetings and social functions — all designed to introduce the girls to each other and to the University.

Orientation counselors attend these meetings and participate in these functions with incoming coeds. Many new acquaintances are made and numerous facts related to University buildings, extracurricular activities and campus sites unfold themselves to new students and counselors alike during the week's program.

Orientation week permits counselors to learn more about their University and to explore various buildings and activities they have failed to note during previous semesters of study.

Counselors have a chance to meet University officials personally and to discuss problems and share ideas. As a result, each counselor obtains a comprehensive knowledge of the overall functioning of a State University.

Probably the most rewarding experience awaiting the counselor is that of watching each girl develop an appreciation for the University and for her freedom as she assumes with pride her role as a "Carolina Coed."

Only when each girl has been infused with a sense of belonging and with the true Carolina spirit is the role of the counselor completed.

Every woman student should avail herself of this opportunity to give a small part of herself in service to a University which has given so much to her —to a University which has endowed her with the privileged title of "Carolina Coed."

Staff, Ads Hit Again By Jones

Dave Jones, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, reemphasized the importance of developing a large staff of capable reportors and of improving the business aspect of the newpaper.

"There have been several areas of the campus that have not been covered adequately this year," Jones said in a statement Tuesday.

He added that no area can be covered more adequately, however, unless the paper recruits a staff and trains them adequately.

"The present editor has made a start along this road, but a great deal remains to be done, so that The Daily Tar Heel can adequately cover the UNC campu," Jones explained.

Jones said that business revision undetaken by Editor Curtis Gans, Business Manager Walker Blanton and Advertising Manager Fred Katzin was a good thing, but he added that this too was only in a stage of development.

"As many avid comic readers, who had to suffer through early morning classes without relief from crosswords or comic, know, these features were left out many days to put in enough advertising," Jones explained.

He added that this was largely due to the fact that although the advertising revenue brought in this year was greater than in years past, it was not enough to justify the publication of over four pages.

"The idea is to see that the Durham advertising area, along with Raleigh, Greensboro, Burlington and Pittsboro including points in between are adequately covered. If they are, there will be no doubt about having comics nor will there be any doubt about the ability of The Daily Tar Heel to publish six pages, including a large feature section, one or two times a week," Jones pointed out.

In conclusion, Jones asserted that without good advertising and a strong reportorial staff, the newspaper will be unable to perform its function. He pledged himself to the development of these areas.

Spring Plans IDC Subject At Meeting

The radio program, "Our Best To You," might originate from a proposed UNC "blanket party" in the spring.

The Interdormitory Council, which is planning the blanket party, will discuss the possibility of an "Our Best To You" from Carolina at a meeting today at 7 p.m. in Phi Hall.

The IDC will also hear from a special committee investigating the purchase of a hi-fi set at reduced rates. The hi-fi would be used at small dormitory parties.

Other business at the meeting will include nomination of IDC executive officers for election March 25.

A resolution concerning the conversion of dormitory drink machines from the bottle to cup type will be discussed.

Honor System

Yesterday, the editor suggested that there was a need for a drastic revision of the Carolina judicial system. This revision is based on two premises. The first is that the only difference between one campus offense and another is one of degree. There is nothing different between an honor offense and another offense except for the fact that one may be more serious than another.

The second premise is that with respect to the law there is no fundamental difference between a woman and a man, and that each should enjoy equal rights and privileges under the law.

The idea of a system of courts is based on the supposition that there are too many courts currently in operation on the campus without any unifying structure, save the words of the student constitution.

The idea of codified law is based on the necessity to outline procedures so that each person on campus is guaranteed certain rights and that all offenses and punishments are listed in law.

The idea of setting up an enforcement agency is important in light of the fact that much of the enforcement currently undertaken is done by the judicial agencies, and a separation of powers is essential in getting an unbiased trial.

Thus, the system that would evolve is a system of codified legislation, a system whereby all offenses that are currently interpreted to be under the Honor and Campus Codes will be incorporated with all other specified legislation into one codification. In this codification there will be a detailed list of trial procedures and a detailed bill of student rights. This would form the main body of law against which each student would be judged, and within which his rights would be guaranteed.

Utilizing this system would be a set of courts, divided by seriousness of offense, but without divisions according to sex or living area. In this way, for every offense there is a clear line of authority and a clear jurisdiction. There is an appellate system built in to guarantee each student the right to appeal without getting administrative approval.

Under this system, each student would be accorded a jury trial and every student would be responsible to serve on a jury. There would be no such thing as permanent jurors and no such thing as a bare two-thirds majority convicting a person. A conviction should rest on a unanimous vote of the jury, demonstrating beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was innocent.

This would be a system that would offer some guarantee that each student would have equality under the law.

Frost Lecture

If it is not already too late, it would perhaps be nice if the Frost lecture were transfered to Memorial Hall.

Hill Hall is usually overcrowded, and some students are denied the opportunity of hearing one of America's greater poets.

Petite Dramatique

It is good to see that after some many false starts the Petites Dramatiques is on its way.

The poetic reading program ought to be a good kick off to what could be a successful second semester.

The editor would like to wish the group the best of luck, for it was a good idea in the beginning, and it is a good idea now. It can be hoped that during the year the group will produce successes of the magnitude of "Caligula" which was such a success, two years ago.

Harper's Bizarre

Over a cup of coffee the other day, we discussed the international situation with a friend.

He was speaking: "I don't know about the Russians this time Sure, they've played around with us before. But you never can tell. This time they might mean it."

"No sweat," we assured him. "They can talk all they want now, but when the deadline . . . May 26 is it? . . . gets here, then they'll be real nice about the whole thing. Besides, May is a long way off yet."

"How far off is it? We may get blown to hell and back on the 27th. Now how far away is that?"

"They wouldn't dare. They know that the moment they make a move we'll get the bombers over Russia in no time. And that's why they won't try to start anything," we paused for effect. "They're not so anxious to see the world blown to bits either."

"I don't know." He puffed on a new cigarette. "I don't know. They're moving in everywhere — Far East, Mid-East, here and there in Europe — they step on our toes, and we tell them they'd better get off. Then we move our foot back a little so they won't step on it again for awhile."

"Yes. But they know we're tough. Like I said, they know better than to start dropping bombs."

He glanced at the waitress, "Another cup?" Turning back, he continued. "Yeah. But it still bothers me. I mean, whether they kill everybody with a bomb, or tunnel through from China and blow up the town — no matter how they do it, they seem determined to have their way. And that's what really bothers me . . . Russians, Commies, whatever you call them, they're going to get us if they can."

"No, no. You're all wrong They think they will, but we'll never let them. We're too rough. And besides . . ."

The waitress brought his coffee. He stirred in the sugar.

"And besides," we continued, "we really don't have to worry. That's the job of the people in Washington. Don't worry, they know what they're doing."

"You know," he said, "you're right. I never thought of it that way before." —J. Harper

Letters On Planning, Cars, And Others

Editor:

Does the University need more space? Let her look in her own front yard.

It would be helpful in deciding the question before the Legislature today - whether to appropriate money for two years or for ten years - to review the history of the development of the University Campus.

The first buildings were laid out according to plan, patterned on the English or Princeton model. The last of this unit was New East and New West, finished in 1861. After the Civil War no conscious plan was followed as to location of buildings. The architecture of that period was ugly and uninspiring, using the salt and pepper brick, which had no relation to the colonial architecture of the older buildings.

President Chase, at the beginning of his administration in 1919, recommended the total group-project, not the single building method of the past in planning for the future needs of the University. He urged the employment of the zoning principle and the grouping of buildings according to function.

To prevent the placing of buildings, hit or miss, on the North Quadrangle and ruining the North Campus, he employed the firm of McKim, Mead and White of New York as consulting architects for the future buildings, and Mr. John Nolan, skilled landscape architect, for the laying out of the grounds. The style of architecture used show the Italian Rennaissance influence.

Mr. Nolan and the Committee on Grounds and Buildings unanimously recommended that the space south of South Building should be laid out in a quadrangle, now known as the "South Quadrangle," similar to that of the "North Quadrangle." Steele Dormitory was the first building to front on the newly laid out South Quadrangle and was named for Walter Lake Steele, class of 1844. Four other dormitories were completed in 1922. These were Grimes, Mangum, Manly, and Ruffin, located opposite the Arboretum, south of Cameron Avenue.

The new minor quadrangle opening into the South Quadrangle composed of Saunders, Murphey, and Manning Hall, was begun in 1922 and completed in 1924. Bingham Hall, a new classroom building, was the fourth and last building on the east side of the South Quadrangle. A magnificent new library faced north and formed the south side of the Quadrangle was completed in the nineteen fifties.

The massive portico at the south of South Building was added in 1927. This contributed much to the beauty of the South Quadrangle.

The only possible directions for off-campus extension was east and south. Dormitories for men and women were placed along and east of the Raleigh Road. Gymnasiums and athletic fields to the south of the Raleigh Road, and the hospital and science buildings on the Raleigh and Pittsboro Roads.

Some day, some legislature must tackle the Mid-Section of the North Quadrangle with a master-plan and replace the Alumni building, Smith Dormitory, Vance-Pettigrew-Battle dormitory, and the buildings on the east-west Cameron Avenue axis with structures corresponding in beauty and good taste to the buildings on the South Quadrangle. This will help solve the problem of space for needed new buildings at the University as well as add to the aesthetic appearance of the campus.

Mr. Arthur C. Nash, the gifted and artistic University architect, has the following recommendations about the North Quadrangle: "— as long as the North Campus remains in its present sub-standard condition no true architectural unity or harmony with the more carefully planned South Campus will exist. In other words, in order to make this extended motive effective, the North Campus must be replanned - particularly in its Mid-Section. After all, the North Campus is not the University's back yard. It is, or should be its front yard. —It does not make much difference when the actual remodelling takes place, provided a carefully studied plan is prepared in advance. It will take courage to perform the major surgery which that Mid-Section of the North Campus requires for its future architectural health. When that pitch of courage has been attained - and I have faith it will be - the best available architectural talent should be called in, to replan that area in keeping both with old Campus tradition and with existing practical needs."

While it is obvious, that whenever a master-plan is decided upon for the North Campus, the architecture should be in harmony with the colonial architecture of the original design of the founders. It is by no means imperative that all future buildings conform to this style. Any buildings behind, or beyond, the two main quadrangles, specifically a student union, could very well be modernistic, with all glass walls, or whatever design the majority decides to build.

Thus the big building boom, which took place between 1920-1930 - and later during and after World War II, - proves conclusively that long range planning is much to be preferred to planning from one bienium to another.

OTELIA C. CONNNER

Editor:

It has come to my attention recently that many students here at Carolina have no idea what regulations are to be followed by those wish to have cars at Carolina for a week-end. This information regards, of course, students who are either in General College and have not maintained a "C" average or are freshmen.

Under the administration of Bob Young, it became illegal for any freshman or General College student without a "C" average to have a car on the Carolina campus. The action was taken to alleviate the campus parking problem which was becoming increasingly more complex each year. But this ruling did not ban cars completely to the above mentioned students if certain procedures were followed. Any student wishing to have a car on the Carolina campus for a week-end may do so under normal circumstances if he first check with Ray Jefferies at the Student Affairs office. If any student plans to have a car on the campus, he should first receive permission from South Building, and then no questions will be asked. But the car should remain on the campus only for the specified period of time alloted by South Building.

Obviously there are many valid reasons for restricting the privilege to possess a car on the Carolina campus to upper classmen. This limitation to the ownership of car here was instituted by students, and we, as students, should realize that we have to abide by existing regulations.

If a car is brought on the Carolina campus by a student who is not legally able to possess one and no permission is obtained from South Building, then the student will have to suffer the consequences. The Honor Council has made it perfectly clear that the illegal possession of a car will be considered a violation of the Honor Code.

It is time for all mature college men to become aware of their responsibility whether they apply to the possession of cars or to any other situation. From now on, if anyone wants to have a car for a period of time here on campus, please call South Building to receive permission. If this simple rule is followed, no one will ever be in trouble.

The "partial" opening of the stacks of Wilson Library to all students was greeted by this undergraduate with the feeling of relief that comes with the abolishment of any ridiculous restriction.

After spending months of pacing around the circulation desk and of attempting peridically to assume that "graduate student look" — no mean achievement — I can wholeheartedly rejoice at the beneficent wisdom which has finally come to the library directors.

The regulations imposed by the group as outlined in Tuesday's edition of The Daily Tar Heel are reasonable and should be easily sustained.

The serious undergraduate now is able to conduct the research required by many courses intelligently, that is, through the books themselves, not at the card catalogue — which, in itself, is of little assistance in such projects.

The not-so-serious undergraduate, more over, is now afforded the opportunity to browse, or just walk through the stacks, on the chance that he might come across a book which he would like to read. In some cases, this would be a significant advancement.

The only black cloud on such a "sun-shiny" picture is the vital implication of the words "six-week trial period." Obviously, the decision to open the library stacks was made on the assumption that a mature and responsible undergraduate student body will respond in the manner that those qualities suggest. Unfortunately, however, such response could not be taken for granted.

The library is not the best; appropriate steps are necessary for its improvement, and the General Assembly will have to consider this need with relation to the budget.

The facilities available should be just that to all students, however, and it is hoped that previously denied undergraduates will sensibly take advantage of their opportunity.

It was rather disconcerting to learn recently that Edward R. Murrow is taking a year's leave of absence from the Columbia Broadcasting Company, effective July 1st. Murrow, at the height of his popularity with a vast proportion of the radio and television audience, was cited by a trade magazine a couple of weeks ago as having provided the only excitement in radio and TV this year.

In a letter to Frank Stanton, CBS president, Murrow indicated that his contract contains a provision for leave. He told Stanton his only reason for requesting a leave is to engage in leisurely travel, reading and contemplation.

Stanton, in reply, said the network was happy to grant the leave and that he looked forward to Murrow's return on July 1, 1960.

Behind this veneer of respectful relations, however, lies a series of discontentment rumors between Murrow and the network. There were many who were not surprised at his action.

Murrow, now 50, has been at CBS since 1935. It was generally believed that he held a good deal of autonomy at the network. In 1954, his scathing attack on the late Senator Joseph McCarthy, Wisconsin Republican, presumably went on the air without the prior knowledge of the top management. In the aftermath, CBS supported Murrow.

Last July, however, "See it Now," begun by Murrow in 1951, finished its run on the network without announcement. Viewers of last year's election night coverage by CBS, moreover, noted a relatively minor role performed by the noted commentator. He later insisted that it was at his own request.

Just recently, Murrow came under fire for his vicious documentary on "The Business of Sex." It was also known that he had blasted network television programming more than once in past months.

Ironically, at the same time Murrow announced his decision, CBS proclaimed that it plans to air another western. Yet, despite the great number of TV westerns (now 32) perhaps only one or two are worth the eyestrain involved. To an idealist like Murrow — who stated in a Chicago speech last fall that all three networks thrived on "decadence, escapism, and insulation from the realities of the world in which we live" — the CBS pronouncement must have been doubly painful.

CBS will probably not miss Ed Murrow very greatly. Staff members have indicated that Murrow's maintenance of a personal "fortress" was organizationally unsound, that no individual in a journalistic group should be greater than the whole.

It is regretable that CBS, or some other network, does not accept that intelligent talent of Mr. Murrow and encourage its development in an industry which is used as a sedative instead of an entertainment and information medium with certain artistic standards. Of course, there are particular exceptions to this statement, but they are not frequent.

Edward R. Murrow should enjoy his vacation from a medium which he feels is failing so miserably in coming to realize its potentialities We personally hope he does.

Perhaps when he returns, the scene will be more receptive to his individuality, and he will be able to resume those studious documentaries on controversial subjects — if only to make an opiate-desiring public realize that serious situations and problems do exist. Scarlett O'Hara's "think about it tomorrow" philosophy is not the answer and Mr. Murrow fully realizes that fact.

Perhaps Ed Murow will be welcomed back. Or will he have to ride a horse?

IFC Report

Tucker Yates

PART III

During the year, a large number of people have spoken to the IFC about matters of importance which they wished to have relayed to all fraternity members. The IFC has made it possible for the foreign exchange students to receive all meals free this year in the fraterity houses. In order to prevet fraudulent soliciting by salesmen, the IFC has a procedure whereby anyone who wishes to sell in the fraternity houses must contact the treasurer of the IFC. The treasurer collects a $5.00 fee which he uses to call the Chamber of Commerce or Credit Bureau in the solicitor's home town. Once it is determined that he represents a reputable firm, the solicitor is given a permit to sell in the fraternity. This has prevented what easily could be a great problem.

It was strongly hoped that the IFC could sponsor a dance weekend this year, but due to circumstances beyond our control it was impossible to have access to the proper buildings at the times we needed them; however, this is something which can be done in the future.

Before closing, I think it pertinent to mention deferred rush. I won't take your time to go into the numerous ramifications of the pro's and con's. But the point to discuss is this: the Interfraternity Council is perfectly capable of handling problems which arise under its jurisdiction. This is a problem which was discussed and voted on long before it was made into the form of a motion before the Legislature last year. This year we have discussed it again. The University Administration is also looking into it, and the IFC has been and will continue to be only too glad to give its utmost cooperation in the study of this. On Monday, February 23, approximately one hour and a half was spent discussing both sides of the argument within the IFC. It was decided that the only healthy and fair thing to do was to carry it back to the individual houses and take an exact vote. A special meeting was held on Monday, March 2, to hear these results. Of the 24 fraternities on this campus, one house voted for deferred rush (the vote was 15 to 1). Among the other 23 houses, all of which voted against deferred rush, 19 voted unanimously, one house did not take a vote, and the other 3 voted 13 to 8, 21 to 1, and 16 to 1. Thus, excluding the fraternity which did not take an actual vote (but was against deferred rush), we know of only 25 men in the entire fraternity system at this university who are in favor of deferred rush. The IFC stands ready and interested at all times to gladly discuss this question with anyone. However, it is our impression that the problem should be left to those whom it will effect: the IFC and certainly the faculty if they see fit to discuss it further.

In ending this talk, I would like to point out to you that no organization on this campus is perfect . . . and the IFC is no exception. But the desire to better itself is constantly there. There are those who are especially interested in this and are doing all in their power to make it a better organization. At this time a group is carefully studying ways of improving overall fraternity scholarship and rush in any way possible. Also, the desire for gentlemanly conduct in accordance with our Campus Code has been stressed and emphasized all year. There have been some failures in this, and inevitably so; but, on the whole I feel that the IFC has done a admirable job.

There is one area in which I have been greatly disappointed this year, and which I feel should be mentioned Last Spring, one of the planks in the current Student Body President's platform was to form a cabinet which would include such members as President of the IDC, IFC and so on. This cabinet was formed. It could have been a very healthy thing. It could have contributed much. Instead, it was called only two times during the entire year. Consequently, I feel that a valuable opportunity for student awareness, cooperation, and understanding has been lost. This has been especially regrettable to the IFC, as interest and participation of this sort would have been most beneficial. We feel that in student government, as in our own organization, the answer lies in communication and cooperation.

It is our hope that in explaining the workings of the Interfraternity Council, a more thorough knowledge and understanding has been achieved. Again, thank you very much for your interest and the invitation to speak before you.

The Awful Truth

I have to maintain my position; you are keeping up appearances, he is putting up a front.

Annual Valkyrie Sing Makes Groups Sweat

By DEE DEE DEVERE

"Pronounce every syllable . . . ut those words out . . . Stand up raight . . . Put some feeling into . . . Let's starts all over, and do right this time! . . . We're going win this thing!" Why all the nning and rehearsing? Must be me for Valkyrie Sing!

And sure enough, all over campus, dormitories, sororities and fraternities may be heard practicing for several hours a day. On Monday night at 7 o'clock, these groups will take part in the annual Valkyrie Sing in Memorial Auditorium.

This year there are 22 groups which have entered, either in the skit division or the sing division, as a special, men's or women's group. Valkyrie Sing is one of the most competitive activities at Carolina, so skits and songs for some have been written months in advance. Realizing that only practice makes perfect, these groups have rehearsed diligently for weeks, in hopes of winning one of the coveted trophies.

Trophies will be awarded to the winning group in each division.

After the presentation of the skits and singing groups, Carolina's highest honorary organization for men will tap those who have made outstanding contributions to the University.

BOOK OF CATS

Spanish Collection Published

The Spanish Superior Council of Scientific Investigation, world famous scholarly organization, has recently published a book by a UNC faculty member.

The book by Dr. John Esten Keller, professor of Spanish in the UNC Department of Romance Languages, is an edition of one of medieval Spain's great collections of short stories.

Dr. Keller's edition of the "Libro de los gatos" (The Book of Cats) was prepared from the only existing manuscript of this drama found in the Biblioteca Nacional in Madrid. The original manuscript was written in the early 1500s.

The "Libro de los gatos" is a translation into medieval Spanish of the Latin work known as the "Fabulae" of Odo of Cheriton, an English cleric who traveled extensively in 13th century Spain. Dr. Keller's edition was published with financial assistance from the University's Research Council.

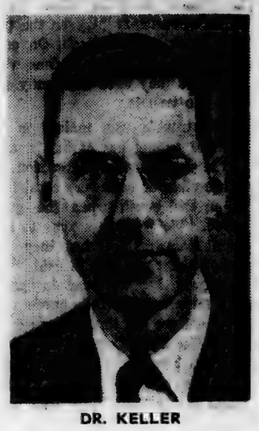
The original piece brought into Spain numerous tales and fables associated with Renard and Fox and certain beast tales current in western Europe. The book was one of the earliest literary contacts between English and Spanish scholars.

The "Libro de los gatos" belongs to the tradition of brief narratives known as "exempla" in the Middle Ages.

The UNC Press published another edition by Dr. Keller, the "Libro de los engannos," in 1953, and in 1956 a translation of this book under the title "The Book of the Wiles of Women."

A third book by Dr. Keller, "Motif-Index of Medieval Spanish Exempla" was published by the University of Tennessee Press in 1949.

He is currently working on another book entitled "The Life and Times of Alfonso the Wise." Dr. Keller is an authority on the Canticles of King Alfonso, one of the most important men in the Middle Ages.



DR. KELLER

A set of color slides from the original manuscript of the Canticles, the only such set in the world, are under study by Dr. Keller in his research.

The slides which he also uses on his extensive lecture tours were made for UNC by special permission of the Spanish government and the authorities of the Escurial near Madrid where the original manuscript is kept.

The Canticles were songs that were sung at King Alfonso's court and in the Spanish cathedrals. There are over 400 songs relating to the miracles of the Holy Virgin, each illustrated by full-page sets of miniatures. The music was set down on the pages opposite the pictures.

Dr. Keller has lectured on the Canticles and the contributions of Alfonso at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Library of Congress and the N. C. Museum of Art as well as many colleges and universities in this country and abroad.

He received his Ph.D. degree from UNC in 1946 and spent several years tucky and Tennessee before joining the UNC Department of Romance Languages in 1950.

Frosh Ready To Move Up Next Year

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"We were disappointed in the overall won-lost record although we believe that we have accomplished our object in preparing the boys for varsity play." That was Coach Dean Smith's summation of the freshman basketball season.

When Smith was asked whether or not he considered the season to be a success he answered, "Very definitely. There's so much for them to learn coming out of high school to adapt to the Carolina style of play that it takes a long time. Here they have to cover a lot in a short time."

Commenting on the long range objectives of freshman coaching Smith added, "We hope they will have acquired the right reflex for the next three years, particularly on defense."

This year's Tar Baby team, with four scholarship players in the lineup, finished the season with a 10-5 record. In Big Four competition, however, the frosh could win but three while losing five; they were 1-2 against State and Wake Forest and split the two meetings with Duke.

Hot At Home

On the home court the Tar Babies were exceptionally hot and went undefeated through six games. On the road it was a different matter, however, as the Tar Babies lost every out-of-town match with a Big Four opponent. Their best showing on the road came in Washington, D. C. where they beat the Georgetown frosh 75-73 and Bullis Prep 63-55 for top spot in the Tri-State Basketball Tournament.

"We have four boys," Smith continued, "who are definite prospects for the varsity. None of the four will see a lot of action next year, but each one has his speciality."

The four who fall into the "prospect" category are forecourtmen Ken McComb and Jim Hudock and guard Donnie Walsh and Yogi Poteet.

Smith stressed that, on the varsity next year, each one of these players could be a valuable addition to the team in spot performances. "If we went a good rebound job, McComb is the man; if we are holding the ball or in a freeze Walsh can be used. Poteet is best on defense and can be counted on for a good, aggressive defensive job. Hudock does all fairly well, but not one thing exceptionally well."

"All four," Smith went on, "have the potential to help us, and Coach McGuire is certain they will be of help to basketball teams here."

Foul Trouble

Those who saw the freshman several times this year could easily have been struck by what seemed to be inconsistant play on the part of Hudock and McComb. On ocassions each looked tremendous while on others they were constantly getting into trouble.

This trouble was mainly in the form of fouling out of ball games. In the early part of the season one or the other or both were consistantly on the bench when the game ended. "We went to a zone to stop them from fouling, but they still picked them up," Smith said. "The only time they were not in trouble with fouls was the Duke game over there and we lost that one anyway."

The Tar Baby Coach defended his players, however, by stating that freshman officials call the game much closer than those who work in varsity competition.

Both Hudock and McComb were moved in and out of the center spot during the course of the season. "What we would like," Smith said, "would be to have both of them in the corners in the future since there will be no definite pivot man once Dick Kepley graduates."

Lack of Height

When asked about the affect that the lack of height will have on the play of Walsh and Poteet in future years, Smith stated that in the Big Four there was not a mismatch all year since this season's crop of frosh guards are all close to 6 feet. He added, however, that outside the conference their ability to play defense will be the big trouble.

"Our best win," Smith continued, "was probably the State game." This one, which the Tar Babies won 47-39, was, in the coach' opinion, the one his team needed most of all as a morale builder. "The best game we played was the last one of the season against Duke when we held them to 49 points defensively. Actually we played our best ball against the varsity in scrimmages and never quite played that well in game."

Speaking on the other Big Four freshman clubs, Smith said that he felt State had the best team but Wake Forest had the great prospects. During the season both the State and Wake frosh outfits beat the varsity in scrimmage games. Not counting the Tar Baby players, the coach felt that Fred Schmidt of Duke and Len Chappell of Wake Forest were the two outstanding prospects in the state.

Outside Chance

"We have invited the twelve members out for the varsity squad next year," Smith stated. "Bill Hubbard, Lew Phillips, Pepe Callahan, and John O'Bannon all have an outside chance to make the varsity in the future although they haven't played enough. All would have to be backcourtmen on the varsity and with Walsh and Poteet there, their playing would seem improbable."

LEADING TAR BABY — Don Walsh, freshman guard from New York, is expected to lend a lot of help to the varsity next year. Walsh was the frosh's leading scorer at an 18.4 clip.

MURALS TODAY

The soccer season got under way yesterday as 8 teams launched the 1959 season. This year there are 7 teams more than there were last year, which will boost the competition. Also the defending champions, DKE, will make a run for the championship again.

The Co-Rec Swimming events which were supposed to be held this Thursday night have been postponed until April 30.

'Hard But Clean' Campaign Promised By Norman Smith

More individual students will have a voice in student government, student body presidential candidate Norman B. Smith said in a statement Wednesday.

"As president of student government my basic concern would be to construct a program gauged to fill the needs and expectations of students in general," the Student Party candidate said. "By students, I mean individuals, not groups or organizations or traditions."

Student government does not have the right to exist except to serve the best interests of students, he commented.

Smith said he will carry through this "pledge", beginning now, during his campaign. This "door-to-door campaign will not be a hello, a quip, a handshake and a good-bye, but will be a careful attempt to learn and understand ideas needs and criticisms of students."

When Smith and other SP candidates visit students while campaigning, "we will come to every door armed with notebook and pencil," the presidential candidate said. "We will record suggestions and unanswered questions."

Smith said he would also record the names and interests of students wanting to work with student government, "for our administration will not, cannot be maintained by a skeleton force or core of a few interested students."

The SP candidate would employ the ideas and work of many students to carry out the "most ambitious, far reaching year of student government that has ever been attempted at the University of North Carolina."

Smith pledged that his own campaign and the campaign of his party would be "a hard one and a clean one." He said the SP would take the offensive in the campaign and that only those on the defensive must resort to "dirty" tactics.

If any member of his party should attempt to use "dirty" tactics, "I will personally see that discredit is conferred," Smith said.

The SP candidate said his party would serve the majority of students, while maintaining due respect for all minorities.

Frost Reading Friday Slated For Memorial

The UNC English Department will sponsor the 13th annual reading by Poet Robert Frost on Friday night at 8:30 in Memorial Hall, not in Hill Hall as was stated in a previous news story.

The public has been invited to join University students and townspeople who will hear the winner of four Pulitzer prizes read poetry written by himself and others, and express his thoughts on life and modern times.

During his annual Chapel Hill visit, Frost will be the house guest of Prof. C. P. Lyons and Mrs. Lyons, of the English Department faculty.

Bi-Partisan Board To Confer Today

The Bi-Partisan Board will meet today and Friday to interview all women interested in running for Women's Honor Council.

The interviews will be from 2-6 p.m. in the Woodhouse Conference Room. All applicants should sign the list for interviews which is on the conference room door on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

Changes In Penalties Recommended By IDC

Changes in penalties for violations of Interdormitory Council regulations were proposed at Wednesday night's meeting of the IDC.

Introduced as new penalties were suspension from the University for one semester and letters of notification to parents of convictions and penalties.

These proposed penalties increase the powers of the Dormitory Council Courts and IDC Court per se. There was no previous penalty for suspension.

Action will be taken on the new penalties at the next regular meeting of the IDC.

Also at Wednesday night's meeting, the IDC voted to turn all fines from court cases over to the IDC activities and miscellaneous funds.

The council voted that the bottle drink machiness not be replaced by cup machines unless an individual dormitory decides otherwise.

The proposed "tennis court" dance of the IDC will be held either on the tennis court or in the court beside Hanes Hall. The tentative date for this dance is April 17. The IDC expects to be notified later this week whether or not Jimmy Capps' "Our Best To You" radio program will originate from Carolina the night of the dance.

Announcements were made of the Grail Mural Jamboree to be held Tuesday and Wednesday, March 17 and 18. IDC President Rudy Edwards urged that dorms enter teams in the jamboree.

The IDC members were also asked to have entries in the APO Ugly Man Contest to be held April 13-18.

New Magazine Gets Budget Consideration

Playbill Magazine, a new student government publication, will present its current budget needs to the Finance Committee this afternoon at 3 p.m. in the Woodhouse Conference Room.

Gary Artz, business manager of Playbill, is asking for $500 to begin publication. The staff, the business manager and editor have been chosen, and the Student Legislature has authorized the publication of Playbill as a part of its Publications Board.

Gordon Street, chairman of the Finance Committee, called this special meeting for the express purpose of hearing Artz and his request.

$750 which had been previously appropriated to Ram and Ewe is now in the student government general surplus.

Greek Week To Emphasize Community Aid

Contributing to community and campus is being stressed by UNC fraternities as they stage their annual "Greek Week," sponsored by the Interfraternity Council.

Pledges of the 24 social fraternities are completing in work events, sports, scholastic ranking and entertainment for the title of best overall pledge class. "Greek Week" began Monday and continues through today.

Trophies to the top class and to winners of individual events will be awarded at a "Greek Week" convocation tonight at 7:30 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty, will be the speaker.

Carrying on the new tradition that fraternities make a "constructive contribution rather than a destructive one to community life," the Greek letter organizations are using their time and energy to clean up certain areas of Chapel Hill.

The grounds of several local churches as well as the Forest Theatre on the UNC campus were assigned to pledge teams on Tuesday afternoon for a general clean-up.

The "Greek Week" event for Wednesday was a carnival, held on the intramural field.

Another feature of Greek Week" is exchange dinners in which pledge classes dine at other hocses, affording an opportunity to get beter acquainted with members of other fraternities.

Communists Offer 'Guarantee'

Grail-Mural Jamboree Slated March 17-18

Forty four teams and 400 to 500 students will compete in the Grail-Mural Jamboree scheduled for March 17 and 18 in Woollen Gymn.

Twenty-two teams from dormitories and an equal number from fraternities aer expected to participate in the activities according to the intramural office.

It is urged that each team contact the team that it is paired with in order that they may become acquainted with their teammates and plan what they will do in the Jamboree.

It is important that those who will be in the swimming relays get together so that they will know who is going to swim what stroke.

Also the plans are complete for the steak banquet that will be held for all individual winners. The banquet will be held at Watts Restaurant on Monday March 23 at 7:00 p.m. Trophies for the winners will be presented at this banquet.

All teams who have not turned in their entry fees of $1.50 must do so before Tuesday March 17. The money will be used for the steak dinner.

It is urged that all entries be completed, with the names of the participates, as soon as possible. Any team that cannot enter the Jamboree, or must withdraw their name, should contact the intramural office as quickly as possible, so that a replacement may be made.

The pairings are as listed below: Phi Gam 1 - Alexander 1, Sigma Nu - Stacy, Theta Chi - Law School, ZBT - Alexander 2, SPE - Old West, PiKA - Everett, DU - Lewis 1, SAE-Avery, Sig Chi - Aycock, Phi Gam 2-Cobb 1, Pi Lamb - Mangum, ATO - Manly, Delta Sig - Winston 2, TEP-Cobb 2, Pi Kap Phi - Joyner 2, Zeta Psi - Ruffin, Phi Kap Sig - BVP, Chi Psi - Joyner 1, DKE - Lewis 2, Chi Phi - Parker, KA -L Old East, Beta Theta Pi - Winston 1.

Alterations Are Possible For GMAB

Revisions in the Graham Memorial Activities Board will be discussed at a meeting of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors Friday at 4 p.m. in the Grail Room.

The board will also discuss the request to be made to N. C. Att. Gen Malcolm Seawell concerning the status of GM employes. The request will be that the status of these employes be changed to give student government complete control.

Other business before the board includes consideration of a slate of GMAB officers for next year and of new faculty members to replace Dr. G. A. Barrett on the board.

Alderman Amazons Win Ogler Prize

The Alderman Amazons were selected Tuesday night as the nation's best looking basketball team by the Chapel Hill Ogler's Club.

Ogler Club president, Roland Du Point, in announcing the award said, "It was a tough decision to make, but when we narowed the field down to a basketball team, Alderman's six won handily."

Spectrum Staff Meets

The editorial staff of the Spectrum will meet tonight at 7 p.m. in the Co-op House. The meeting is very important.

Editor Goes To Editorial Conference

Gans will be one of four college students interviewing the Indian ambassador to the United States Sunday on College Press Conference, an ABC television program.

Ron Shumate will be acting editor during Gan's absence, and will handle the administration of the paper. Gans wrote his editorials before he left.

The television program will be from 1 to 1:30 p.m. Sunday, and may be seen locally over WTVD Durham.

At the Seaboard Student Editorial Affairs Conference, Gans will be the discussion leader. This conference will include several members of the Overseas Press Club.

Gans will return to Chapel Hill Sunday night.

Orientation Positions Available

Application blanks for those interested in serving as orientation counselors next fall are being distributed by the Women's Orientation Committee.

Coeds living in town and interested in applying for these positions have been asked to request applications at the Graham Memorial Information Desk.

Applications should be turned in by Friday to dorm presidents and sorority house managers. At the time these applications are returned women have been requested to sign for scheduled five-minute interviews.

Applications have already been distributed among interested students in dorms and sorority houses.

Radio Club Postpones Meeting Til March 19

The Radio Club meeting scheduled for tonight has been postponed until Thursday night, March 19. The March 19 meeting is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in the Air Force ROTC classroom 4, Caldwell annex.

Free Path Open To Free City

BERLIN — (AP) — Russia and Communist East Germany promised Wednesday they would keep the road open between West Berlin and the outside world if West Berlin becomes a free city.

But they indicated the price they would demand for such guarantees would be western diplomatic recognition of the satellite East German regime. That recognition has long been sought by the Communists and refused by the West.

The latest word on the Berlin issue came in a communique issued by the East German government as Soviet Premier Khrushchev ended a visit to East Germany.

The communique also again urged a quick summoning of a summit conference to ease international tension. It said a summit meeting should be convened in addition to a foreign ministers' parley.

In a note to the western powers March 2, the Soviet Union plumped for a summit conference but said at the same time Moscow would be agreeable to a meeting of foreign ministers if it was not possible to set up a summit session. Wednesday's communique called for both.

(In Washington, a spokesman said the State Department had no comment on the Soviet-East German declaration. Privately officials said there was nothing new in the offer to guarantee access to West Berlin once it became a free city. The offer is based on the completely unacceptable condition that the western allies would give up their rights in Berlin, these officials said.)

On the Communist demand for making isolated West Berlin a free city, the communique said principles of the legal statute were discussed. No details of what that mean were given but the announcement said:

"The government of the German Democratic Republic once again emphasized its readiness to guarantee the unhindered connection of the free city of West Berlin with the outside world, in both the eastern and western directions."

It added that West Berlin's status as a free city could be guaranteed by the big four powers and by the United Nations, but did not say what form the guarantees would take.

'Face Reality,' Says Gray, Calls For Realism In Govt.

Charlie Gray, candidate for president of the student body, said Wednesday he would follow a "moderate" policy if elected president.

Gray is running for that office in the April 7 elections on the University Party ticket.

He said he believed it important that students know his philosophy toward student government because they "will be better able to understand my approach to the present issues and those which will arise."

The moderate policy he expressed is intrinsic with his belief in a realistic, yet progressive, student government.

His philosophy will enable him in practice to "face the fact that nothing is perfect and approach all problems with the realization that we live in a practical world and not in a perfect Utopian society. Too often students approach issues in a way that on the surface appear good, but from the practical side are usually impossible."

Gray defended his moderate viewpoint by saying, "I think on this campus an extreme liberal or an extreme conservative would have many harmful effects. I stand as a moderate, neither leaning to the right nor the left."

Wild crusades or untimely actions that tend to cast harsh criticisms on an innocent student body do not conform to the UP candidate's moderate stand. "The old saying of 'thinking twice before acting once' would be a good slogan for all student leaders," Gray said.

With a moderate, realistic program, Gray said he hopes to return student government to the students. He cited "unrealistic and sometimes unpopular issues which have occurred in the past" as having increased student apathy to the alarming point.

"The unfortunate political system on this campus has added coal to the fire of apathy plus causing a psychological barrier to rise up between different parts of the campus," he said.

"Only when student government can appeal to all students and only when the campus is again united will student government achieve the position it rightly deserves."

Gray said he would unify the campus break down all barriers between fraternity and non-fraternity men and take politics from its professional existence and return it to the students.

Talking further on political parties, Gray said the parties should represent beliefs, not places of residence.

The presidential candidate pledged that, if elected, he would represent the views of the "true" Carolina student. He also said that his administration would promote progress in all areas through an understanding of the problems of all segments of campus.

UP Announces Stand; Raps Editor Election

The nine-plank University Party platform takes a stand on issues from The Daily Tar Heel editor selection to the National Student Association.

The platform, which was released Wednesday by UP Chairman John Minter, covers the usual areas of dormitories, fraternities and the judicial system.

On the matter of a new student union, the platform states that the UP is in favor of immediate acquisition of a new building, and, if need be, through a partial self-liquidation plan.

The UP is advocating a "more flexible policy toward women's dormitory regulations." The party would promote the modification of some regulations not involving the Honor Code or Campus Code. Specifically, the UP will promote a system of collective late minute violations in dormitory and sorority houses and a lowering of dormitory fines.

The platform also calls for the redistricting of Legislature seats and refers to the inequality of the number of seats in Town Men's IV as compared with the interest of students in that district.

The UP through increased suppo: to the IDC "would work toward an enlargement of the dormitory social program, expansion of the dorm visiting agreement program, the addition of social and physical facilities in dormitories and increased dormitory services, such as janitorial services and more and better vending machines."

Reference to the deferred rush issue is made in the platform statement that fraternities and sororities are private organizations that should be allowed to make any changes in rush without outside influence.

On the National Student Association issue, the platform calls for an investigation of the USNSA, its activities on this campus and the method of selection of representatives from UNC to national congresses and conferences. This investigation is being urged because the UP "is not convinced that the National Student Association on this campus is not representative of the students here."

The University Party is taking a stand toward retention of separate judicial bodies, as expressed in their platform.

The final plank in the party platform states that the UP will work toward getting reasonably priced date tickets for all athletic contests.

BITTER BUDGET BATTLE

Students Asked To Engage In Massive Restoration Fight

The University has a better chance of getting its budget restored if Carolina students write their representatives in the General Assembly, said Norman B. Smith Wednesday.

Smith is chairman of the Committee on State Affairs, which has been organizing student action for increases in Carolina's budget for the next biennium.

Assisting the committee in its letter writing campaign are various campus organizations, church groups and class officers. The campus organizations include the Interdormitory Council, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Women's Residence Council, Carolina Women's Council and the YM-YWCA.

In the letters, students have been asked to inform the legislators of such needs of the University as a new student union, increased faculty salaries and more funds for the Library.

Smith said the symbol of a concerned student who is informed and interested enough in the future of the University to write a letter to his representative or senator will be of "great value in the campaign to restore the University budget to levels dictated by necessity."

In addition to the letter writing campaign, Smith's committee plans such other activities as personal visits by committee members to legislators, an anticipated appearance before the Joint Appropriations Committee of the General Assembly by student government representatives and continued publication of budget needs in campus and state newspapers.

Also, UNC fraternities will entertain alumni of their chapters who are now in Legislature and present the case for a greater University appropriation.

The letters to members of the General Assembly may be addressed to the men at the State Capitol, Raleigh, N. C.

Deferred Rush

Part I: The Case For

The IFC seems determined to make deferred rush an issue, and far be it from the editor to stop them, for it is the belief of the editor that all the evils that the IFC think surround deferred rush cannot surmount the good it will do.

A fraternity cannot justify its existence on this campus on the basis that it is a business and thus must be self-sustaining. If fraternities have any justification at all, it comes from their offering a place for genuine fellowship and from their providing living space for a certain percentage of the student body.

This was no doubt the justification accepted when they were granted, note granted, the right to exist on this campus provided they existed within state laws, and University and student regulations.

The present system of rush does nothing to breed brotherhood. Any person who has gone through rush, and the editor has, realizes that there is perhaps one person in any fraternity house who knows either who you are or what you look like, while you do not know the difference between ZBT and TBZ for all practical purposes. Yet, on the basis of the scant knowledge of a few minutes, and occasionally hours, the fraternity tries to sell itself to you, while you, to go along with the group try to sell yourself to them, the result being that neither knows each other.

Moreover, all this takes place before a student has had an opportunity to become academically adjusted to the University and has had a chance to feel out the opportunities in all areas. Indeed, he is thrust into a situation which readily makes his primary obligation the pleasing of his brothers and the attainment of brotherhood. Indeed, his academic record is a concern to him largely in respect to whether he will have attained the grades to make brotherhood or whether he will be able to better the house average.

The situation from a University point of view, anyway one wants to look at it, is bad, and it is something that ought to be corrected. It is a pity that the fraternities have not done something about this already, but the opportunity has been theirs many times and they have reneged.

Despite what the IFC says about deferred rush being no one's business but the fraternities, the fact remains that deferred rush becomes the business of anyone who wants to see a healthy situation exist and a proper academic attitude prevail in the University. It is the concern of everybody who wants to see each individual be offered a free choice unencumbered by the high pressure of mass salesmanship. It is the care of each person in the University who feels that the University's primary mission is academic and not social. Hence, it is the care of student government in its broadest sense, of the University administration, and of (shudder) the editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

Thus, the arguments for deferred rush are many. A deferred rush system would provide time for a healthy academic adjustment for the incoming freshman. It would provide the opportunity for the freshman to form a wide circle of acquaintances before being thrust into a limited group. It would enable the freshman to give wholehearted participation in extracurricular activities. It would enable the freshman to evaluate whether he wants to join a fraternity at all or whether he wants to join TBZ instead of ZBT. In other words, it will give him an opportunity to differentiate between the members of one and the members of another, for if one letter society is different from another, the only tangible manifestation of this difference is in the membership. It would enable the University to set up academic standards so that nobody who has not met his grade requirement can pledge, thus cutting down on bull pledges and fraternity drop outs.

From a fraternity point of view, it will enable them to say that they are truly fraternities—not just places that house, feed, and encumber men with obligations. Again in deferred rush is the key to a real brotherhood, for it will enable a fraternity to get to know each prospective member, and will enable each prospective member to get to know each fraternity member. The situation all around will be a good deal more healthy.

Academic Freedom: At The Core

Ron Shumate

All the time we hear that "academic freedom is a precious thing."

It may well be—if we only knew what academic freedom is.

A distinguished editor and former UNC faculty member, W. T. Couch, says academic freedom "is the principle designed to protect the teacher from hazards that tend to prevent him from meeeting his obligations in the pursuit of truth."

Julia E. Johnson say, "By academic freedom is implied entire freedom of the academic profession in thought, inquiry, discussion and teaching, within or without the academic confines."

These two seem to me to cover the definition end of it fairly completely.

Professors should be absolutely free in their classroom teachings. But they should teach the subjects they have been assigned to teach. And if they wish to expound their own theories, On The Subject, that's just fine.

But there is a limit to everything. Many think there should be no limits whatsoever on academic freedom. I do not agree with this.

Professors should be given freedom to teach a particular subject or subjects. They should not teach on matters irrelevant to their assigned subjects. This is not to say that in, for instance, an economics class, that nothing but economics should ever be discussed. Discussion, yes. Coercing, no.

A professor must present all sides of an idea so the student may judge for himself which theory he will accept. And surely most college students are capable of making up their own minds.

When restrictions are placed on a professor, he loses confidence in himself and in the institution he represents. Thus, he is not presenting the full case to the student. He is holding back something. The student is, therefore, not getting the full value of the course.

Restrictions on the professors will cause the institution itself to suffer. Valuable men will be lost—and others will not wish to replace them if they know beforehand that their academic freedom is going to be limited.

In stating their views outside the classrooms professors should dissociate themselve from their university insofar as possble, so they don't lead others to believe their views are necessarily the views of the university—even if they are.

Granted that professors are free, just as anyone else to express their ideas anywhere they so desire. This is called freedom of speech. But when a professor speaks of matters which are outsde his specialized field, he is speaking not as a professor, but as a citizen.

Even though there are no provisions for academic freedom, per se, in the federal or state constitutions or statutes, it is a right, nevertheless. It is not a reward, nor is it something which can be bought, sold or bargained for. It is a right.

One whose academic freedom has been endangered cannot appeal to a court of law, except in extreme cases where he might appeal to the Bill of Rights' provisions for freedom of speech.

But freedom of speech is not academic freedom. Freedom of speech is guaranteed to everyone —no matter what his profession. Each and every profession must have freedoms which apply to that particular profession. The medical field has its own freedoms; the law field its own freedoms; the press its own freedoms. So must the teaching field have its own freedom—namely, academic freedom.

The common saying is that the biggest threat to academic freedom is Communism. This is not only a common saying, it is a common misconception. How many times have you heard or read about Communist professors in American universities in recent years? Granted their have been a few—but a very few.

But how many times in recent years have professors been dismissed for saying or doing something which was contrary to the beliefs of pious trustees, indignent alumni, business interests or political benefactors? A goodly number, I'd say.

What difference does it make whether a professor Is a Communist, a Fascist, a Democrat, a Republican, an integrationist or anything else, so long as he teaches his subject to the best of his ability? But notice I said "teaches his subject." That one word makes a difference.

People are also saying that our universities need to be protected from Communism. This is another misconception.

First of all, the universities as a whole are able to protect themselves. Proof of this is found in the recent move by Chancellor Aycock and President Friday to remove the loyalty oaths from job applications. They have been severely criticized for doing so, but what good were the loyalty oaths in the first place?

A person who believes in subversive practices would probably not hesitate to falsely sign one of these oaths. The matter of determining whether or not an applicant for a job at the University is or has been a Communist is a job for the Board of Trustees.

Secondly, it isn't the Communists the universities need to be protected from. It's the FEAR of Communism that is the threat from which we need protection.

Even our own communities are a big threat to academic freedom. The University is a state-supported institution. It is financed by the people—as a whole. It is not financed by a group of politicians or businessmen. But all too often business and politics think they own — and often try to run - the University.

Pressure from business and political interests have done more, perhaps, to silence professors and the administration and to influence the University as a whole, than all the Communists put together.

And they almost succeed—sometimes.

College students are on the brink of taking over for the older generation. If a professor teaches some "subversive" something or the other, he isn't forcing little Johnny to believe it. Granted many students are not able to distinguish something "subversive" when they hear it. But if this were the case, Johnny wouldn't know enough to object—unless he overheard some of his "intellectual" classmates discussing the matter.

And probably all the professor said in the first place was something that was written between the lines of the chapter in the textbook that Johnny never opens.

And don't think this doesn't happen. It does. It has happened on this very campus — recently. It didn't happen in just this manner, but it happened nevertheless and the principle is the same—UNC professor was subjected to investigation by interests outsides the University.

But how many students knew of such incidents? Going further, how many of the citizens of the state, who finance this University, knew of such incidents?

And why was the administration so all-fired anxious and determined to keep this incident quiet?

It would seem to me that if a UNC professor makes a statement or writes something which arouses outsiders enough for them to send an investigator on campus, it is NOT merely a matter for the faculty and the administration, but the students as well. After all, the faculty and administration are just as dependent upon the students as the student are upon the faculty and administration.

I was led to believe, by more than one faculty member, that the incident was a trivial matter. "It happens all the time," they said.

And why does the administration continue to keep these incidents from reaching the delicate ears of the students—and the general public?

Doesn't it seem that the nonpublicity of these "numerous" investigations would be an open invitation to other invetigations? Won't these outside-University business and political interests, if they know there will be no publicity, be even more likely to continue sending their investigators to UNC—and to other campuses as well?

But this secrecy bit does not apply strictly to the faculty. Our alleged student leaders are also at fault.

Prime examples of this are the recent "cheating ring" case and an alleged "scandal" in the Nurses' Dorm.

The "cheating ring" case was eventually made public, to some degree, but the Nurses' Dorm case was never, and has never, come to light.

And all this leads us to a case which occurred at this same University some years ago, when something like 54 students — the president of the Student Body included—were expelled for cheating.

But was this incident kept under the hats of a few "select ones" The answer to that one is a simple, emphatic "No!"

The whole thing—names included —made papers across the state and in other states as well.

And newspapers, high state officials and many others praised—not condemned — the University and its official for having the guts to publicize the indicent.

And is this the same institution which, in the Twenties, stood by M. T. Couch when, as director of the UNC Press, he published a great many books on race, religion and economics — all very touchy subjects in those days—?

When Mr. Couch began his work at UNC in 1925 he had been told that the UNC Press "would destroy itself if anything was published which dealt seriously with race, religion and economics." Mr. Couch, according to author Russell Kirk, thought "such subjects ought to be discussed in the South, as elsewhere."

And the UNC Press was not destroyed—nor was it even weakened. It's still there. And it's stronger because of these things.

When Mr. Couch left UNC he became director of a Northern university press. There he was dismissed by the leaders of that university—supposedly for printing a book (or books) upon which the leader had placed their stamp of disapproval.

UNC at present has no controversy over books. But suppose we should have one. Would the leaders of this University forbid the printing of the book—merely to avoid publicity?

Or would they let the people of this state know what's going on behind the ivy-covered, tradition-heavy wall of the University?

The people of the state send their children here to be educated. And they are being educated—academically. But this is the Twentieth century, and in order for one to survive he must have more than knowledge of academic matters. To a degree this is being denied the students here. And it is being denied the people of the state—and they aren't getting their money's worth.

But let's not lose faith completely in the administration. More than likely there was a substantial reason for the hush-hush on the investgiation. But what was it? Was the matter really as trivial as they say? I hardly think so.

Is it that the administration desired no "adverse" publicity on the eve of the new budget? This was implied to me by one or more of the faculty members I questioned concerning the investigations. And as it turned out, they didn't get the budget that they wanted anyway.

Is it right, then, for the administration to deprive people of their right to know for the sake of a few depreciated dollar? —(if this is the reason for their silence)

Still others said the incident was being kept quiet in order to "protect the name" of the professor who was the object of the investigation.

Unless this professor was completely out of bounds in his remarks, there would be no apparent need to defend or protect his reputation. And if he was off course, and I don't think he was, the administration shouldn't have backed him a strongly as they did.

So we still haven't arrived at a definite answer.

Another professor, when queried about the matter, said, "I wondered when this was going to leak out." No doubt he did wonder.

But the matter shouldn't have had to "leak out." If the professor had made a profession of faith in Karl Marx, THAT wouldn't have "Leaked out." Every newspaper, radio and television station in the country, and Radio Moscow as well, would have known about it before you could say "Beat Dook."

So all this goes back to the statement that the threat to academic freedom lies not in Communism, but in the FEAR of Communism. Link the words "University" and "Communism" together and right away you've got more publicity than you can handle.

But link "University" with "politics and business" and you've got more outright apathy than you can handle.

Maybe all this seems irrelevant. But it is far from being irrelevant. Books have been written about academic freedom itself, but the situation which immediately concerns us here at Carolina has gone somewhat unnoticed.

The issue at hand is not a definition of academic freedom. Rather, it is the question of whether the administration, which leads us is going to make issues public which they should make public.

Many questions have been asked here. Still more have not been asked. These seem to be some of the basic questions. And it is the basic questions which must be answered first.

So we must wait. We must wait to see if the administration is going to tell the students and the general public what's going on here. And meanwhile, back on the campus, we, the students, will wonder as we wander through the quagmire of apathy this campus will be IF we get no answers!

We must have answers.

In this day of the scientific expert, the political know-it-all, the eocnomic prophet of doom, Malthusian hang-overs, and the mad rush of the Mad Hatters who haven't he slightest idea of where it is they're going but are in one hell of a hurry to get there, we find that the South African Zulus have made a rather astute observation of Western man's quest of outer space.

When Russia several weeks ago sent up their lunar probe that eventually went into orbit around the sun, the Zulus came up with their own name for the rocket; they call it Isiphuphuteki, which translates into "the thing that goes round and round and never gets anywhere."

It's rather a shame that the Russians are going to provide the plumbing facilities in the comfort stations for the American scientific, cultural and technological exhibition in Moscow's Sokolniki Park this summer. We believe that Senator Humphrey (Dem., Minn.) made a very good point last week when he said that "some good American plumbing could make up one of the most impressive exhibits." He's right, in one way; we could show the Russians how our politicians get rid of their largest byproduct so efficiently.

We have probably read several thousand words in the past months concerning Boris Pasternack's Dr. Zhivago, and most of the reviewers, commentators and what-have-you presented his or her favorite quotation from the novel. We're no different, were impressed with the man's effort and present the following.

Yurii Andreievich (Dr. Zhivago), after fighting at the front, was returning home, to Moscow, and for the first time in several days realized where he was, what was happening to him and what awaited him:

"Three years of changes, moves, uncertainties, upheavals; the war, the revolution; scenes of destruction, scenes of death, shelling, blown-up bridges, fires, ruins — and this turned suddenly into a huge, empty, meaningless space. The first real event since the long interruption was this trip in the fast-moving train, the fact that he was approaching his home, which was intact, which still existed, and in which every stone was dear to him. This was real life, meaningful experience, the actual goal of all guests, this was what art aimed at — homecoming, return to one's family, to oneself, to true existence."

Whenever we speak of the break with tradition in modern Western philosophy and art, the suspicious eyebrows cock themselves and the irascible parties of the second part prepare themselves for the inevitable defense of their own position, which most often is that of the traditionalists. The latter term is rather ambiguous, but we shant quibble over terms this early.

To even begin an exposition on this subject in the remaining space alloted us is mere folly, but we may interest some in the problem and that would be worth the candle.

If we grant that "every age projects its own image of man into its art," we may go on to ask just what about modern art and the image of man we find therein. "Our novels are increasingly concerned with the figure of the faceless and anonymous hero, who is at once everyman and nobody." (i.e., Forster, Kafla, Joyce — whose Ulysses is even non-Western in spirit, part of Faulkner, Hemingway, Beckett.) "Naturally enough, this faceless hero is everywhere exposed to Nothingness" and nothingness has, ni fact, become one of the chief themes in modern art and literature . . ."

Forster, in A Passage to India, points up the difference between the artistic form of East and West, one being intelligible and rational, the other unintelligible, formless and irrational. Hemingway presents as clear an example of Nothing as is available in his story, "A Clean, Well-Lighted Place.'"

". . . the vision of Nothingness with which modern art presents us does express a real encounter, one that is part of the historical destiny of the time. Creative artists do not produce such a vision out of nowhere. Nor in general do audiences or readers fail to respond to it." Samuel Beckett's Waiting for Godot played to packed houses in Europe for sixteen months and the play is permeated with the conception of Nothingness. "Surely the audience at Beckett's play recognized something of its own experience in what it saw on the stage, some echo, however veiled, of its own emptiness and, in Heidegger's phrase, its 'waiting for God.' It is not only stuffy and pompous of the Philistine to reject these responses in artist and audience, but dangerously unintelligent, for he loses thereby the chance of finding out where he himself stands historically."

Barrett continues (the previous quotations are from William Barrett, Irrational Man, New York: Doubleday & Co., 1958) in his analysis of the break with tradition in the sense that everything is questionable, problematic. "Our time, said Max Scheler, is the first in which man has become thoroughly and completely problematic to himself. Hence the themes that obsess both modern art and existential philosophy are the alienation and strangeness of man in his world; the contradictoriness, feebleness, and contingency of human existence; the central and overwhelming reality of time for man who has lost his anchorage in the eternal."

ADVENTURES IN SOCIAL SCIENCE: NO. 2

Today, with earnestness and sobriety, we make the second of our forays into social science. We take up the most basic of all social sciences—sociology itself.

Sociology teaches us that man is a social animal. It is not instinct or heredity that determines his conduct; it is environment. This fact is vividly borne out when you consider the case of Julio Sigafoos.

Julio, abandoned as an infant in a dark wood near Cleveland, was adopted by a pack of wild dogs and reared as one of their own. When Julio was found by a hunter at the age of twelve, the poor child was more canine than human. He ran on all fours, barked and growled, ate raw meat, lapped water with his tongue, and could neither speak nor understand one single word. In short, he was a complete product of his environment.

Julio, incidentally, was more fortunate than most wild children. They never become truly humanized, but Julio was exceptional. Bit by bit, he began to talk and walk and eat and drink as people do. His long-dormant mental processes, when awakened at last, turned out to be fantastically acute. He was so bright that he learned to read and write in a month, got through grammar school in three years, and high school in two. And last June as thousands of spectators, knowing the odds Julio had overcome, stood and raised cheer after cheer, he was graduated valedictorian from Cal Tech with a degree in astrophysics!

Who can say to what towering heights this incredible boy would have risen had he not been killed the day after commencement while chasing a car?

But I digress. To return to sociology, people tend to gather in groups—a tendency that began, as we all know, with the introduction of Marlboro Cigarettes. What an aid to sociability they are! How benignly one looks upon one's fellows after puffing on Marlboro's filter that really filters, on Marlboro's flavor that's really flavorful. How eager it makes one to extend the hand of friendship! How grateful we all are to Marlboro for making possible this togetherness! How good not to live in the bleak pre-Marlboro world with every man a stranger!

The groups that people live in today (thanks to Marlboro) vary widely in their customs. What is perfectly acceptable in one society may be quite outlandish in another. Take, for instance, the case of Ug Van Wyck.

Ug, a Polynesian lad, grew up in an idyllic South Sea isle where the leading event of the year was the feast of Max, the sun god. A quaint all-day ceremony was held, with tribal dancing, war chants, fat-lady races, pie-eating contests, and, for the grand finale, the sacrifice of two dozen maidens.

According to Ug's folkways, sacrificing maidens was entirely acceptable, but when, in his eighteenth year, he was sent as an exchange student to the University of Wisconsin, he soon learned that Americans take a dim view of this practice—in Wisconsin, at any rate. The first fifteen or twenty maidens Ug sacrificed, he was let off with a warning. When, however, he persisted, drastic measures were taken: he was depledged by his fraternity. A broken man, Ug quit school and moved to Milwaukee where today he earns a meager living as a stein.

Legislature To Consider Jury System

Three bills and one resolution will be considered by the Student Legislature tonight.

The solons will meet at 7:30 in Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

A bill, introduced two weeks ago by Bill Porter (SP), to abolish permanent jurors has been passed out favorably by the Ways and Means committee and will come up at the Legislative session tonight.

Norman B. Smith (SP), chairman of Ways and Means, said yesterday, "We passed but the bill abolishing Honor Council permanent jurors with a unanimous favorable vote. We contacted the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Honor Council and neither objected to abolishing permanent jurors."

The committee agreed with Porter that permanent jurors had served their purpose and are no longer necessary for the functioning of the system.

On the agenda is a bill, introduced by Jim Crownover (SP), making a holdover session of Legilature mandatory the week following elections to provide an indoctrination period for new legislators.

Both outgoing and incoming legislators would be required to attend.

International Student Group Created

An International Students Board has been formed to promote an adequate program of interest to American students and students from other countries.

Student body President Don Furtado said Wednesday that any students interested in serving on the newly formed board should fill out applications in the student government office in Graham Memorial.

The board will be concerned with such programs as selecting Goettingen scholars, publicizing available exchange scholarship, coordinating vacations and trips, international discussions and orientating foreign students on campus.

The board will be composed of a chairman and 10 members. An advisory group to the board will be composed of representatives from the Graduate Club, Y, National Student Association, Cosmopolitan Club and the Campus Christian Council.

Furtado said no experience is necessary. What will be needed is a sincere interest in promoting an adequate program of interest to American and foreign students. Those students who are willing to participate actively in the hours of planning and implementation of the board's programs are urged to apply, Furtado said.

"This is an excellent opportunity to make a real contribution to our campus community, to foreign students and to yourself. The work of the board would prove to be a rewarding and worthwhile experience," he said.

Matney ACC Champ

'Best Wrestling Team Since 1947' - Barnes

By JOHN JUSTICE

"This is the best Carolina wrestling team since 1947." So spoke Coach Sam Barnes yesterday when asked how he rated the Tar Heel grapplers of 1959. The 1947 team referred to won the championship of the old Southern Conference, and was the last Carolina squad to win the top spot in their league.

Although the current team had a 4-7 record, this mark is deceiving, said Barnes. "I don't believe in won-lost records, and even so, we used the two team system and threw away a couple of matches that the first team could have won. "Then Barnes specifically mentioned a doubleheader match in which he experimented greatly. The Tar Heels lost both ends of the twin bill. Other losses were to such powerful behemoths of the wrestling world as Navy, Maryland, VMI, and West Virginia.

Second To Maryland

In the ACC tournament last weekend, Carolina finished second to Maryland and received the conference runnerup trophy. The margin was 100 to 63 in team points, as Maryland captured eight championships. The Heels showed balance as they placed ten men in the scoring. As a matter of fact, Barnes stated, "We were the only team to show team balance. "The other two Maryland grapplers did not place in the top four, for which medals are given.

Sophomore John Matney gained the only championship for Carolina, winning the 191 lb. division. Dave Atkinson, Henry Rhyne, and Captain Perrin Henderson were runnerups in their weights. Capturing third places for Carolina were Curt Champlin, Ray Russell, and Frank London. Two of Barnes' warriors, Joe Perrini and Gordon Hurley, finished fourth.

Henderson Has Great Season

In losing to Maryland's Don Santo, who was voted the outstanding wrestler of the meet, Perrin Henderson suffered his only defeat of the year against nine wins. Henderson had previously beaten both the ACC and Southern Conference champions in the 137 lb. division. Speaking of Henderson, a senior as are Atkinson, Rhyne, and Herb Kincey, Barnes said, "Henderson had a great season."

Barnes also had praise for Matney, a Danville, Va., boy, who missed part of the season a a result of having a horse fall on him.

Improved Next Year

Looking ahead to next year, Barnes said that his squad should be improved. "This is what we have been working for, and Carolina should have a strong wrestling team for the next four or five years," the coach added. "We are in the midst of a good cycle." Eight lettermen will be back next season to form the nucleus of the squad. To add to that, the strength of the grappling men will be still further bolstered by the rising sophomores from this year's freshman team, which Barnes described as "terrific."

Still remaining this season are the Nationals, in which Barnes hopes to enter several as yet unnamed boys.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUFTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

But there is no joy in Chapel Hill — the mighty Tar Heels have struck out. There is no joy, but there should be. We lost, but that's overlooking a lot of things in one quick sentence.

To put it mildly, Navy torpedoed Carolina, but good. The Tar Heels slumped terribly toward the end of the season and wound up with "only" a 20-5 overall record.

They did not win the conference tournament. They did not win the regular season crown. They did not stay number one.

Way back before the season started, some brave sportswriters predicted the Heels would finish as high as third in the conference. Almost everyone had them tagged for fourth or lower. After all, what could you expect with two sophomores starting?

The first win, over Clemson in Chapel Hill, was not as easy as fans would have liked. The Tar Heel stock really began to soar for the first time when they rolled through the Blue Grass Invitational Tourney by stopping Notre Dame and Northwestern on consecutive nights. Many folks couldn't believe it had happened.

Then came the Dixie Classic. An easy win over Yale, but then a crushing defeat by Michingan State. Had the fans been dreaming? The next night McGuire's boys ripped through top-ranked Cincinnati for third place.

Next came the big battle, the "show me" game with N. C. State in Raleigh. When the dust had cleared, Carolina owned a 72-68 overtime decision and once again the fans were blinking their eyes in disbelief.

It was after this game that the Carolina fan forgot. It was at this point Tar Heel fans lost their heads, began clamoring for too much. They had forgotten the early predictions — this was to be another championship year.

In two consecutive games McGuire's sophomore stars each showed a spark of potential that fired the imaginiation of fans and writers alike across the state and nation. Aganist Maryland York Larese poured in 32 points, and against Duke Doug Moe ripped the nets for the same number in a come-from-behind win.

The AP Poll was released, and it said just what everyone expected it would and hoped it would. Number One — North Carolina. The following Wendesday Carolina completely ran over State, this time in Chapel Hill. It looked like nothing could stop the charging Tar Heels.

That Saturday night someone did, and quite unexpectedly. Maryland's Terps, the defending conference champs who had not played up to their potential all year, suddenly came to life and nearly ran Carolina out of the gym.

But the fans were willing to forgive that — it was just one of those things. In the next game another team, Virginia, reached its potential and whipped Carolina 69-68. The Heels dropped out of sight in the poll and a half-game behind State in the ACC race.

The following Saturday the Heels whipped Duke to move into a tie for first place with the Wolfpack. But they lost the draw and went into the tournament seeded second.

Carolina was impressive in smashing Clemson in the first round of tournament play, but the next night nearly threw away a big lead before getting past Duke and into the finals.

State, beaten twice by the Tar Heels, finally had their night as they blasted Carolina to win the championship. Still the Tar Heels were runners-up and had earned the right to represent the conference in NCAA play.

But Navy's Midshipmen showed up with too much defense and the Heels bit the dust again, for the final time. Everyone was off for Carolina, and Navy could do no wrong.

So, its all over. Shall we gather by the river and swell it with tears? Wake up out there — this has been an excellent season, far above anyone's pre-season hopes.

McGuire said it would be a rebuilding year, and that's about what it turned out to be. Shall we say, "Wait till next year?" You're damn right, we will.

Did they deserve the number one ranking bestowed so graciously by the nation's sportswriters? At the time it came, they certainly did. At the time they were tops they could have held their own with any team across this broad land.

We are not saying that next year every team in the country will stand back in open-mouthed wonder while Carolina wins the National Championship. We are saying the Tar Heels will be a national power, the likes of which haven't been seen around these parts since "McGuire's Miracle" came off in 1957.

Kappa Sig Wins Mural Basketball

In the final game of the All Campus basketball tournament, Kappa Sigma emerged victorious over Law School by winning the game decisively by 53 to 41, a 12 point margin.

The top men for Kappa Sigma were Jack Cummings and Marshall Happer each having 14 points. Mike Greenday was third, pouring in 11 points. For the Law Sch boys, Bob Farmer was high with 14 points. He was the only man to hit in double figures.

This game climaxed the 1958-59 basketball seaon. Everyone who participated in the sport gave his all toward helping his team and making these ason successful.

Dave Scurlock To Run In Last Indoor Meet Of Career Here This Saturday

By BING SOMERS

The finest single runner ever to lace up the spikes for Carolina will make his final collegiate indoor appearance this Saturday when Dave Scurlock defends his ACC championship in the 880 yard run.

This tall (6'4½"), angular senior from Greensboro, whose build could serve as a classic blueprint for runners, has gleaned a glossy record in his four years at Chapel Hill. Blessed with strength, natural speed, and an effortless stride that is pure poetry in motion, Scurlock has stamped his name to eight UNC records, five of which are individual marks. The most outstanding of these are a 48.1 quarter, a 1:48.2 half, and a 2:09.6 indoor 1000, which he ripped off just last week in New York.

DAVE SCURLOCK

He has come within .7 of a second of the world's indoor record for the half, has won national meets everywhere from New York's multi-phasic Madison Square Garden to Los Angeles' cavernous Coliseum, and has for two straight years won the ACC outdoor half and quarter and the conference indoor half.

In his sophomore year, by running his blistering 1:48.2 half in the National AAU Meet at Austin, Texas, Scurlock reached the pinnacle of this country's athletic achievement by being named All-American by the NCAA. That was almost surely his finest year, when under the careful tutilage of Hungarian distance coach Mihail Igloi, he chopped a whopping 8.2 seconds from his half.

Last year, after finishing second in the ACC cross country meet and winning several big indoor races including the classy Milrose Games, 880 Scurlock sprained his ankle at basketball. This hindered him for the rest of the season although he still managed to win the ACC outdoor half and quarter and the Los Angeles Coliseum Relays 880.

This year he has ben pestered by everything from colds to ear troubie, but last Saturday's 2:09.6 1000 at New York indicates that he is now ready to roll.

The big question now being asked is will Scurlock go after the world's indoor record Saturday night and can he get it if he tries. With competition not exactly superb for record-breaking standards and with the rule forbidding the use of spikes in Woollen Gym, the odds are pretty much against him. However, should some momentarily insane soul push him, hard enough he may just set sights for it, and who is there to say he won't get it?

Impala Sport Coupe—like every Chevy—has Safety Plate Glass all around.

Chevy showed the best brakes of the leading low-priced three in a test of repeated stops at highway speeds conducted and certified by NASCAR*. Chevy also won over the other two in a NASCAR economy run—with the highest gas mileage for 6's and V8's at cruising speeds of just over 55 miles an hour.

Here's a car that knows how to get the most out of a gallon. And it's the only car in its field to bring you hydraulic valve lifters in all popular engines—6 and V8. This means smoother, quieter performance for you.

There are many other advances just as fundamental as the efficiency of Chevrolet's engines and the dependability of its new brakes (with more lining area than any other low-priced car). But why not stop by your dealer's and let Chevy do its own sweet talking!

American Citizenship Is Weil Lecture Topic

The Weil Lectures on American Citizenship will be given here March 17, 18 and 19 by Prof. Denis W. Brogan, noted British political scientist who teaches at Cambridge University.

Professor Brogan will speak on "Responsibilities of Citizenship," emphasizing in succesive speeches the situations in Great Britain, France and the United States. Each lecture will begin at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall and will be open to the public.

. . . responsibilities of citizenship

In the 1914-15 school year a lecture series was originated at the University, and later was endowed by the families of Sol and Henry Weil of Goldsboro. The first lectures were delivered by the late President William Howard Taft.

Dr. Benjamin Fine, dean of the education school of Yeshiva University and former education editor of the New York Times, gave the 1958 Weil Lectures as part of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs.

Lectures in recent years have been given by political philosopher George Catlin of McGill University, Canada; Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine delegate to the UN; and Galo Plaza, former president of Ecuador.

The 1959 lecturer is a fellow of Peterhouse College at Cambridge, where he holds a professorship in political science. Brogan has lectured also at London School of Economics, Oxford's Corpus Christi College and University College, London.

A world traveller, he frequently visits the British Commonwealth countries, European nations and the United States. A Fellow of the British Academy, he holds the rank of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor from France and the Commander of The Order of Orange-Nassau of the Netherlands.

Long a student of American democracy, Brogan has written a number of books on American politics and politicians. They include "The American Political System," "Abraham Lincoln," "Politics and Law in the United States," and "The Era of of Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Committee Hears Budget Problems

The State Board of Higher Education presented its case for higher budgetary considerations to the Joint Appropriations Committee yesterday.

President William C. Friday was reported attending "only as a spectator." He and Chancellor William B. Aycock will present the University's case to the committee on March 18.

The State Board of Higher Education included in its requests the Capital Improvements Budget as requested by the University. This includes the request for Carolina's $2,033,000 Student Union to be built before 1961.

Chancellor Aycock did not attend Tuesday's regular meeting of the Board of Higher Education nor did he attend today's meeting of the Joint Appropriations Committee.

8 Originals To Be Shown In Art Center

Eight original paintings by the great masters of art will be on display in the north gallery of the Ackland Art Center beginning Saturday.

Prof. Joseph C. Sloane, director of the Ackland Center and chairman of the department of art, said this week that an anonymous collector has loaned the paintings to the University.

BILLS MEET LITTLE OPPOSITION

Permanent Jurors Abolished

By DEE DANIELS

Permanent jurors on Men's and Women's Honor Councils were abolished by the Student Legislature last night with no debate on the bill which proposed this action.

According to Bill Porter (SP), permanent jurors were established to familiarize other members of the jury as to what their functions should be and to answer any questions they might have.

However, as the majority of the jurors on the Attorney General's list have served on at least one case already, someone on each jury in the future will be familiar with the system.

The solons also sanctioned under special orders the establishment of a Bi-Partisan Selections Board to interview candidates for editor of th Yackety Yack for 1959 spring elections.

Harold O'Tuel (SP), author of the bill to which there was no opposition, explained that the Board is to function for this spring only due to another bill, introduced by him last night, for revision of the Publications Board by-laws, which would provide for such a board permanently.

Members of the temporary board will include the present editor, managing editor and business manager of the Yackety Yack, chairman and treasurer of the Publications Board and the Board's two faculty advisors.

O'Tuel pointed out that candidates for the Yack editorship may run independently and are not required to appear before the Bi-Partisan Board.

A hold-over session of Student Legislature is now mandatory following spring elections due to the approval by the student governing body of a bill, introduced by Jim Crownover (SP), authorizing such.

Old and new legislators will be required to attend the extra meeting, although only old legislators will be able to vote. An amendment proposed by the rules committee stipulates the voting power.

Crownover, in speaking for his bill, said the extra session would be helpful for the old legislators in clearing up matters concerning the budget as well as helping indoctrinate the incoming legislators.

A resolution, presented by Tom Cordle (SP), for improvement of the Cobb dorm parking lot was sanctioned.

A bill to appropriate $500 to the Playbill was held in the Finance committee for another week.

Steele Explains Move In Lenoir Resolution

Cash payments to self-help students working in Lenoir Hall was the resolution introduced into the Legislature last night.

"I realize that there are several arguments against this measure," said Hobart T. Steele, chairman of the dining hall committee. "Withholding and Social Security regulations among them, but I feel that the Ways and Means Committee will explore them fully, and hear the student's side of the argument as well as the administrations."

"Therefore I asked Dave Jones, our legislative liaison, to introduce this measure and allow it to go through the regular legislative processes. We have heard the students concerned; we will hear the administration of Lenoir Hall, and it will be up to the Legislature to make a decision next Thursday night."

The resolution will be discussed by the Ways and Means Committee Wednesday afternoon at 1:30. Steele has invited George Prillman, director of the Student Dining Halls to give his administration's views at that time.

Action in drawing the resolution was based upon appearances by students employed at this time by Lenoir and the Pine Room, before the Dining Hall Committee's special meeting Thursday afternoon.

Frost Isn't Superstitious Says Writer

By KEN WHEELER

Robert Frost, America's foremost poet, will defy all superstitions by making his 13th visit to the University on Friday the 13th. The genial gentleman will appear at Memorial Hall tonight at 8:30 in a meeting open to the public.

Frost comes armed with the piquant wit and subtle philosophy that have attracted large numbers to his readings in the past and immortalized many of his poems.

The English Department is sponsoring his visit, with Prof. and Mrs. Clifford P. Lyons his hosts for the stay here.

Among his honors are four Pulitzer Prizes and numerous honorary degrees, including ones from Oxford, Cambridge, and UNC.

In accordance with tradition, Frost will read and discuss many of his poems in his well-known Frost style that is anything but frosty.

In 13 days Frost will celebrate his 85th birthday, on March 26. He is returning to his farm in Ripton, Vt., following a winter stay in Florida.

Science Symposium Ends Here Tonight

A "Curbstone Clinic," featuring a panel of prominent science figures, climaxes the three day meeting of the second Junior Science Symposium tonight in Hill Hall at 7:30 p.m.

The Symposium is sponored jointly by the North Carolina Academy of Science and the Army's Office of Ordnance Research at Duke University, in cooperation with the institutions of the Research Triangle, Duke, UNC, and N. C. State.

Tonight's session will attempt to cover the role of science in industry, education, and research, and the choice of scientific careers.

Special guest speaker will be Dr. George I. Seidel, educational manager for DuPont in Wilmington, Del., and a well-known physical chemist. Dr. Seidel will talk on the role of science in the major industrial firm.

Other featured speakers tonight are George Herber, President of the Research Triangle, and Dr. W. M. Whyburn, vice president for graduate studies and research of the Consolidated University.

Five other specialists will join these three in a panel to answer the questions of the symposium youth following the introductory remarks. Moderating the panel discussion will be Dr. Marcus Hobbs, dean of the Duke University Graduate School.

This afternoon a third of the delegates will observe demonstrations of research performed in the science departments of the University. The other students will be engaged in similar activities at Duke and State.

Last night the Symposium convened at Duke to hear Dr. Ralph E. Givson, Director of the Applied Physics Laboratory of Johns Hopkins University.

YWCA Slates Schedules Nominations

The YWCA will have an open meeting for all members March 19 in Gerrard Hall to present the YWCA executive slate and to hear more nominations any members might have.

Elections will be that night in each of the women's residences.

The slate of nominees is as follows:

President: Sophie Martin; vice president: Nan Robinson and Maxine Lee; executive secretary: Margaret Ray; recording secretary: Leslie Sevier and Harriet Dwelle; treasurer: Nell Wiggins, Mary Sue Hannah and Nancy Smathers; membership chairman: Linda Rehm and Lou Johnson and program chairman: Julie Redhead.

Entry Exam Gets Four Changes

The trustees of the College Entrance Examination Board have introduced four changes in their program to simplify their testing procedure for college-bound students.

One of the cnanges calls for replacing the Scholastic Aptitude Test and the Scholarship Qualifiying Test with the new Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test. Most college students have taken the Scholastic Aptitude Test in the past.

Since it will be available to high school juniors as well as seniors, most college-bound students will take the examination twice: first for experience and guidance, then for college admission.

Other changes include limiting the test to two dates, both in October; requiring all interested students in a given school to take the test at the same time; and lowering the individual fee from $7 to only $1.

Order Of The Old Well Taps Sixty-Three Students In Pre-Dawn Ceremonies

Service Lacks Enough Recognition-Goldsmith

Sixty-three students were tapped into the Order of the Old Well here last night.

Following the pre-dawn tapping and initiation ceremonies, President Albert L. Goldsmith Jr. made a short talk.

He emphasized that "too much service is being done in the University and not enough recognition is forth coming." Goldsmith stated that the purpose of the Order of the Old Well was to honor those who have rendered real service in both the classroom and in extra-curricular activities, and whose efforts but for this order might otherwise go unrecognized.

"The other honoraries, selecting more on the basis of intangible qualifications, were not prepared to recognize all who contributed their time and energy to campus activities and classroom work," Goldsmith said.

The Order of the Old Well is the University's way of saying "thank you for a job well done."

The order was founded in 1949.

This year's officers have been Albert L. Goldsmith Jr. of Lincolnton, president; Catherine J. Stewart of Washington, D. C., vice president; Herman A. Godwin Jr. of Dunn, secretary - treasurer and Ernest L. Mackie, dean of awards, recorder. Members of the executive committee have been Paddy Sue Wall, Winston-Salem; Robert W. Carter, Selma; and Wayne S. Bishop, Greenville.

Alton E. James Jr., Robersonville; Miss Diana R. Johnson, Asheboro; Jerry L. Jones, Raleigh; Thomas S. Kenan, Durham; Lawrence L. Lohr Jr., Raleigh; James M. Long, Blanch; Robert S. Mathews, Hertford; Miss Barbara F. Miles, Burlington; Miss Mary S. Mosteller, Hickory; Prentis H. O'Tuel, Goldsboro; David N. Parker, Raleigh; Hugh L. Patterson, Edenton; Harvey Peck, Durham; Ashmede P. Pipkin, Reidsville; Miss Lucy H. Posgate, Weaverville; Julius R. Raper III, Raleigh; Donald S. Redding, Asheboro; Richard H. Robinson Jr. Greensboro; Jack H. Spain Jr., Greenville; Norman B. Smith, Franklin; Miss Jean M. Sutherland, Greensboro; Miss Lu-Ruth Sutton, Lake Waccamaw;

Minter Calls For 'New Deal'

John Minter, chairman of the University Party, yesterday called for "a new deal" in campus politics.

"The old deal," Minter said, "has resulted in an ever-widening gap between the students and the student (so-called) 'leaders.' While the old style 'leaders' persist with the same old routines, the same old razzamatazz, the average student on this campus pays absolutely no attention."

The U. P. chairman pointed to the failure of this year's Campus Community Chest drive as an example of the breakdown in student government.

"This drive was of crucial importance but since it did not concern itself with some great cause on the other side of the world it was neglected by our present 'leaders.'"

Minter criticized the present editor of The Daily Tarheel, Curtis Gans, for the recent editorial in which Gans urged students not to contribute to the campus chest. "This was an astounding spectacle, even by the standards of Mr. Gans, who is very good at astounding spectacles."

Borrowing a phrase from Adlai Stevenson, Minter said it was time to "talk sense" to Carolina students. Students government can not accomplish miracles. Its power, even on campus, is limited. The point, however, is that even this limited power is negated by wild-eyed leaders out to save the world.

"All of this is beginning to be realized by the candidates of the Student Party. I note where their leading candidate is going into the dormitories with notebook and pencil, not to talk, but to listen.

"Well, we of the University Party have been listenng for several years now, and we are delghted that

Sheffield Comments On Slate

Vice-Chairman of the Student Party Dewey Sheffield yesterday gave the following statement concerning SP candidates for the campus' four highest offices.

"I believe that the candidates nominated for the big four offices by the Student Party are of the highest calibre and quality.

"First, I would like to say that Norman Smith has the most distinguished record of any legislator, in my opinion, now serving in the Student Legislature. He is currently serving as Speaker Pro-Tempore of the Student Legislature, as chairman ofthe Ways and Means Committee, chairman of the

Three UNC Seniors Granted Bowman-Gray Scholarships

. . . win scholarships to Bowman-Gray Medical School

Three Carolina seniors have been named recipient of scholarships to the Bowman-Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem, it was announced yesterday.

Robert W. Carter, Herman Allen Godwin Jr., and Wade H. Lefler Jr. were among eight winners announced by Dr. C. C. Carpenter, executive dean.

The scholarships, provided by the L. Smith Reynolds Foundation, range in amount from $2,400 to $4,800 a year. They cover the entire cost of a medical education, including four years of medical school and two years of postgraduate training.

Carter, 22, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson Carter of Route 1, Selma. He is a Morehead Scholar, a member of Phi Beta Kappa; Carter will receive an A.B. degree in June. Other activities and honors include president of Graham Memorial Activitie Board, treasurer of the Student Body, Order of the Old Well, Order of the Grail, and Superior Student Class of 1955-56.

Godwin, 22, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Allen Godwin of 907 Orange Ave., Dunn. He is also a Morehead Scholar and will receive an A.B. degree in June. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternities, and is in the Order of the Golden Fleece and Order of the Grail.

Godwin has served as Campus Orientation Chairman and was in the Superior Student Class of 1955-56.

Lefler, 22, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Lefler, Sr. of 832 Ashe Ave., Newton. He will receive an A.B. degree in June. Lefler is a member of Kappa Alpha social fraternity.

He has served as Senior Class President, Junior Class President, and on the Men's Honor Council. He was a Junior Marshal, and was in the Order of the Old Well and the Superior Student Class of 1955-56.

This is the second year the Reynolds Scholarships have been awarded.

Dr. Carpenter stated that they are the most generous scholarships in medical education today, and take into consideration the needs of the student not only during medical school but also during hospital training.

"I am personally proud that we have these scholarships at Bowman-Gray," he said. "The faculty, too, is delighted. The scholarships make this institution unique among medical schools when it comes to rewarding deserving students."

Formal presentation of the awards will take place at a banquet to be held at 6:30 p.m. April 10 at the Old Town Club in Winston Salem.

Deferred Rush

Part II: Objections Overruled

Finally one must deal with objections raised by the IFC. Some of the objections have already been dealt with. But for the record, the editor will try to deal with them in an ascending order of importance.

One of the things the IFC mentioned was that the pledge or freshman would be deprived of the guidance and assistance of a "big brother," however, with the new counselling program in operation, one might feel rather strongly that the guidance offered by the counselor would be a great deal better than the guidance of a "big brother." Secondly, it was pointed out that the pledge might suffer the loss of compulsory study halls. In an atmosphere of freedom such as this University possesses, there should be no such thing as a compulsory study hall, but even for those who would claim that such a study hall is a good thing, one need only look to the record to point up the fact that such study halls have been ineffective in dealing with the academic adjustment of the freshman.

One must remember that fraternity rushing is a competitive business and that by the time rush is over with, the fraternities will have pledged a large percentage of the brightest students on the campus. Yet, with all the "advantages" of compulsory study halls, fraternity pledges do not do better work than other freshmen, and once attaining brotherhood with no pressure of needing study to attain brotherhood, the general fraternity average is lower than that of the rest of the campus. So, it may be seen that scholastic adjustment is not noticeably aided by being a member of a fraternity in the beginning of one's college career.

The supposedly altruistic argument that dormitories would not find relief from crowded conditions until spring semester goes by the boards when one finds that over three hundred rooms at present are either unoccupied or partially occupied, and construction on a new eight story dormitory is on the way this summer. The University no doubt can find room for these students, and the University already has set up a money refunding policy that is prohibitive of many students moving out of the dormitory. Apparently, the University is not too concerned with this problem.

A further argument not brought out specifically by the IFC is that deferred rush would mean that freshmen would lose certain social advantages. There are two weaknesses in this argument. The first is that only certain freshmen will lose social advantages, since a majority are not pledged anyway, and the second is that a new student union is coming soon which will more than eliminate the social disadvantages the freshman might suffer under.

The IFC raises the argument of dirty rushing and the question of the impossibility to keep a silence period. Under a healthy system there would be no silence period and hence no such thing as dirty rush. The idea of this program is to enable a student to get to know as many different people as possible and as many different fraternities as possible. The idea would be to provide the opportunity for fraternity men to get to know each prospective pledge. To those who would counter that the freshman would have no rest from rush, perhaps a stipulation could be placed in the rush rules or lack thereof that no prospective pledge be allowed in the fraternity house except on weekends. The idea is to build natural associations and to build a natural relationship between fraternity and pledge. The idea is not to delay the high pressure sale until the next semester or next year.

Finally, and most important, the fraternities raise the argument of finances. They point out that they will lose initially quite a great deal, and there is no arguing with this point. However, there is a very strong and valid argument for the establishment of deferred rush despite the possible financial ramifications of such a move. This argument has been stated when the editor discussed why deferred rush, and why the fraternities can only justify themselves and brotherhoods of individuals and by providing living space for groups of people.

Yet, the financial argument raises a problem. One does not want to legislate organizations out of existence because they are not yet at their optimum efficiency. However, one does want to establish deferred rush. Hence, the ideal thing to do is to give the fraternities an opportunity to prepare for deferred rush—a one or two year moratorium in which the fraternities know that deferred rush is coming and know that they must prepare for it. Secondly, a loan fund can be established so that the fraternities may have money to meet the initial expense and defray it on the installment plan in small payment over a period of several years. Under this plan, no fraternity would cease to exist, and no fraternity planning a new house or additions to their present structure would have a greatly increased burden over and above that of their construction.

In other words there is not an argument against deferred rush that will stand up to test, and there is not an argument for it, that has been tested and found wanting. With this in mind, student government or the administration has nothing to lose by trying, and the sooner it is done the better.

An Interview

This is a partial text from a Presidential press conference as created by that master satirist, Jules "Sick, Sick, Sick" Feiffer. The President speaks:

"Now I feel there has been and is now a certain misconstruction of some remarks that I have made—was quoted to have made here, at this conference last week.

"Now I want, because it's always been my policy, to clear this thing up right away. I intended no slur or disrespect at all to the memory of Baby Face Nelson.

"You know it is my policy to never deal in personalities! In my reference to Mr. Nelson I referred only to the legend, so to speak—a fictitious character you might say—like Wild Bill Hickok or Mr. Dulles.

"Now I have no idea where Baby Face Nelson, in fact, stood on the integration issue or, for that matter, on the blowing up of school and synagogues. Let me make that clear.

"I want to correct any misunderstanding on this point because I deplore the actions of extremists on both sides—those who blow up schools and those who want to keep them open. I can't stress that too firmly!

"I think if those people who want to blow things up thought about fair play for awhile they would see there are different ways of playing the game, so to speak, and finalizing their goals. Why don't they go through the courts?

"Now do not misunderstand. This is not meant to be an endorsement of the courts. I have never taken a stand on the courts. I think in my position that would be uncalled forbecause, and I feel strongly about this, I think this issue like foreign affairs should be above partisan debate so as not to give our enemies the wrong impression, whatever that may be.

"I mean, of course, no disrespect for our enemies by that remark.

"Next question."

"Really, You're A Mess"

France's Future: The Leadership Of DeGaulle

Joe John

"The emotional side of me tends to imagine France, like the princess in the fairy stories of the Madonna in the frescoes, as dedicated to an exalted and exceptional destiny. Instinctively, I have the feeling that Providence has created her either for complete successes or for exemplary misfortunes . . . . In short, to my mind, France cannot be France without greatness." — Charles de Gaulle

The display cases in the library concerning the Fifth Republic of France brought to mind how brief the search for a 1958 "Man of the Year" must have been.

In actuality, there was but one choice. It was a tenacious and courageous man who stood head and shoulders above all other national leaders.

In the timeless span of about ten months, the 66-year-old hero of World War II has picked up a foundering France from the gutter and set her feet back upon the paths of her former eminence.

In the period that has elapsed since this tall, still erect soldier came out of more than a decade of self-imposed seculusion, the entire destiny of France has been reshaped. De Gaulle has turned her face toward a future which, if the Gallic soul is strong enough to meet his demands of austerity, may be greater than at any other period in the nation's history.

"Le papa" of the Fifth Republic has become much more than the "man on horseback," the rigid symbol to whom the French people turned in a desperate wartime plight. They are able to see him now as a human being in whom they may place their trust and with whom they find remarkable personal dignity. Yet, despite all this, de Gaulle still stands an aloof figure, evoking the purposeful adoration which the French reserve for their great.

During World War II, perhaps the worst the enemies of de Gaulle could say of him was that he had a selfish, almost psychopathic, urge to make sure that no one took advantage of his country. He maintains that spirit today.

When Charles de Gaulle took over as premier of a France teetering on the brink of anarchy last Spring, he established for himself two main goals:

1) to push through constitutional reforms that would provide a solid foundation for responsible government in France;

2) to find a solution to the chronic Algerian crisis.

At the time, both looked willnigh impossible. Political confusion —always characteristic of the Fourth Republic—was at its free-wheeling peak. In Algeria, the Army and French rebels had banded together in defiance of Paris. Algerian rebels continued to demand independence and to support their cause with bloodshed.

But de Gaulle, maneuvering with the cunning and courage of a Mississippi River gambler, managed to parlay a poor hand into an impressive stack of chips.

Specifically, Charles de Gaulle tore away the flimsy structure of the never stable Fourth Republic: ended the rat-race of premiers and cabinets tumbling out of office even before their names had been painted on the door; tightened the structure of the French community of nation through ratification of a new Constitution; and broken the strength of France's over-weening Communist Party, both at the polls and in the Chamber of Deputies.

He has at least ameliorated conditions in Algeria, moreover, where the lengthy rebellion during the past four years had sapped the strength of his countrymen. The Fifth Republic has also been put upon a sound financial basis, with sound foreign markets.

Elected the first President of the French Fifth Republic, de Gaulle was endowed with more powers than any French head of the government since Napoleonic days. His term is for seven years.

These will be seven fateful years for France, with a single man charged with the gigantic task of restoring France to the greatness of which President de Gaulle has always dreamed.

If he succeeds in solving all the problems with which he is confronted—and they are still infinite—if he is able to unify France and pacify and strengthen France's overseas possessions, welding them into happy harmony with the new French Republic, he will become a towering figure, not only of the age of which he is a living part, but of the far-flung range of history.

Only a few truly great men stand above the multitudes of those who fail to pass the acid test by which time measures the calibre of the makers of history. Some, it is true, stand out in historical annals because of the evil they have wrought, but still less manage to reach the pinnacles of fame because of high achievement.

The world will be watching him during the next seven years. He could well be the "Man" of every one of them.

SUPERMANSHIP. By Stephen Potter. 128 pp. New York: Random House. $3.

Since the demise of the Third Reich and the new look in Soviet diplomacy, SUPERMANSHIP has become a more or less general institution with its strongholds in fraternal organizations, professional collegiate athletics (no contradiction there) and the Women's Residence Council.

It was only a matter of time before someone in this great democracy of ours ("every man a superman") should write a book codifying the practice of SUPERMANSHIP: this, obviously, is the book, destined to take its place on the shelf next to Rober's Rule of Order, as well as such books as Gamesmanship, Lifemanship, and One-Upmanship, all of these last three from the pen of the same Mr. Potter.

SUPERMANSHIP, according to the jacket of this latest treatise on do-it-yourself superiority, is an investigation into "how to try to continue to stay top without actually falling to pieces." The investigation is carried on by an ostensibly non-profit organization known as the Lifemanship Correspondence College of One-Upness and Ganmeslifemastery, which issues such reports as this one from time to time.

It is of interest to those who disapprove of this column and its activities that Mr. Potter devotes some space to Reviewmanship, which he proceeds to define as "How to Be One Up on the Author Without Actually Tampering With The Text." This practice involves the effort "to show that it is really you yourself who should have written the book, if you had had the time, and since you hadn't, you are glad that someone has, although obviously it might have been done better."

Mr. Potter carries on in this vein through such topics as "Superbaby," "Supertown in Supercountry," "Counter-country," "Hamlet is a Lousy Farce," "When to use Thin Spidery Handwriting," and so on.

It's all good fun in a very British vein, without any punch lines or belly laughs, but a steady pull on the leg instead. Those who enjoyed "1066 And All That"—as well as those who are already fans of Mr. otter—will enjoy this one. If the fraternities and the Women's Residence Council don't include this in their new handbooks, the rest of us can use it against them.

THE HORSE'S MOUTH, by Joyce Cary.

The movie version of this, currently at the Varsity Theatre through Saturday, is good enough to send us back to the book, to which the movie compares favorably but is not equal. It is worthy of note, then, that the novel is available in a soft-covered edition, published by the UNIVERSAL LIBRARY for $1.25.

THE SIMPLICITY OF SCIENCE. By Stanley D. Beck. 212 pp. New York: Doubleday & Co. $3.75.

The publication of this book is an embarrassment for the very reason that it is something which we so badly need, and that need is one of the most serious faults in our education. The book is nothing more or less than a lucid discussion of what it is that a human being does—what it is that we all do—when he is a scientist. The embarrassing thing about this is that the book is intended for adults, rather than for sixth-graders, and with good reason.

For one thing, the Russians have shown us one aspect of the deficiency in our educational system: we just do not have enough scientists, because science is inadequately and infrequently taught in American schools. But more important in the long run is our failure to include at least a minimum of scientific training in every so-called liberal education: this minimum requirement is not at all satisfied by the current requirements, which give the average liberal arts student practice into a useless metodology rather than insight into a dominant philosophy of our time—into one human approach to reality.

In an extremely lucid introduction to the philosophical underpinnings and mathematical methods of science, Mr. Beck does an extremely important job; one which, unfortunately, was not done long ago. He begins with a thorough description of the scientific method, then goes on to a brief explanation of statistics, atomic physics, and other modern scientific developments, illustrating his points with anecdotes from the history of science.

In the end, he comes up against the thorny problem of the status of religion—and, by implication, all philosophy—in a scientific society. Unfortunately, he ducks the problem, altough he is good enough to demonstrate clearly the limits of science; but the best he can do in an attempt to reconcile his dilemma and yet aovid despair is to conclude that "to deny purpose (for human life) because it cannot be found in the theories of science, is very much like denying the existence of music because you cannot play the 'Star-Spangled Banner' on a calculating machine." It's not very much like that at all.

MATHEMATICS FOR THE GENERAL READER. By E. C. Titchmarsh.

What Mr. Beck does in a summary fasion for the general field of science, Mr. Titchmarsh does in this Anchor Book (A169: 95c).

By limiting himself to mathematics, which, however great its province is still somewhat more limited than the whole field of science, Mr. Titchmarsh commits himself to a deeper exploration of his subject. Thus, this is not a book for casual reading, but it does explain in non-technical terms the fundamentals involved in everything mathematical from counting to calculus.

On Courtesy

Bill Bailey

There are many facets of our culture, that, when observed by an inquiring mind, prove little more than barbaric. Some of these immaturities are great, some are small, and all are equally puzzling. But let us concern ourselves with one of the lesser, that offspring of bad taste, common courtesy.

Though I don't pretend to know the origin of common courtesy, it must have begun somewhat after the cave man faded. He and the tree-swinging variety of early humans obviously had a much simpler and less hypocritical society than do we, the mentally advanced. Did Mr. Oog offer Mrs. Oog his sitting-rock when she came into the cave? Why, no; she got her own rock, and would have laughed if the old man gave her his. And she would have been confused if Oog stood back and let her go through the door first, if he had gotten there before she. But as Oog and his ancestors gained in cerebrum, they choose not only the cross, but woman; as new fetishes to vent their inner wild man upon . . . the new intelligence served not only to increase thought, but to decrease sincerity. More and more they duped themselves into believing that the female was the weaker sex and at the same time freshened their vanity vase with the flower of chivalrous nonsense. It seems that as civilization progresses, man must turn his unconscious primitive element upon such niceties. Psychologically this notion is understandable, but as to reason, it is absurd. Why is it, for instance, that the male must walk on the outsdie of the female in a downtown stroll? Why can he not talk on the subjects he pleases? Why stand up when a young lady enters the room? Why wear a coat and tie for a Sunday night date? Are these things rational? I think not. This business is no longer merely friendship and love, but palpable idiocy. What makes it necessary for a man, both sane and wise, to cultivate this air of obsequiousness? I don't know . . . I am really at a loss to say. I suppose it is just another one of those irritating splinters in one's hide that everyone has to bear, much the same as the Ku Klux Klan and Protestantism.

This notion of courtesy, I concede, would not be so distasteful if the ones that practiced it would only leave their fellows be. But I protest because I am continally crushed into submitting to it. With my looks, getting a date is hard enough, but if, on top of that, I refuse to pay the girl complimentary courtesy, I may as well content myself with being avoided completely by the fair sex. Nowadays girls are really too filled with this socio-tradition bunk to see the problem clearly . . . to see that they look almost as ridiculous as their door-opening companions when they allow themselves to be coddled so. I would certainly respect them more if they would show some personal independence. However, being of a pessimistic sort, I doubt that either group will succeed in any real analysis of the issue: that's too much to ask of the reluctant ego.

If only the social garbage skow would not insist on pressing me into the crew, I think I could actually enjoy this business of common courtesy. As a matter of fact, I have always liked the zoo, watching the anteater and South American sloth, the bald eagle and the salamander; what lustre a cage for human eccentricities would bring for the place! What inferiority all the other animals would feel! . . . . Ah, but all this is idle dreaming; one might as well wish for religious abstinence, the end of wars, freedom, or honesty. At birth all these things are safely pushed beyond the reach of the grasping hand, and any attempt to break out of the harness is swiftly rewarded with a blow to the hindquarters. And the smarting intellect is assuaged by a savage egoism that eats up pride in one gulp.

What are we to do about this? How must we go about deadening the pain around the sensitive areas? No definite answer exists. I only wish, hope for, and anticipate the happy hours alone with myself, when I can think of the age of Oog, his bananas and cocconuts, his beard and his lice, his igorance . . . . and his integrity.

State Affairs Committee and chairman of the Judicial Review Committee.

"I believe that his qualifications are without doubt the best of any presidential candidate.

"Jim Crownover's record," he continued, "would fill up the front page of the Daily Tar Heel, therefore I can mention only a few of the things he's done: floor leader for the Student Party in the Student Legislature, chairman of the Drinking Rules Committee, dorm president and manager, a member of the SP Adivsory Board, the judicial review committee, and State Affairs Committee.

"Crownover's record in the Student Legislature is a campaign platform within itself, for it shows that a student who works his way through school can still devote himseld to the betterment of the University of North Carolina.

"Anne Lucas is currently serving in the Student Legislature and is chairman of the Rules Committee in the legislature. Her position in the Student Legislature is unmached by any woman on this campus. She will be a valuable asset to the student government.

"Erwin Fuller has served on the Audit Board and in the Student Legislature. He has also served the Student Party as its treasurer. He is a business major and member of Delta Sigma Pi fraternity.

"I feel without a doubt that Erwin Fuller is the most informed student on financial affairs in the University.

"With such a qualified and capable team as the Student Party has nominated for the big four offices, I believe the Student Party will be given an unexcelled vote of confidence on April 7.

"I urge my fellow students," Sheffield concluded, "to examine and compare the records of these candidates with the other candidates and I am sure that their decision will not be a hard one."

the opposition has now, at long last, decided to join us. If the opposition does this listening job as conscientiously as we have, then they will be shocked by the accummulated bitterness, contempt and derision directed at student government."

Minter branded the fraternity issue as "a phony."

The U. P. chairman said, "Every year we get slugged with this thing. It is the Student Party's equivalent of redbaiting, or, to put the matter in Southern terms, it's the waving of the bloody shirt.

"The Student Party has nothing else to talk about so they cover up their own intellectual bankruptcy once a year by yelling about the fraternity menace.

"U. P. candidates," said Minter, "will provide sober, responsible leadership. These candidates are painfully aware of the limitations in student government. They know about the gulf between students and student 'leaders.'

"They wll bridge this gulf by concentrating on campus problems, not the future of the world. U.P. candidates do not believe in a crusade a day to keep reality away. All the armoured knights on white horses belong to the opposition.

"We are happy to concede the supremacy of the Student Party when it comes to riding some pet horse off to the crusades. But genuine political leadership, firmly anchored in reality, can only be found in the University Party."

Delta Kappa Epsilon Wins Best Pledge Class Award

Delta Kappa Epsilon was honored as winner of the best pledge award at the Greek Week Convocation Thursday night in Memorial Hall.

The award is presented to the best pledge class as determined by scholarship, athletic abilities, and participation in Greek Week work day and carnival day.

Beta Theta Pi received the scholastics award as the group with the highest first semester average, while Alpha Tau Omega received the award for the best carnival booth on Carnival Day. Sigma Alpha Epsilon collected the most points on field day to win the athletic award.

Bryon Latham, chairman of Greek Week, emphasized that the week "is a project of the Interfraternity Council for the benefit of school and community as well as fraternity."

The first day of the annual week featured field day, with competition in the following relays: up-down; shuttle dash; jump stick; obstacle; and a tug-of-war. Points were awarded for success in the several events.

Work Day, Tuesday, stressed community service with each fraternity assigned to various sites chosen for improvement. Among the areas where work was conducted were the Negro Home Day nursery, the Community Church, the Negro Recreation Center, the Forest Theater, Battle Park, and Memorial Hospital. Each class was required to work for three hours.

Wednesday the groups matched wits on intramural field with numerous carnival booths, such as ATO's winning mock burlesque exhibition and Sigma Chi's second place donkey race.

Two exchange dinners were arranged to promote interfraternity good-will.

ACC Season Produced Many Promising Sophs

By RUSTY HAMMOND

With the basketball season at last dead and buried, the fact stands out that the Atlantic Coast Conference produced some of the brightest young stars in the nation this season.

Team by team, here's the run-down on the outstanding sophomores around the league:

Heels Had Moe And Larese

Here at Carolina Coach Frank McGuire came up with probably the best sophomore duo in the nation in Doug Moe and York Larese. Moe averaged better than 12 points per game and Larese better than 14. Each made every all-conference team, and each had a high-point night of 32. Two other bright hopes for the future Tar Heels were Lou Brown and Jim Donahue.

Clemson College's only sophomore of note was Ed Krajack, brother of George. The younger Krajack moved into a starting role toward the end of the season and will be counted on next season.

Duke Produced Most

The biggest single market for sophomore has to be Durham, where Duke's Hal Bradley often started a complete team of sophomore. The two outstanding members of this dangerous combination were Carroll Youngkin and Howard Hurt. Youngkin made many all-conference teams and Hurt was second team. Youngkin was the league's third best scorer and second best rebounder. Also featured in the Duke attack were sophs Fred Kast, Doug Albright, John Frye and Merrill Morgan.

N. C. State's brightest sophomore, guard Mark Reiner, quit school at mid-season. His running mate Stan Niewierowski returned however, and played quite a lot. Other State sophs who shared the Wolfpack's ACC championship were Bruce Hoadley, Bob DiStefano and Bob McCann. All of these players will be depended on heavily next season since State graduates four of its starters.

McKenzie Booted

Virginia came up with two fine sophomores, but one didn't finish the season. Jay McKenzie was among the league's top five scorers until he was kicked off the team for disciplinary reaons. The other soph was forward Walt Densmore.

Wake Forest chipped in with two good sophs, center Jerry Steele and backcourt whiz Alley Hart. The Deacs will probably use both a lot more next year.

Only Maryland of all the eight conference schools failed to produce an outstanding sophomore, being content to go with the proven talent they already had.

All in all, it was a banner year for sophomores in the ACC with three of them (Moe, Larese and Youngkin) making all-conference. Much more will be written into basketball history by these young men next season.

ACC Indoor Track Meet Here Sat.

The distance running events, the classic Weil mile and the two-mile, promise some of the classiest competition in the sixth annual Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games here Saturday.

Burr Grim of Maryland, who streaked off with wins in both events last year, will not be back, leaving the field open to new candidates.

Maryland Tops

In the Weil mile, the talent-studded Maryland team, which won the Indoor Games last year, offers two more hot candidates in John Clagitt and Franci Colavita. Two others considered among the favorites are Gary Weisiger of Duke and Cowles Liipfert of North Carolina.

The Weil mile has a long and distinguished history and, appearing on the Saturday night program at 8:25 o'clock, always is one of the indoor meet's most interesting and thrilling races.

Mason Chronister of Maryland won the first running of the Weil mile in 1929, with Jimmy Davis of North Carolina taking first place with a record breaking run the next year. Clyde Garrison of N. C. State was a two-time winner (1953 and 1954) while Jimmy Beatty of North Carolina won it three times. Beatty came through in 1955, 1956 and 1957.

Maryland's Grim last year tied the old mark set by North Carolina's Davis in 1940, 4:12.5.

Bishop Favored

In Saturday's two-mile run, scheduled at 9:20 p.m., North Carolina has the number one favorite in Wayne Bishop. Experts are predicting that Bishop will break the two mile record of 9:24.5 set by North Carolina's Beatty in 1956.

Billy Latham of South Carolina and Jerry Nourse of Duke are among the other favorites in the long run.

The Indoor Games, portions of which will be televised over WUNC-TV, shape up as probably the fastest in history, in the opinion of Dale Ranson, chairman of the ACC track committee.

Considers New Job

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — (AP) — Navy officials have given the University of Wisconsin permission to talk to Middie coach Ben Carnevale about it vacant basketball coaching job.

An academy spokesman said the conference would take place after the NCAA tournament.

Carnevale admitted he is interested in talking to the Badgers, but he said "right now there is nothing on my mind but B.U."

SAE Leads Murals Points Race

In the sports of wrestling, basketball and table tennis, SAE has the lead in points. They took a first place in wrestling and table tennis and a second place in basketball.

Along with SAE in the point leaders for wrestling, were DKE second and Beta third.

The point leaders in basketball are: Sigma Nu, Chi Psi and Phi Delt in the fraternity white division. In the fraternity blue division Kap Sig was first with SAE second and Phi Delt third. Leaders in the dormitory division were Mangun, Joyner and Winston in that order. In the grad division Law School took top honors with the Peacocks and Grad History close behind.

In table tennis the point leaders were: SAE and DKE in the fraternity white division, SAE and Phi Delt in the fraternity blue division, and Cobb and Aycock in the dormitory division.

At the present time it looks as if SAE will give everyone a good race for the point leadership.

Three Carolina Fencers To Travel To Nationals

Bob Peebles, Carroll Raver and Mike Collins, three top members of the crack Carolina fencing team, have been named by coaches Pebley Barrow and Dave Evans to represent UNC in the NCAA Fencing Championships.

The National Individual Fencing Championships conducted by the NCAA will be fenced at Annapolis, Md., this year on March 27 and 28 at the Naval Academy.

Team captain Raver, a sophomore from Reigerstown, Md., will enter the foil competition. In eppee the Carolina man will be Peebles, a soph from Falls Church, Va. Rounding out the UNC contingent will be Collins in sabre, a junior from High Point.

In the course of the two days of the tournament each man will fence all the other entries in his weapon. Approximately 40 colleges are expected to enter and fencing will be conducted on 15 strips at the same time. If all the 40 colleges have entries in all three weapons this would mean 2,340 bouts in all. In each weapon there will be over 700 bouts and five strips will fence simultaneously.

The Tar Heel fencers have two more meets this season, the next at the Citadel on April 4 and the last a 3-way event at Johns Hopkins on April 18. So far as a team they have gone undefeated having whipped VMI twice and AMA and the Citadel once.

The men selected will train intensively during the remaining time before the tournament as each will be required to fence nearly 40 bouts in his weapon in the two days of the tourney.

Students Ready for NCAA

BOSTON — (AP) — Yankee cheers will resound in Charlotte, N. C. Friday night when Boston University meets Navy in the NCAA basketball playoffs.

The game will be broadcast by BU's radio station WBUR to students assembled in Sargent Gymnasium.

Arrangements have been made with the telephone company so cheers of BU rooters here may be carried over the loud speaker in the Coliseum at Charlotte.

Amazons Blast McIver 91-72 For Campus Basketball Crown

Alderman won its second consecutive campus Basketball Championship Tuesday night, defeating McIver 91-72 in the finals of the WAA Intramural Tournament. Alderman took the lead with the first goal and retained it throughout the game. The first quarter ended with a 21 to 16 score, and from there Alderman advanced it to 12 points at half-time, 42 to 30. After the rest period McIver battled evenly for a time, the third quarter score recorded 68 to 54. The outcome was evident, however, and in the closing period Alderman stretched it out to a 19-point victory, 91-72.

Journalism Fraternity Initiates UNC Chapter

Carolina will have a new professional fraternity after today.

Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity, will be installed this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Di Senate Hall.

Sigma Delta Chi is a professional group which is devoted to raising the standards of competence of its members, to recognize outstanding achievement by journalists and to promote recognition of the fact that journalism is a true profession.

"Men at the University planning to enter the field of journalism have needed for a long time an organization where they can get together and talk shop," Charlie Sloan, president of the group, said Friday.

Sloan had served as president of The Men's Press Club, the local group which petitioned for a Sigma Delta Chi Charter.

Other members of the group to be initiated in connection with the granting of the charter include Charles Flinner, John Hubbarr, Roy Lucas, Neil Murphy, Al Resch, Paul Rule, Walt Schruntek, Thurman Worthington, Jerry Shields and Stanley Brennan.

Victor E. Bluedorn, Sigma Delta Chi executive director, will conduct the installation and initiation ceremonies.

A full day's activities has been planned for the young fraternity. The schedule opens with a luncheon at the Carolina Inn, and closes with a party at the Delta Upsilon Social fraternity house.

Fraternity Entertains Delegation

Carolina's Tau chapter of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity is host this weekend to 50 delegates from 15 PiKA chapters in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Delegates to the convention arrived Friday and will hold business sessions and discussion groups throughout the day.

A banquet tonight at the Carolina Inn will end convention activities. Speaker at the banquet will be Fred Weaver, UNC dean of student affairs.

Special guests here for the sessions are PiKA's national Vice President David C. Powers and national Secretary L. A. McCall Jr.

'Sloppy' Circulation Hit By Davis Young

The need for improved circulation of The Daily Tar Heel was cited by newspaper editor candidate Davis Young in a statement Friday.

Young said, "As editor, I will make very effort to correct fallacies in the current circulation system of The Daily Tar Heel."

Deficiencies of the current circulation brought to his attention, Young commented, were in Victory Village where the papers in that area are distributed in a "sloppy" manner, unprotected from rain and wind.

"I intend to have a waterproof box installed at the entrance to Victory Village, so that those on their way to the campus in the morning can easily be accommodated at a single centralized spot," he pledged.

Young thinks his plans for improving the circulation method in Victory Village would shorten the circulation route and insure students there of having a paper every day.

Also regarding circulation, Young said he would "make every effort to have papers taken to all places where three or more students live within the corporate limits of Chapel Hill."

He commented that he would also keep close watch over the distribution of papers to dormitories, fraternities and sororities. "Every student must pay for The Daily Tar Heel, and has every right to expect a product for his fees," he said.

Young would follow up the waterproof box for papers in Victory Village with similar boxes at convenient points around town "so that a number of papers may daily be within the reach of those not directly connected with the University."

Cosmopolitan Subject Is Pakistan

The Cosmopolitan Club will hear John Honigmann speak on "Pakistan" at 3:45 p.m. Sunday in the Rendezvous Room.

Honigmann, who received his Ph. D. from Yale University, has lived in Pakistan on two different occasions. He has published "Culture and Personality" just recently, and in April his work "The World of Man" will be released.

An International Open House to be held April 19 at the Hillel House will also be discussed at the meeting Sunday. Twenty countries will have displays of clothing and objects of art peculiar to that country.

Grail-Mural Sets Practice For Monday

On Monday afternoon and night, all facilities will be available for Grail Mural practice. Teams may reserve courts and tables by calling the Intramural Office.

Programs with the pairings and schedules have now been released.

As has been stated the purpose of the Grail Mural Sports Jamboree is to bring a closer relationship between the dormitory and fraternity organizations on campus.

The points in the elimination play for the championship in handball, badminton, table tennis, and half court basketball are, 15 for first place, 12 for second, and 8 for third. In archery and foul shooting the division is 12, 11 and 10 respectively. In swimming it is again 15, 12 and 8.

All participants are to report to the bleachers on the main floor of Woollen Gym, and from there they will be in the hands of the leaders of each sport.

The relays for the Jamboree are Maze Dribble, Circle and Run; Throw, Catch, Run and Carry; Block Exchange, and the championship relay is the Baton-Dash Exchange. The two top teams in the first three relays qualify for the championship relay.

International Board Openings Available

Students interested in serving on the International Students Board have been asked to fill out applications in the student government office in Graham Memorial for interviews March 17 and 18.

The board will be composed of a chairman, 10 members and will be concerned with programs selecting Goettingen scholars, publicizing exchange scholarships, coordinating vacations and trips, international discussions and orienting foreign students on campus.

Coed Handbook Needs Staff

Coeds interested in a position on the Women's Handbook staff have been asked to leave their names with Mrs. Martha DeBerry in the dean of women's office by Monday at 5 p.m.

Applicants are to state briefly past experiences with publications as well as the phase of the handbook publication they might be interested in.

Any additional information may be secured from Dee Daniels, Handbook editor, at 8-9142 or The Daily Tar Heel office.

Dave Jones Stresses Complete Coverage

"News about every phaze of student activity" was stressed by editorial candidate Dave Jones in a statement prepared for release Friday.

"I feel that the stringer system should be fully established throughout the campus. Every dormitory, fraternity and sorority on this campus should have an unofficial member on the staff of The Daily Tar Heel. This would mean that newsworthy events and social news would not be unnoticed," Jones said.

Jones also stressed the value of the revenue and added readership attained through a vigorous subscription program. He said that he approved of the current editor's rate increase and his policy of sending a free copy of The Daily Tar Heel to the parents of each new student.

Jones said, however, that the area of faculty subscriptions has been neglected and that possibly a system with a reduced rate for faculty members could be established so that they might become regular members of the Tar Heel's "reading family."

"The Daily Tar Heel's subscription revenue is not much money considered as a part of an all over $43,000 budget, but I am sure that it could be put to very good use and make it's weight felt," Jones said, referring to the revenue received from subscriptions.

"If feel very strongly about the importance of 'real news' on pages one and three because I have my serious doubts as to the desire of the students to read badly prepared political and publicity handouts. Some of this stuff can be covered as feature material in areas specificly set aside for that purpose, but on the news pages I would like to be able to learn what is going on everywhere on campus, as well as on the second floor of Graham Memorial," Jones said.

Student Government Attempts To Clarify Employee Status

By TOM INMAN

Student government will make another attempt to regain unquestioned jurisdiction over two persons it employs in Graham Memorial, and clarify the status of five others.

Two years ago the attorney general ruled from Raleigh that the two were state employees, and so fall, under the State Personnel Act even though they are paid from student activities fees.

Salaries for these two and one other are voted by the Student Legislature. But if the attorney general's ruling stands, wage scales and mandatory raises would be dictated to the Legislature by the State Personnel Act, Student Body President Don Furtado said.

There is also some question about who wields authority over these three, and four others employed in the Student Activities Fund office. The latter four are paid from fees charged student organizations using the office.

Monday, Student Body President Don Furtado and Dean of Students Fred Weaver conferred with Attorney General Malcolm Seawell at Raleigh in an effort to have the two-year-old ruling reversed.

Seawell agreed to re-open the case. So Furtado is preparing student government's side. He will pass his argument on to Chancellor William B. Aycock through Dean Weaver.

The Chancellor will present the case in the near future, Furtado says.

Reason for the attorney general's 1957 ruling grew out of the mechanics of collecting student fees which pay the salaries of the GM employees.

Under state law only the University can collect monies from the student body here. So in 1935 the student body requested the University to collect fees and turn them over to student government for student activities. This the University did.

Two years ago the attorney general's office took the view that since the University collected and dispensed with these monies salaries paid from them were state funds, and employees getting these salaries fell under the State Personnel Act.

Under the SPA all jobs are classified and wage scales are specified. Mandatory pay raises are also required according to time on the job and merit evaluation.

"The employees of Graham Memorial and student government, because of their particular duties, do not always fit neatly into these preassigned categories," Furtado claims.

The State Personnel Office, representing all state employees, is finally pressing for enforcement of the attorney-general's ruling.

But unless the ruling is reversed regulations of the State Personnel Act will be dictating appropriations of the student legislature, Furtado said.

"This would be completely in opposition to our tradition of student control of student funds.

Sound And Fury Tryouts Begin

Tryouts for this year's Sound and Fury production will be held Wednesday.

The production, "Oh Hellas," will have a chorus and several bit parts. Scripts may be checked out from the GM Information Office.

Tryouts for the production written by Lew Harder and Carl Bridgers will be held from 3 to 6 p.m. and from 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday night. Experience is not necessary.

Baptist Student Group Hears About 50th State

It may just be coincidence, but the Baptist Student Union group is having a really up-to-date program Sunday night.

A missionary from what will soon be the 50th state, Hawaii, is scheduled to speak to the BSU on her experiences there last summer. Miss Ann Allred, the Hawaii missionary, was sponsored in her trip to that area by students of North Carolina Baptist colleges through their "Listen" campaign.

Miss Allred will talk to the local BSU after a supper at 6 p.m. Sunday at the University Baptist Church.

Frosh Camp Programming Gets Started

Preparing extensively for the expected onrush of 1500 new students in September will be the job of the Freshman Camp Committee when it meets upstairs in the Y building Tuesday night at 7:30.

Designating of various subcommittees to do the planning preparation in a minimum of time will be the major order of business. A decision is also expected to be made concerning whether or not freshman women should be included in the annual camp.

The camp, sponsored by the Y, is "planned to give the incoming students an opportunity to meet and talk with upperclass student leaders, faculty, University officials and other freshmen," according to Freshman Camp officials.

Tri-Delt Scholarship Is Up For Grabs

The 1959 Tri-Delt Scholarship Competition is now under way.

Approximately $400 in scholarships will be awarded to some Carolina coeds. The scholarship program is an international service, irrespective of sorority affiliation.

All women students are eligible to apply for the scholarships; application blanks may be obtained from the Dean of Women's office. The applications must be returned to this office by April 7.

Staff Meet Announced

A Daily Tar Heel staff meeting will be held Monday at 4 p.m. to select a non-paid staff member to the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

The paid staff representative will also be selected. The board will interview candidates for The Daily Tar Heel editorship and will decide whether or not to endorse each candidate.

Angus Duff To Head New Activities Board Of Graham Memorial

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Angus Duff has been approved by the Board of Directors of Graham Memorial as the new president of Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Other new officers serving with him will be Tony Salinger, vice president, and Jean Blakenship, secretary.

Outgoing president Bob Carter said, "I feel we have an outstanding group of officers for the coming year. They have experience and interest in student union work and should lead GMAB to greater heights."

The new officers will work with the old officers until May in a period of orientation. They will take their posts after an installation banquet on April 23.

Carter requested all students "give these new officers assistance during the coming year and through such an effort the GMAB program will expand and continue to benefit all areas of the campus."

Angus Duff said, "GMAB has the potential of providing more useful and helpful service to the students at Carolina in the form of entertainment, information, social life and activities than any other organization on campus."

According to Duff, GMAB combines all forms of student activity into one unifying body, and a student with any interest in any field can find pleasure and satisfaction by working with it.

"At present, we have had 27 applications for committee chairmanships, the majority being fraternity men. However, we need more girl applicants, for many of the committees function much more effectively with girls as the chairmen," Duff continued.

He stated that his office welcomes any and all who are seeking a position on GMAB, "and with the interest shown thus far, we are certain to have a successful year."

Duff is a sophomore from Greenville and has served as chairman of the Calendar Committee of GMAB this year. He is a Morehead scholar and a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. Duff is a pre-med student majoring in English.

Majoring in chemistry is Tony Salinger, a junior from Westport, Conn. He has been active on the Student Council, IDC and the Glee Club.

Jean Blakenship is a junior English major from High Point. She transferred from Duke this semester, where she was in the YWCA, Glee Club and judiciary.

World Seminar Arranged

The Seventh Annual International Student Relations Seminar will be held from June 29 to Aug. 31 in Cambridge, Mass.

An student may apply, but students planning to study abroad or who are interested in international affairs have been urged to apply. Application blanks are available in the student government office.

Each person selected will receive a scholarship covering the full expense of the nine-week program. The final two weeks will be held at the National Students Association Congress on the campus of University of Illinois. Money for the scholarships comes from a $12,500 grant from the Field Foundation.

The seminar deals with problems of concern to the international student community. Case studies, guest speakers and seminar discussions are included in the program.

President of the student body Don Furtado commented, "The ISRS offers an unparalleled opportunity for American students to meet and discuss problems of the international community among themselves, with student leaders from other countries and with experienced men in the field of international studies."

Pi Lambda Phi Has Pledge Weekend

A dinner dance was held on Friday night as the highlight of the Pi Lambda Phi annual pledge weekend, March 13, 14 and 15.

The annual "best brother" and "pledge of the year" awards were announced at the dinner scheduled at the Chapel Hill Country Club. A house party is planned for this afternoon and evening.

As a climax to the weekend, the Pi Lambda Phi will have a brunch at the fraternity house on Sunday.

Poet Frost Speaks To Full Hall

By RUDY PAQUETTE

It was chilly in Chapel Hill last night and we had Frost.

The evening warmed up pleasantly for the capacity crowd in Memorial Hall as the warmth of Robert Frost worked its way among the listeners.

Robert Frost made his 13th visit to UNC, this time as the "strong and powerful magician to overcome all evils," said William C. Friday, president of the Consolidated University, who introduced him.

Frost applied his first few comments to education saying that he was glad to be mixed-up with education not mixed-up about it. He would like to start a college of his own with no overhead, just a "head."

His college would have courses where no one would have to meet deadlines, as this reporter must do. "I have always run courses where there was no call for thoughts of a deadline," he said. There is one deadline that may give him trouble, he said — May 27th.

Following his opening remarks he read some of his latest poems, one written about a piece of iron which he saw in a meditation room at the UN Building. When he was asked what the piece of iron reminded him of, he said tools and weapons. The poem was about a farmer who stepped on a hoe (a tool) that rose up and cracked him (like a weapon).

Frost, who will celebrate his 85th birthday in 12 days, showed his age as he faltered in some of his readings. But the spirit of the poet-philosopher was felt by the appreciative audience.

He remarked on his poem "Woodchuck" referring it to the past Congressional elections, saying the woodchuck was independent as a Democrat or Republican depending on who won.

He ended his hour and 15 minute readings with three short poems, 'Departmental,' 'Tree at My Window' and 'A Spect.' The last, he ended with the comment, "I like to see a good mind on paper."

Nothing To Do?

Entertainment

There may be something symbolic in the situation of the University with regard to the quality and calibre of entertainment that the University gets.

Part of this lies in lack of funds, and part in fairly sensible regulations that are self-imposed, prohibiting the payment of honorariums to speakers. Yet the plain fact is that the University entertainment is below that of many schools.

The University gets many popular people such as Roger Williams, Montivani, and others, but the times that people of the class of Rubinstein, Serkin, or the New York Philharmonic come to the University are rare if at all.

In the speaker field, the University will get a Sparkman, a Jackson, a Kelly, or an Eban, but it is rare that the University will get a Stevenson, a Rickover, a Warren, or a Truman.

In the field of the arts, the University can be thankful for the annual visits of one of America's greats—Robert Frost, but the cummings, the MacLeishs, and others have not come.

Of course, the Symposium is helping to bring some good speakers, but their numbers are few, and the replenishment needed to follow up a Symposium is non-existent.

The idea of a Fine Arts Forum is a healthy one, but after funds did not materialize this year, the idea has died, and there seems to be no one who is willing to resurrect it, before it becomes too late again.

Indeed, Carolina is faced with a double plight. The primary one is the inability of the school to draw the top flight performers, speakers, and artists of this age, while drawing many competent, professional, but average people.

The second is the lack of student initiative in trying to draw these people to the campus.

Indeed this seems to be a reflection of the University at the present time, a mirror image of what many people in the administration and without are working to eradicate.

It is a problem of creating an aura of excellence, an aura not possessed by the University now, an aura possessed in the past, and an aura hopefully attainable in the near future.

In the meantime every possible student effort should be made. The Fine Arts Forum should have its renaissance. The Carolina Forum has to launch a year long fight for speakers. The Student Entertainment Committee had better try to schedule top flight entertainers along with the popular ones. Both have a place, but in respect to top flight entertainers, that college twelve miles away has Carolina beat by a small mile.

With effort in raising both the level of student active participation, this University may again be able to attract the best. This is a situation to be desired.

Count Them

The Daily Tar Heel has heard a reliable report that the Elections Board does not plan to count ballots the night of the elections.

This would be a bad thing. At first there is the very obvious possibility that ballot box stuffing will again be in vogue. But perhaps even more important is the right of the candidates to know the result of their election without having to sweat out another day in which they can do nothing to help or hinder their cause. Moreover, it will delay by a day the reorganization of the various offices, thus putting even greater pressure on the newly elected officials.

There is a need for new procedures in the handling of elections, but the sorting and counting of ballots has never been a difficulty, since there has always been a sufficient number of people able and willing to do the work.

The Elections Board's decision does not have to be final, and it might be a good idea if both parties joined in defeating this measure.

Moonglow

Joe John

It's Thursday night. The dorm is pretty quiet for a change, and you're struggling with a French translation.

Suddenly the pleasant silence is broken: "Raleigh's on fire." The regular evening occupants of the TV "parlor" have come racing through the halls spreading the portend of the city's doom.

You make a mistake. You step out into the hall. A surging crowd sweeps; you along and the next thing you're aware of is your presence in a crowded, speeding automobile on the Raleigh highway. A brief stop—gas and beer .Then, onward.

The radio blares with "on the spot" commentaries on the progress of the blaze. You can sense the imminent disappointment when the announcement is made that the once seventy-five foot flames are being brought under control.

Not too far from the city someone spots a glow in the sky. All gape at haze; the car drones its reluctance to being driven on gravel. A swerve—back on the road, and, onward.

Parking several blocks away, you race with the others to the scene of the fire. Across the street is that sister institution . The flames are bright, but not the seventy-five feet previously proclaimed. You are first struck with the spectacular hook-and-ladder parked in the center of the street, at the top of which is perched a dare-devil fireman drenching the blaze with a steady stream of water.

A bowling alley, just re-furnished with automatic pinsetters and the latest in bowling contraptions, is apparently the primary source of disturbance. A bar next door has gone temporarily "dry" and is also being engulfed by the flames. A beauty shop, drugstore, and shoe repair shop have also suffered less-serious damage. The fireman have done their work well, however, and there should be no further outbreak in the area.

The crowd is rather cheerful. They applaud the efforts of the fire-fighters, the bold cameramen and reporters, and they shriek with delight when a escaping hose douses the front-row occupants.

A young lady is complaining about her shoes still in the bowling alley. Some fellow is grumbling about having just ordered a pitcher. Others are smiling and joking. Oh well, no has been injured. Insurance will take care of it.

The trip back is not so fast. You have a little time to think.

The next day you read about it in the paper. Another day you read about an Arkansas fire. They weren't so lucky.

Jazz Programming

The need for a regular, diversified, and impromtu Jazz television show is apparent. There have been a few sporadic shows that have been on the air but none of these have been periodic. One of these staggered shows is the Timex Jazz Show. This show has had the best Jazz talent in the world including such greats as Louis Armstrong, Gene Krupa, and Duke Elington. This hour-long, fast moving show is one of the finest of its kind and it has never been dragged out like some of the "adult westerns" of today's viewing choices.

The Timex Show has the shortest and the absolute least in commercials and the most jam-packed 50 minutes of music that one may see on television. What is the reason for not putting this show, or one parallel to it, on the air weekly (or even monthly)? Is it because the sponsors are afraid that it will not have any patronage? Certainly the comments by the viewers have been much to the contrary. Jazz is good, clean, entertaining music which has no age "barrior" like some of the publishers and recording companies say of "Rock and Roll." And, may I add that anyone who wastes his good time watching such trash as the Hit Parade for his interpretation of a musical television show should welcome this type of program.

In the New York area on a local station the ideal Jazz show has appeared. It is produced by Art Ford, a local disc jockey, who is only a figurehead tieing the show together with his talk in between numbers. Mr. Ford calls his show the Jazz Party and features many famous names (as well as a few upstarts in the field) doing purely impromtu music with Mr. Ford in the background making the narration.

The Jazz Party is an hour and a half weekly live television show. The New Yorkers love it and it is gaining viewers every week. The nation as a whole, I believe, would accept with acclaimation a network show of this kind. It is about time the sponsors took a good thing into their hands and gave us one. Perhaps we would rather watch psuedo-drama where the best man always wins instead of true art expression where diversified enjoyment can always be found. I don't think so.

J. DeBLASIO

ROTC:, Militarism On The UNC Campus

Bill Bailey

There have been, in the course of history, hundreds upon hundreds of totally useless institutions formed and dissolved. In my more optimistic moments, I have smiled and put my faith in the homo sapiens: he has been but an infant, and who can not forgive an infant for making mud pies or kicking helpless animals . . . but now man is growing into his sandy-haired, voice squeeking adolescence. However man, like an early teenager, has certain primitive holdovers that make for stout evidence that he has hardly reached any real maturity. He still wets his bed and sucks his thumb; he still produces Billy Grahams and A. J. Cronins. But nothing makes me more ashamed and disappointed than the realization that he yet shakes his abominable rattle . . . . the military school, the R. O. T. C.

It is really amazing that college boys, some handsome and many wise, can lap up the slop that the Boobus militarius pour into their mental troughs. Why do people scoff at astrology, the chiropractic, and phrenology, and then turn to partiotism and the organizied Military? This is indeed as curious a question as the origin of religion in primitive man . . . . and almost twice as vague. On the surface, I suppose it began early in childhood by our elders honking the altruistic horn in our ear, or perhaps wth that ridiedlods flag-waving bit in grammer school. At any rate, it's gotten into our veins, and by college age, we are goose-stepping in the best Prussian style. We eat the stuff up; our chests swell; we join the R. O. T. C.

Have you ever looked at one of these fine young cadets around the campus . . . no, I mean really examined him? Next time you see one, observe. Notice his eyes; they have that far off vacant gaze that is filled reverence, love of country, and similar hog wash. His face is a sculpture of smug paste. But it is his bearing that really annoys you: shoulders squared, hands out of pockets, step paced; all in all a picture of irritating uniformity. I feel sure that if a visiting Martian should, by chance, pick one of the military genera to examine, he would instantly be convinced that we have succeeded in producing workable robots. But if he realized that we were not producing robots, he would be as dumbfounded as you and I in discovering that they were intentionally made as a human art-form.

Of course, if you are the jocular sort, then you can take it all with a big guffaw. There is nothing so ridiculous, amusing and pathetic than to walk into one of those little white meeting-houses, and listen to the prattle. Bespangled and befobbed clowns stalking here, shuffling papers there, barking and woofing at one another, casting sinister glances at any newcomer. And the most annoying discovery is that these birds cannot be caged; they carry papers of immunity from the law. The Supreme Court cannot outlaw them; hold constitutional privileges. The President cannot issue a mandate; he is one of them. So . . . the only choice we have felt is to scrutinize them through the large end of the eyeglass and convince ourselves that they are only another puzzling color in the human kaleidoscope . . . and start tickling our ribs.

But, like I say, man is yet in his youth; he will grow up. I have great hopes for his future. He will build monuments to perfection: Ideals will swell into the noonday of human achievement.

But have you ever heard of the teenager that played chicken with his Dad's car . . . . .

On Ayme

Frank Crowther

ACROSS PARIS. And other stories. By Marcel Ayme. Translated from the French by Norman Denny. 254 pp. New York: Harper & Bros. $3.50

Although, as Henri Peyre stated, "it has become customary to lament the decline of the short story in modern letters," there have been several good omens of late which may indicate a renewed interest in the short story tradition. One instance was the National Book Awards, sponsored by the American Book Publishers Council, the American Booksellers Association and the Book Manufacturers Institute—the award this year for fiction went to Bernard Malamud's The Magic Barrel, an exceptionally well-written collection of short stories.

Recently, Simon & Schuster, Inc. published two such collections: Short Stories by Luigi Pirandello and A Commodity of Dreams and Other Stories by Howard Nemerov. Both of these books are in the best tradition of the short story. Last year, Irwin Shaw's Tip on a Dead Jockey proved to be a highly successful collection of stories. And before that there were Salinger's Nine Stories and James Purdy's Color of Darkness.

If those are not omens enough (we almost said ominous), add for this year Masters of the Modern Short Story edited by Walter Havighurst and Great Russian Stories published for the first time in paperback edition by Modern Library - Random House. We could go on, but our present interest is yet another books so revenons a nos moutons.

Marcel Ayme's Across Paris is certainly a remarkable collection of short stories. The author himself is one of France's most honored writers and this collection is his first volume of stories to appear in English translation. Readers may remember him from two of his novels, The Green Mare and The Second Face. He was born in 1902 and, as many other writers, "had a horror of school."

Probably his greatest talent is the capacity to move his story from the common sense world into the realm of the mystical and supernatural without offending the reader. When he makes a striking alteration in appearance, character or circumstances, it is as believable as a tadpole's change into a frog or a catapiller's transformation into a butterfly.

It has been stated that many people, when first confronted with Ayme's novels or stories, are infuriated and even bewildered as to his meaning (if any), what class of writer he is or just what it is that he is trying to get at. Aside from a subtle reprovement of the specious reasoning which attends formal moralizing, he is, for this reviewer, merely telling a tale "which does not recognize the commonly accepted frontier between the real and the unreal." He even chided us reviewers with an inscription to his latest volume of short stories published in French. "Unlike the novel," he wrote, "the collection of short stories is never conceived with an eye to the blurb. Each of its separate pieces represents the idea and mood of a moment, and it is not possible to run up for the use of the reviewers a very brief, very weighty summary which will save them the trouble of reading the book." So one reads the book . . . . and is delighted.

Much of the writing is filled with irony and satire that is in no way obstreperous or dishevelled. Quite the contrary, he has superb control over his subject matter and lures us into the tale by a bit of contrived legerdemain. You are into the fable and concerned with the characters before your realize that this just does not happen (or does it?).

Before we run out of space, you may well deserve a brief description of the stories themselves. Two of them, the title story, Across Paris and The Walker-Tthrough-Walls, have been made into motion pictures. The former concerns the smuggling of a dissected pig, which has been split up in four suitcases, across Paris; the latter, presents us with "an excellent man named Dutilleul who possessed the singular gift of being able to walk through walls without experiencing any discomfort." Interesting?

Another, which we believe would make an excellent film, is Martin the Novelist, the story of a writer who couldn't restrain himself from killing off all his characters and who, one day, is confronted by one of his own characters in a novel on which he is at work. The State of Grace is a story of a man who was so pious, upright and full of charity that God awarded him with a bright halo which causes him no end of embarrassment.

Ayme is also at his best in The Wine of Paris which is two stories in one. He begins this tale by telling us of a wine-grower who did not like wine. After the first 400 words or so, he writes "well, now, there is a story about wine that seemed to be starting quite nicely. But it has suddenly begun to weary me." He goes on, however, to tell us what might have happened but finally tells us that this particular theme might have turned out a "good, boozy novel, bursting with fearless realism and devilish psychology, but the very thought of it makes me tired." He then decides to tell us a sad story about wine in which a clerk who happens to be quite fond of wine cannot afford its luxury. He finally goes mad, tries to knock his grandfather's head off when he mistakes the old man for a bottle of claret. In fact, he had reached the point where everybody seemed to be a bottle of wine. Does this make you curious? To add to the intrigue, Ayme brings his original character, the wine-grower who hated wine, into the story at the end.

Counselor Applications Ready Tues.

Coeds may apply Tuesday through Thursday to serve as freshman counselors in the fall.

Applications for these counselors will be available in the dean of women's office Tuesday through Thursday and must be filled out by Thursday.

The freshman counselors will live with the new coeds in Spencer Dormitory the entire year, in addition to their usual duties as orientation guides.

Interviews with applicants for these positions will be held within the next two weeks by a joint committee of the Women's Residence Council and the Orientation Committee.

MRS. VIRGINIA MOWERY, senior medical technologist, works with the new auto analyzer at N. C. Memorial Hospital at the University of North Carolina.

Auto Analyzer Helps Fight Disease In UNC Laboratory

Centuries before the birth of Chirst, man had already begun his ageless search for potions or devices to aid him to combat diseases.

Two of the most recent dramatic developments in this timeless fight against diseases have been the Salk vaccine for polio and the rapid progress being made in this country toward the practical elimination of tuberculosis.

In recent years great strides have been made in the development of machines to assist physicians in their battle against pain and death.

Two of the better known machines of this type are the artificial heart-lung machine and the artificial kidney. Both of these machines are in use at the N. C. Memorial Hospital.

More recently, another modern machine has been placed in use at Memorial Hospital to aid the scientists in their fight against disease. This new instrument is known as an auto analyzer.

Unlike the heart-lung machine and the artificial kidney, the auto analyzer is not attached to the patient's body, but works with fluids that have been removed from the body.

The heart-lung machine takes over the functions of the heart and lungs while delicate operations are performed on the heart. The artificial kidney is used to treat acute kidney failure and to assist the human kidneys to remove poisons from the blood stream. The artificial kidney does not replace the functions of the human kidneys, but assists the human kidneys in their work.

The auto analyzer is located in the Clinical Chemistry Laboratory of Memorial Hospital. The laboratory is headed by Dr. Charles R. Spell, assistant professor of biochemistry in medicine, who received his Ph.D. degree in chemistry from UNC in 1955. He has a staff of 12 persons assisting him in the operation of the laboratory.

A laboratory technician, with the aid of an auto analyzer, can run twice the number of analyses as a technician without the machine. The speed is not the only important element to be considered. Machine analyses are more accurate than those performed by hand.

The auto analyzer holds 40 different samples of fluids. After the fluids are placed in the machine, it takes about one hour for the 40 analyses to be made.

Another advantage of the auto analyzer is that it eliminates the washing of test tubes and other containers, which means a saving of money to the institution that owns such a machine. The fluid containers for the auto analyzer cost a penny each. After the analysis is made, the container is discarded.

The machine makes an analysis by projecting a light through the solution being analyzed. This light strikes, after passing through the fluid, a photoelectric cell, which measures the intensity of color in the solution. This information is then automatically registered on a graph. The information shown on the graph may then be interpreted to tell the concentration of a particular substance of the fluid.

Dr. Spell explains to visitors to the Clinical Chemistry Laboratory that he is not a physician, but a chemist. "We run the chemical tests in this laboratory. Our findings are then reported to the physicians, who are doing the actual treatment of the patients. The medical aspects of our operation here are handled by Dr. Louis G. Welt, professor of medicine of the UNC School of Medicine."

Theater To Be Scene Of GBS Talk

The event is connected with the opening of "The Doctor's Dilemma," a movie based on a play written 50 years ago by George Bernard Shaw.

Dr. Archibald Henderson of UNC, a personal friend of Shaw and his only official biographer, will make a short speech at 7 p.m. before the first evening showing of the film. Dr. R. B. House, chancellor emeritus, will introduce the speaker.

Henderson, said to know more about Shaw than any man alive, has seen an excerpt from the film, according to Andy Gutierrez, manager of the Varsity Theater, and was said to be impressed. Reviewers have called the film a beautiful work of art.

Presbyterian Center Sponsors Film Series

An eight Academy award winning film will be shown during the first of a series of programs sponsored by the Campus Life Committee of the Presbyterian Center.

The film, "On the Waterfront," will be substituted Sunday at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall for "Citizen Kane" as had been previously announced.

After the film, a discussion on sociological, philosophical and theological questions brought out by "On the Waterfront" will be led by Jim Carse and Dr. Russell Graves.

One other film will be shown this semester on the committee's series (the Film Forum), but the program will be expanded next fall. After each film, persons familiar with questions raised by the picture will lead student discussion.

Carse and Graves, who will lead Sunday night's discussion, represent the fields of religion and drama. Carse is a member of the local Y staff and Graves is a visiting professor in the Dramatic Arts Department.

WHO SAID IT FIRST?

"LOVE IS BLIND"

Next to the Bible, Shakespeare is the richest source of common quotes. He's responsible for this one, too. See his "Merchant of Venice," Act II, Scene 6:

"But love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The petty follies that themselves commit."

"THIRTY DAYS HATH SEPTEMBER," ETC.

No need to recite further from this bit of doggerel which has served us all as a pony ever since grade school. For this universal handy reference we are indebted to a man named Richard Grafton who was nice enough to compose the rhyme way back in 1570.

"PUT IT IN YOUR PIPE"

No, Sir Walter Raleigh didn't originate this smoker's challenge. It was R. H. Barham, in "The Lay of St. Odille":

"For this you've my word,
and I never yet broke it,
So put that in your pipe,
My Lord Otto, and smoke it."

Jockey® T-Shirts

The most respected, creative name in underwear is Jockey brand. It stands to reason, then, that Jockey brand T-shirts are unmatched for quality as well as styling. You can choose from standard T-shirt, "taper-tee" shirt, sleeveless t-shirt, and V-neck T-shirt models. Every man needs a drawer full of T-shirts—and the label to look for is Jockey brand. Let it guide you to the world's finest underwear.

Do You Think for Yourself? (TAKE THIS TEST AND FIND OUT!*)

1. Does it bother you to admit that you haven't read a very popular book? YES ☐ NO ☐

2. Do you think there are degrees of cheating in a game or examination? YES ☐ NO ☐

3. Are there certain foods you feel sure you'd dislike without having ever tried them? YES ☐ NO ☐

4. Would you be seriously concerned to read in your horoscope that catastrophe would befall you tomorrow? YES ☐ NO ☐

5. Do you often fall short of cash several days before your pay or allowance is scheduled to come through? YES ☐ NO ☐

6. When you're driving, do you like to be first getting away from a stop light about to change? YES ☐ NO ☐

7. Would you be reluctant to learn a new sport in the presence of friends who were experts? YES ☐ NO ☐

8. Have you found it to be personally true that "a man's best friend is his dog"? YES ☐ NO ☐

9. Do you believe your choice of a filter cigarette should be based on hearsay? YES ☐ NO ☐

If you're the kind of person who thinks for yourself, then choosing a cigarette will be based on a careful study of the facts—not on quick decisions.

Men and women who think for themselves usually smoke VICEROY. Their good judgment tells them there's only one cigarette with a thinking man's filter and a smoking man's taste. And that cigarette is VICEROY.

Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Track Meet Here Today

Many Stars Leave ACC

By RUSTY HAMMOND

This year's ACC race wasn't the five team dash many had hoped for as it developed into a two-team race early in the season. But in the latter stages of the year all the teams began to show their potential, a fact that result in numerous upsets.

What kind of a race will we have next year? Probably another pip. Of course, there is a sad part of every season when the fans look around at the outstanding players that won't be back next year. Let's look around the league and see who is graduating.

The only man to leave the home fort, Carolina, will be Danny Lotz. Lotz provided the Tar Heels with a valuable "sixth" man this season. He is the last squad member to play with the national champions.

Press Maravich will still be chewing that towel next year but he shouldn't be crying into it, for the only man he stands to lose is starting forward Doug Hoffman.

The Duke Blue Devils will lose only subs Jerry Robertson and Marty Joyce, the entire starting line up will be back. Last year the Dukes lost all five starters.

Maryland will lose two starters, but their depth should make up for it and make them a power to be reckoned with again next year. Forward Jim Halleck and guard Gene Danko will graduate and leave the Terps this June.

South Carolina, which gave N. C. State a real battle in the ACC tournament, will have some big shoes to fill come next year. Guard Ray "Cookie" Pericola is the biggest loss, but Center Fred Lentz and sub guard Dickie Prater are also seniors.

Virginia will be hit very hard by graduation. The Cavaliers started living up to their potential too late this year after being picked as a possible conference darkhorse early in the season. Both starting forwards, Bill Metzger and John Siewers, will be gone. Also missing will be two centers, big Herb Busch and relief ace Bob Mortell. Sub guard Dick Stobbs also finishes.

The Demon Deacs of Wake Forest will lose starting forwards Dickie Odom and Olin Broadway, in addition to sub guard Bill Greene.

The hardest hit team by far will be conference champ N. C. State. The Pack loses four of the starting five. Missing next year will be the leading conference scorer John Richter, All-American; Lou Pucillo, forwards Bob MacGillvary and George Stepanovich. Everette Case faces the biggest rebuilding job in the league next season.

Overall, this was a year that didn't graduate too many seniors. And fans can look for another knock down, drag out ACC pennant race next season.

Maryland Rates Favorite UNC, Duke Given Chance

Carolina's Woollen Gym, scorned and scoffed because of its match-box size, takes on rare flag-draped flavor today as the ACC floorshow of the year, the annual Indoor Games, gets under way.

The color-packed, day-night carnival of indoor track, which begins at 1:30, slows down only for supper, and then gets rolling again at 7:30, consists of three divisons — conferences.

Rating as ACC team favorites are Maryland's tough, talented Terrapins who are threatening to do to ACC track what the Yankees are doing to the American League. They are waist deep in strength in almost every event, and only Carolina and Duke pose much of a threat.

Run-Down Of Events

Following is a brief run-down on each event with pre-gun favorites:

50 yard dash—with Dave Sime in med school and Maryland's fabulous sophomore, Butch Spiegel, out with a bad leg, Terp Don Whittaker looks like man to beat.

880 yd. run—Duke's Tom Bazemore is fine half miler, has tremendous indoor time of 1:15.7, but once again faces dismal task of playing second fiddle to UNC great Dave Scurlock who will almost surely beat him again.

Mile Best Race Of Night

One mile run—Shapes up as best race of night, with a possible field of no less than seven who have bettered 4:20 on boards. They are Wayne Bishop and Cowles Liipfert of UNC, Cary Weisiger and Jerry Nourse of Duke, Frank Colavita and John Claggett of Maryland, and Billy Latham of South Carolina. Weisiger, Bishop, and Latham may rate slight edge, but last two may pass it up, run two mile.

Two mile run—Bishop owns fine 9:11.9 this year, is big favorite despite mile possibility. Good duel between he and Latham is possible if both are fresh.

Hurdles—fabulous horde of Terp hurdlers led by Jim Starboard and Pill Johnson, good as they are, will probably take back seat to Gamecock's flexible Don Goodroe. Carolina's Lyndon DeBorde, third last year, should place in highs.

Shot put—Beefy Dave Coates of SC won last year with 54' 2" heave, should repeat. UNC's Don Kemper is good bet for second.

High jump—Maryland's towering Tom Tait, built like a crane, is back again and another gold medal is awaiting him unless someone, say Carolina's Wally Graham, can pull a shocker.

4 Heels In Broad Jump

Broad jump—UNC quartet of Ray Stanley, Ward Sims, Ed Brawley, and Bob Eubanks could whip up a surprise for Maryland's Elliott Thompson who won last year with a leap of 22' 2½".

Pole vault—A Maryland sophomore from Denmark named Bjorn Andersen has reached 14 feet, must be ranked favorite. Others from Maryland and Virginia plus Tar Heel Ward Sims may press him.

However, in the Big Four meet held three weeks ago in the Tin Can, the UNC freshmen rolled up 81½ points in crushing Duke, State, and Wake Forest.

The Tar Babies will be led by Dennis Rash and Dave Peltz in the 880, Rett Everett in the mile, Ward Purrington in the 50 yd. dash, and Wilfred Turner in the hurdles.

Jim Whicker (high jump) and either Dan Sheehan or Harvey Henry (shot put) are also good bets for victories.

Goldstein Has Knee Operation

March 13 — (AP) — Carolina's brilliant end Al Goldstein Friday underwent a knee operation and will be out the remainder of spring practice, including the annual Blue-White game March 21.

Goldstein sustained an injury in Wednesday's scrimmage, described as a tear of the media collateral ligament in the right knee. Doctor Beverly Raney performed the operation in Memorial Hospital. He discovered a damaged cartilage and removed that.

Ironically, Carolina's other starting end of last year, star sophomore John Schroeder, is also out with a knee injury. He was operated on Feb. 9, before spring practice.

Schroeder is making a fine recovery, and, barring complications, both he and Goldstein will be ready to play next fall.

Goldstein led the team in pass receiving in 1958 with 24 catches for 490 yards and two touchdowns.

The Tar Heels worked out Friday before a delegation of visiting coaches, including coach Bill Murray of Duke and his staff and coach Paul Amen of Wake Forest. They came here from the Dixie Football Clinic at Duke and were feted at a dinner Friday night.

WAA Basketballers Beat Meredith 81-40

The WAA Basketball Club triumped over Meredith Thursday, 81-40. The local team lead the action and ran up a half-time score of 43-19. Sarah Ann Hester and Maria Morgan lead the UNC scoring with 22 points each, and Catherine Bolton registered 21, Mary Montgomery 12, and Charlene Bass 4. Guards, led by Captain Faye Williams, consisted of Bakeman, Hurst, Blake and Thomas. Hight led the scoring for the visitors with 13, and Simmons scored 11.

FROSH BASKETBALL

Anyone who may be interested in becoming a freshman baseball manager should report to Coach Pat Earey at 303 A Woollen Gym.

Employe Status Is Checked

The Audit Board has dealt with such problems as the status of Graham Memorial employes, according to a report of board action from November 1958 through February.

The Audit Board was set up on campus to supervise the Student Activities Fund office, which handles finances for various organizations.

Until the status of employes for student organizations is settled, the Audit Board has arranged for an insurance policy providing workmen's compensation insurance benefits in the event of injury. Under this arrangement the Audit Board would not be financially liable should any injury occur while an employe was at work.

Difficulties from late picture fines collected by the Yackety Yack has also brought action by the Audit Board. Effective not later than the beginning at the 1959-60 fiscal year, all organizations receiving any appropriation from student government will be required to deposit all revenue in the Student Activities Fund office.

This requirement will be made so that full and accurate accounting records may be available for inspection and observation at all times.

Other action taken by the Audit Board includes the completion of a written standard policy of administration for all employes of the Student Activities Fund office. The policy covers such items as hours of employment, overtime, classification, leave, grievance and merit rating.

To accommodate small accounts in the Activities Fund office, the Board has aproved a plan providing one oncome account, one expense account, one statement, a record collection, financial advice and office service for $10 a year.

A long range project of the Audit Board is the codification and clarification of existing statutes, financial procedures and informal agreements.

Pianists Play In Hill Hall Tonight At 8

Pianists Kay Knight and Robert Steelman will play a program of piano works by Bach, Beethoven, Debussy and Copland in Hill Hall today at 8 p.m.

The concert is the first to be presented this semester by students in the UNC Music Department.

Miss Knight transferred here last September from Cornell University. She has studied piano with John Kirkpatrick at Cornell and with Walter Cook at the Kansas City Conservatory of Music.

At Cornell she appeared as piano soloist with the University Orchestra and was a member of the Notables, a group of singers who frequently toured the East Coast.

At UNC Miss Knight is a piano student from the class of William S. Newman. She is chairman of the YWCA Publications Board and serves on the fiction board of the Carolina Quarterly. A major in English literature, she expects to receive her A.B. degree in June 1960.

Steelman is a junior music major. Before entering the University, Steelman was accompanist for the Grainger High Singers and organist at St. Mark Methodist Church in Kinston.

A piano student of Wilton Mason, he has been accompanist for the University Chorus and has made appearances on the student recital series in Hill Hall.

He will open the program with Bach's "Partita No. 6 in E Minor" and after intermission will play Debussy's first book of "Images."

Miss Knight will perform "Fifteen Variations on a Theme from Eroica Symphony" by Beethoven and "Piano Sonata" by Aaron Copland.

Journalism Fraternity Is Presented Charter

By HENRY S. SNOW

Sigma Delta Chi yesterday entered the list of Carolina's professional fraternities.

The professional journalistism fraternity was presented its charter last night at a dinner meeting at Howard Johnson's by Victor E. Bluedorn, Sigma Delta Chi executive director.

The Charter was received by Charles Sloan, Chapter president. Sloan was also the president of the former UNC Men's Press Club which applied for the charter.

In a impressive initiation ceremony at Di Hall at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon 14 undergraduate students and six professional men were received into the national organization.

The students included Charles Sloan, Stanley Brennan, George Hord, John Hubbard, Roy Lucas, Parker Maddrey, Neil Murphy, Alan Resch, Paul Rule, Walter Schruntek, Donald Shaw, Jerry Shields, Thurman Worthington, and Charles Flinner.

The professional men initiated included school of Journalism faculty members, Walter Spearman, Stuart Sechriest, and Joseph Morrison, and E. A. Resch, publisher of papers ir Siler City, Pittsboro, Liberty. Sam Ragan, managing editor of the Raleigh Times and the News and Observer, and Tom Fesperman, managing editor of the Charlotte Observer.

Friday Will Address Public Health Confab

The 14th annual Health Education Conference, sponsored by the UNC Departments of Public Health Education and North Carolina College, are being held here today through Tuesday.

DR. BROCK CHISHOLM

Registration will be held from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. today. The first session begins Monday at 9 a.m. with a welcome address by UNC President William C. Friday.

The keynote address of the conference will be given at 9:30 a.m. Monday by Dr. Brock Chisholm, psychiatrist, author, president of the World Federation for Mental Health and former director-general of he World Health Organization of the United Nations.

Dr. Chisholm will speak on "The Urgent Need to Re-Shape Education." This will be followed with a panel discussion of the same subject.

The members of the panel will be Dr. Arnold Perry, dean of UNC School of Education; Dr. Warren Ashby, head of the Department of Philosophy, Women's College; Dr. Helen Edmonds, professor of history, N. C. College, Durham; Dr. E. G. McGavran, dean of the UNC School of Public Health and Dr. Joseph S. Himes, professor of sociology, N. C. College.

Dr. Lucy S. Morgan of the UNC School of Public Health will preside at the morning session. B. T. McMillon of N. C. College will preside at the afternoon session.

A round table discussion on "Revielle for Tomorrow in Health Education" will highlight the Monday afternoon session. A panel report on the discussion will be moderated by Miss Charlesanna Fox, president of the Southeastern Adult Education Association of Asheboro.

Monday's program will end with a dinner at the Carolina Inn. The guest speaker will be Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House.

Presidential Candidates Speak

IFC-IDC Committee Proposed By Gray

A committee of IFC and IDC members to improve fraternity-dormitory relations was proposed by University Party presidential candidate Charlie Gray in a statement released Saturday.

This proposed committee is one aspect of a program outlined by Gray to improve conditions for dormitory men on this campus.

Prefacing his suggested improvements for dorm men, Gray said his party, the UP, does not work against the interests of the dorm, as has been charged. He named the Student Party as having "succeeded in building up a psychological barrier between fraternity and non-fraternity men."

Speaking from his own experience, Gray said, "The first thing that any freshman hears when he comes to Carolina is that the University Party is not interested in the dormitory men."

This accusation, he said, is "purely political propaganda, used selfishly by a party to place its candidates in office."

Gray further charged, "The Student Party has used this device successfully in the past and, I dare say, will attempt to capitalize on it again this year.

"I hope the students will finally see the ridiculousness of this accusation and realize it is only promoting a split in relations between different residents on campus. I don't see how the students can vote for a party that deliberately splits the campus purely for political gains."

Gray said he would work to represent equally all phases of campus life.

To improve the relations between fraternities and dormitories, Gray's proposed committee of IDC and IFC members would sponsor such activities as the Grail Mural Jamboree.

With bettered relations established, Gray would then attempt to solve the "big weakness in dorms—the lack of social facilities."

In improving social facilities, Gray said he would begin by with expanding the activities of the IDC. "In my opinion the IDC is probably the outstanding organization under student government. In the past it has been hindered by lack of funds, but, if elected, I will see that the IDC has sufficient funds to promote an adequate social program for all dormitories."

Gray made several specific recommendations for improving social facilities. "As a temporary relief to the lack of facilities, I hope to be able to convert the basement of either Manly or Mangum into social rooms for dating couples," he said.

The rooms in these two dorms are being used for storage at the present time, but could be converted into social rooms, Gray commented.

Through a combined effort of the IDC, student government and the University administration, Gray said the problem of inadequate social facilities in dorms could be alleviated until a new student union is built.

Regarding a new student union, Gray pledged that he would work

Advisor, Opinions, Smith Topic

Norman B. Smith, Student Party candidate for student body president, announced Saturday the appointment of Charlie Huntington as his campaign adviser.

Smith said the campaign adviser would be "the number one position" on his campaign staff.

Huntington has previously served in Student Legislature and was chairman of the Honor Council Commission. He is president of Chi Psi fraterntiy and is a member of the Grail.

In his selection of Huntington as his campaign adviser, Smith said, "Charlie Huntington is a person in whom I have the fullest confidence. He has been selected, not to fill the traditional carbon copy campaign manager role, but was asked to take the position because he will be able to lend sound advice and well supported opinions to my campaign."

Smith further commented that his campaign and the type administration he would run are based on using advice from others.

"There will always be room for good thinking, and minds will never be kept closed to the views of any sincere person," he said. "From the opinions offered by every interested group, every individual, conclusions will be formulated to the best of my ability with the primary objective being the selection of policies which will be the most beneficial to the largest number of students."

Argonauts Stalk Isles For Members

Shortly after the doors are locked at 7 o'clock Monday night, two hooded giants will stalk the isles of Memorial Hall in search of new Argonauts for the Order fo the Golden Fleece.

The 55th annual tapping ceremony of the University's highest honorary order for men will precede the Valkyrie Sing, which is sponsored annually by the highest honorary order for women.

The Order of the Golden Fleece was founded in 1903 under the leadership of Professors Eben Alexander, Horace Williams and Edward Kidder Graham. Only one other honorary, Skull and Bones at Yale, is older than the Golden Fleece.

Monday night's ceremony will include the reading of the legend of the Golden Fleece and the annual oration of Jason. The identity of Jason and other officers of the order will be revealed Monday night also.

There are 18 student Argonauts in the University now, and there are 50 Argonauts on the faculty or in other official University positions.

The tapping ceremony is expected to last for one hour. after the tapping, the order will hold a closed banquet meeting at Carolina Inn in honor of new initiates.

Lenoir Chambers, editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, will speak at the banquet. He was tapped into the order in 1913. Last year's speaker was Supreme Court Justice Clifton L. Moore, who was tapped in 1922.

Student Argonauts today include Kenneth Lawing Penegar, Edwin Osborne Ayscue Jr., Raymond Mason Taylor, Joel Lawrence Fleishman, William Ray Long, Perry Burt Veazey, Eddie Covington Bass, George Robinson Ragsdale, John Aitken Sneden Jr., Paul Gene Strassler, Edward Ulysses Hallford Jr., Joseph Francis Quigg, Clifton Hunter Tillman, Wayne Staton Bishop, Harvey Peck, John Charles Brooks, John Clarke Whitaker Jr. and Herman Allen Godwin Jr.

The complete roster of Golden Fleece membership constitutes an honor roll not alone of good citizenship on the campus in students years but also high accomplishment in later life as well.

Gov. Luther H. Hodges was tapped as a member of the Fleece as a student in the class of 1919. The late William B. Umstead likewise was selected as a student member of the order.

Chief Justice J. Wallace Winborne of the N. C. Supreme Court was a student member, class of 1906. Two other members of the Supreme Court likewise were members. Associate Justice William H. Bobbitt and Clifton L. Moore. North Carolina Superior Court Judges Francis O. Clarkson, Walter E. Crissman, Hamilton Hobgood, and W. Reid Thompson were student members.

The three men who have served as presidents of the Consolidated University of North Carolina were tapped as Fleece members in their student years, Dr. Frank P. Graham, Gordon Gray and William Friday. Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House was tapped as a member in the class of 1916.

Other persons prominent in university positions who were members of the Golden Fleece as students at Chapel Hill include Dean Jefferson B. Fordham of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, Dr. O. W. Hyman, vice president and head of the University of Tennessee Medical School; Dr. T. P. Nash, dean of the University of Tennessee's School of Biological Sciences at Memphis;

C. E. Teague and John C. Lockhart, formerly business officers of UNC and Woman's College at Greensboro, respectively; Dean Alexander Heard of the UNC Graduate School; UNC Dean of Student Affairs Fred H. Weaver, and numerous members of the faculty and administrative staff at the University.

10 UNC Students Win Woodrow Wilson Grants

Coveted Woodrow Wilson scholarships have been awarded to 10 UNC students and two others in the Consolidated University.

Climaxing an intensive nationwide hunt for future college teachers, the Woodrow Wilson National Foundation today released the names of 1,200 American and Canadian recipients of the scholarships.

The other scholarship winners from the Consolidated University are Greta C. Henricksen and Jaqueline Long.

The UNC Wilson fellows have selected the following courses of study and universities for the academic year 1959-60: Miss Baker, history at the University of Washington; Cooper, mathematics at the University of Washington; Deal, mathematics at UNC; Herring, English at the University of Chicago;

Kimel, physics at the University of Wisconsin; Lohr, chemistry at Harvard; Matthews, art history at Harvard; Simpson, classics at Yale; Stessel, English at the University of Chicago, and Miss Wise, chemistry at Northwestern University.

Miss Henricksen will study political science at the University of Illinois and Miss Long will study history at Radcliffe.

Aimed directly at the heart of education's most urgent problem—the critical shortage of qualified teachers — the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship program recruits and supports promising scholars for their first year of graduate study. The project is backed by a $25 million grant from the Ford Foundation.

This year's Wilson Fellows were chosen from 7,000 candidates, all nominated and rigorously screened by committees of faculty members. These 7,000 candidates came from over 700 undergraduate colleges.

In this year's group of winners, there are 875 men and 325 women. Of these, 38 per cent are planning to take courses in the humanities; 34 per cent in social sciences and 28 per cent in the natural sciences and mathematics.

STAFF MEETING

Staff members of The Daily Tar Heel have been asked to meet Monday at 4 p.m. in the newspaper office.

A non-paid staffer will be elected at the time to serve on the Bi-Partisan Selections Board, which interviews candidates for editor of the paper. The Board may endorse as many candidates as it considers capable of serving as editor.

Orientation Counselor Applications Available

Application blanks for men's orientation counselors for next fall are now available at the reserved reading room in the Library, the YMCA, Graham Memorial Information Office, and Lenoir Hall, according to Tom Overman, men's orientation co-ordinator.

Prospective counselors may obtain orientation study manuals at the same places. Applications will also be given to the fraternity and dormitory presidents for distribution.

Approximately 170 counselors will be needed for the expected 1,00 freshmen enrollment. This is an increase of 20 over last year's number of counselors.

Orientation Chairman David Parker urged all men interested in being a counselor complete an application form before the March 25 deadline. Parker stressed the need and importance of good counselors in that they are the first students with whom the freshmen come in contact. The counselors gain satisfaction for themselves for they will be giving service to the University by instilling in the new freshmen the "Carolina way of life."

Tests, covering the varions phases of campus life, will be given to the applicants after Easter. Later there will be interviews for the final selection of the counselors.

Valkyrie Sing Cancels Monday Night SP Meet

Student Farty will not meet Monday night because of the annual Golden Fleece tapping and Valkyrie Sing.

The next meeting of the party will be held Monday, March 23, at which time the SP will discuss its platform for the April 7 elections and will consider whether or not to endorse a candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

People, Places, Things-- An Interview With Frost

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Robert Frost leaned forward in his chair. He had a generous supply of hair that looked like the "angel hair" some people put on Christmas trees.

His face was made almost fierce looking by the steel gray eyebrows that were so bushy as to make his eyes seem almost too small.

FROST

Those penetrating eyes were a slightly deeper blue than the sky that could be seen from the window through which he turned his gaze occasionally.

His hands which trembled slightly, as the hands of old men are apt to do, were lined with blue veins.

He sat and talked about people and places and things.

He talked about his new book, "The Great Misgiving," which will be published soon. Its chief poem will be "Kitty Hawk," a North Carolina poem, he said. He visited Kitty Hawk in 1893 and thought it a wonderful place.

Then he talked about science. "I'm all for it," he said. "Some people would like to stop science, but you can't resist the modern world."

He compared these people with the people of the South who would like to bring back the "Old South." "These people would like a back-to-Jefferson world," he said. "This would be beautiful — but the Germans would have run all over it."

Then he commented on the fact that 50,000 Americans die of speeding in automobiles. "It shows they aren't afraid," he said. "I don't think they are really in such a hurry to get some place, they just like speed."

He talked about drinking. "Some people drink because they are trying to get away from themselves—and other do it just because they like to raise hell."

Naturally, the conversation turned to art and artists. "The function of an artist is to beautify or, maybe, to uglify life." He said that poetry belongs to everything, science, war — everything and "I'm always embarrassed by poetic language, my poems sound the way I talk."

And then he left. And spring has come to Chapel Hill.

The Next Weeks

During the coming week, University of North Carolina officials will appear before the joint appropriations committee of the General Assembly to wage their battle for increases in the allotment to the University.

Within the next weeks the same General Assembly will make a decision regarding the University which will radically affect the future of the University in particular and education in general in this state.

The decision that will be made will be made probably on the needs with regard to increased enrollment and need for increased staff for the University, and yet any of these arguments will not strike the heart of the issue.

For the basic issue to be decided in the next few weeks in the General Assembly and in the coming years in Congress is the amount of public committment to education.

This issue as has oft been stated before is central to the strength of a democracy and is central in building a community of individuals who are not dependent on the group spirit for their every idea and action.

It is an issue of whether the public will assume the responsibility for placing intellect as its primary value, and at present this would mean a radical departure from the situation at present.

It means that the public must evaluate the education and development of its young minds as more important than the second car in the garage or the movie show downtown, and this is going to be a bitter pill to swallow.

The public must be committed not to mediocrity but to excellence, to the idea of education for education's sake. It does not have to be committed to the idea of education for citizenship or education for vocation. But it must have the idea in mind that only through adequate and complete education can the mind of the individual develop, so that he may utilize some of the freedom this country has to offer.

The General Assembly will probably avoid the issue, as the last Congress did, but it needs to be met and met soon. It is not certain annihilation that will be the necessary end product of neglect in this field, but it will be the gradual decay and degeneration of a society that has great things in its ideology but very little in its practice.

Karl Marx in his Communist Manifesto ended the work with "Workers of the World, United!" It might be well to rephrase this statement to "people of America, awake!" The United States can do, as so many victims of the tsetse fly have, lull itself to a sleep. That will bring death to everything that is real and good in the American ideology of freedom.

The time for awakening is the present.

Library Stacks

The idea to open library stacks to students of all standing is a good one, and may serve to provide for more knowledge to sink in.

However, the privilege must be used with the responsibility it necessitates in order to make a good thing last. The student body has not often shown care in the past, perhaps they will surprise many people.

The World News In Review

Ron Shumate

One of the week's biggest news events came late in the week, with Hawaii's winning statehood.

Thus, less than a year after our 49th state and voted in by Congress, we have our 50th state—probably to the dismay of many flag manufacturers, collectors and buyers.

The vote in the House was an overwhelming 323-89, and was 7-15 in the Senate.

Celebration was the order of the day—in fact two days—as the direct line telephone call to Acting Gov. Edward Johnston proclaimed the good news.

Schools were closed, Sabre jets rushed the news to mayors on the islands of Kauai, Maui and Hawaii. Bonfires were lit; firecrackers exploded; Hawaiians danced in the streets; air-raid sirens, whistles and church bells joined in a deafening discord.

It must have been highly similar to the celebration following Carolina's 1957 National Championship victory.

Berlin Crisis

The issue in Berlin continued to to occupy many column inches in newspapers all around the world.

Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev proposed to guarantee the independence of West Berlin with neutral or Big Four troops, provided the Western Allies end their military occupation of the isolated city.

He called upon the United States, Britain and France to avert the danger of World War III by accepting his proposals for turning West Berlin into a free city.

The initial reaction in Washington was one of caution. Lincoln differentiate between one and the other.

"Aloha"

White, U. S. State Department Press Chief said there have been so many conflicting statements the past few days that it is difficult to Khrushchev said he realized it would be "a painful break" for the 2½ million West Berliners to be merged with the radically different society of Communist East Berlin.

He repeated his earlier offer to place West Berlin under United Nations control, but added a new proposal:

"If it is necessary, we would even be agreeable that the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union or neutral countries station in West Berlin a minimum number of troops.

"They would have the task of protecting the status of the free city, but would have no right to interfere with the internal life of the city.

"It such guarantees existed, then nobody would be able to disturb the independent life of the free city."

Tuesday Nikita sat down with Communist East German leaders to consider a peace treaty that would divide Germany permanently along the River Elbe.

Also Tuesday the Western Allies lined up solidly behind the proposal to meet the Russians in Geneva, probably in May, to tackle the dangerous issue of Germany.

British and French spokesmen confirmed that the West was in complete agreement on a reply to the Soviet Union and were united on a place and time. They declined to go into details.

The Soviet Union suggested that Communist Poland and Czechoslavakia attend the foreign ministers' conference and both nations have agreed to go. The West will say it has no objection to Poland and Czechoslovakia sitting in on matters dealing with Germany's neighbors, the French spokesman said.

Khrushchev's footwork in the past few weeks has inspired Everett Dirksen, Senate Republican leader, to remark that "He changes position as fast as the slots in a revolving door."

Letter In Answer To University Party Letter

Editor:

I want to comment on the gross misrepresentations contained in the recent letter addressed by the University Party to "Fraternity Men and Sorority Women." First I would like to say that the other matters treated in this letter: the opposition to deferred rush, support of mandatory discrimination, and the apparent assumption that nothing that a group which constitutes one fifth of the student body does is any way the business of the other four fifths, are certainly not as unquestionably beneficial to fraternities and sororities as the University Party would have them believe. Even if they were, it is surprising that the University Party, the party which only a week or two ago declared that it was now that party for all the campus, etc., etc., now makes the pledge contained in the last line of the letter, "The University Party pledges you (fraternity and sorority members) its continued support." This seems to be the University Party's theme. This letter, of course, was not made as a statement to the Daily Tarheel nor will you find it prominately posted around the campus. In the typical University Party fashion it was distributed only to those "on the inside." Such is the party which claims to be concerned with the welfare of the entire campus. This is the University Party's idea of the open and above board methods they advocated in their "new face" statements of a few weeks ago. I would like to suggest to the University Party that those "stupid slobs" who live in the dormitories are not as stupid as the University Party seems to think they are.

Not only does the University Party seem to believe that what fraternities do is in no way the concern of the rest of the campus, they also seem to think fraternities and sororities should be immune from any criticism by people they call "outsiders." Remember only a few months ago when a fraternity, even though the facts were misrepresented by the press, focused national attention on the University. The headlines did not read "Such and Such Fraternity." What they said was "a University of North Carolina Fraternity." It will always be this way and rightly so. Every student-citizen of the University shares in the respnsibility for the actions of a group which exists in the student community by virtue of the consent of the student community. These organizations are entrusted with almost unlimited freedom of action and choice by the student body, but basically they are responsible to the student body. This is a fact which the University Party tries very hard to overlook.

This same logic applies to the question of deferred rush. The University Party feels that this matter is solely the business of the fraternities and sororities. This is a shallow perspective. Granted the fraternities and sororities are affected by this matter. Theirs is a valid concern—but it is not the only concern. The hue and cry has been that deferred rush will mean financial disaster for some of the fraternities and sororities and irreparable damage to others. This is an exaggeration. These organizations would know in advance of the coming of deferred rush and would be able to make preparations for it. There would be a period of adjustment, but it could be managed here just as it has been managed at many other institutions. It is a fact that the overwhelming majority of students and administration regard the fraternity system as a beneficial part of the University and the fraternities and sororities can rest assured that the student legislature and administration would be standing by to assist them in handling any difficulties arising from the adjustment to the new system.

Consider now how this matter affects the individual and the University (two concepts the University Party seems to have trouble grasping). The average freshman comes to the University with only the values, knowledge, and concepts obtained in high school, picked up through hearsay, and had forced upon him by his parents. As most sophomores will testify, these predispositions are usually somewhat inaccurate. Yet after a few weeks on campus the freshman has to make his move, fraternity or no—if so, which one. Of course he can wait if he wants to, but the pressure to make the move a resolution is great. There are few who wait, and once a committment is made (along with the financial investment that may accompany it) there are few who change. Rather than spend his first few months in his new environment making up his mind which course would be the best one for him, the average freshman spends this time convincing himself that the side of the fence fate has dropped him on "really" is the best side.

As a result, he never knows very much about the other fifth or four-fifths, as the case may be. Not only does he suffer in this lack of understanding and the initial inability to make a wise decision for himself, he often develops something of a hostility toward the other group.

How much more the individual's opportunity for development is enhanced if his choice between independent and fraternity, and if so, which fraternity, is based on firsthand experience and advice. What better basis for this can we offer the freshman than to relieve him of the pressure to make an immediate resolution and give him some time to take stock of the situation.

And what is the cost of the present system to the University—it is inseparable from the cost to the individual. If the University does not provide an environment which permits and encourages optimum individual development, then the loss is reciprocal. The University is people. Its past is the people who have been in it and its present are the people who are here now. Deferred rush a matter for just the fraternities and sororities to decide on—I think not.

The thing that makes me think the University Party believes that fraternities and sororities should not be subject to any criticism or suggestion is their reaction to what they refer to as a "discussion" (quotation marks theirs) being led by a "Student Party legislator and possible SP nominee to run for president of the student body." This person, of course, is Norman Smith and the "discussion" is a committee which he is leading in a study of possible improvements for the campus judicial system. This committee has no official power. It is an open discussion for any person, organization, or representative from any part of the campus. This committee has heard and discussed ideas and opinions from many quarters. It is my observation, having attended some of these meetings and knowing some of the people representing many divergent views, that these discussions have produced some generally acceptable ideas for improvements, have formed a much needed means for communication between divergent groups, and even in areas where disagreements persist—these discussions have brought about a much needed degree of enlightenment, and mutual understanding and appreciation on the parts of the people involved. As for the abolishment of the IFC court, I have inquired about this and I know of no one who has proposed this. In fact, all of the people with whom I have discussed these matters, and myself as well, agree that the fraternities and sororities should be the sole governors of their internal affairs in-so-far as the activities of the fraternities and sororities are not detrimental to the student body as a whole. Certainly the IFC court, or whatever system the Fraternities care to employ is, and should be, up to them, as long as they meet their responsibilities to the campus of which they are a part.

Because a good many people are not familiar with the activities of this committee, the University Party has taken the opportunity to misrepresent its activities and attempted to put a possible opposition candidate in a bad light—on a fraudulent basis. Apparently the University party has no qualms about defaming a group which is serving a useful purpose to the whole campus and a person who is making a sincere effort to have all sides of an important question heard. Such tactics as this will only serve to destroy the University Party and damage those who have placed their confidence in it.

In their letter, the University Party speaks of maintaining "equal representation" for the fraternities and sororities. The statement is contained in the first paragraph. I wonder why the University Party is worried about the "equal representation" of a group which constitutes one fifth of the campus when the Student Legislature is composed of well over half fraternity and sorority members, the Men's Honor Council and Student Council are dominated by fraternity members, and the women's councils are dominated by sorority members. The student body presidency and other major campus offices have consistently been held by fraternity and sorority members. Maybe the University Party is worried about their representation because they are afraid the campus is getting wise to University Party tactics.

DON DOTSON

University Party Letter

FRATERNITY MEN AND SORORITY WOMEN:

The University Party believes in fraternities and sororities . . . We believe their voice should be heard when decisions which will alter their present status are made. We believe that because of their minority representation this campus (one-fifth of the total population), equal representation for them will come only through maintenance of some of their present beliefs and willingness to assure their continuance.

Because of this, the University Party is opposed to: DEFERRED RUSH, THE ABOLISHMENT OF THE IFC COURT, AND THE ABOLISHMENT OF DISCRIMINATORY CLAUSES IN FRATERNITY/SORORITY CONSTITUTIONS. We are opposed to these changes which would so drastically alter your fraternal way of life and abolish your voice in student government.

Throughout this year, voiced by the Student Party and its literary mouthpiece, the Daily Tar Heel, we have witnessed with growing concern the criticism directed at all units of your fraternity/sorority life; some was justified, much was not. We realize and advocate improvements in our government. However, we do not feel that forcing upon you the above named proposals is an improvement for the better.

This year a Student Party legislator introduced a bill providing for DEFERRED RUSH.

Another Student Party legislator introduced legislation that the NSA's "Student Bill of Rights" be adopted by UNC. If it has passed as introduced, fraternities/sororities would have been required to abolish DISCRIMINATORY CLAUSES from their constitutions.

At present there is a plan under discussion to ABOLISH THE IFC COURT. If this plan materializes, your house will be tried by the same court that will decide the fate of any violator of the Women's Residence Council, IDC, Honor Code, Campus. Leading this "discussion" is a Student Party legislator and possible SP nominee to run for president of the student body.

These three Student Party proposals . . . how would they affect your house?

Idealistic proposals? Possibly.

Realistic . . . in that they can become realities? Yes. Such proposals have been presented in the legislature. Although defeated this year, they will appear next year. The men and women you elect to office and the legislature . . . they have the power to enact such provisions.

We ask you to think seriously about the consequence of such proposals; we must realistically recognize that you are not living in the same conditions of other residents at UNC. You live here as men and women under separate provisions and conditions. Your system of rushing, courts, and your compliance with national constitutions must reflect this.

The time has come when students must be aware of the issues which so vitally concern them. The University Party urges you, fraternity/sorority members, to realize what is at stake in the coming election. You have a responsibility to your house and your student government. The University Party pledges you its continued support.

Berlin

The New Republic

If a war is set off by the Kremlin's moves to change the status of Berlin it will be because the Kremlin has repeated a miscalculation that is not without historic precedents. The conditions for such a miscalculation exist at Moscow today in a failure to understand the behavior of liberal democracies, together with a dogmatic habit of mind that reinforces the failure.

Until recently the Kremlin appears to have been haunted by a fear that the United States would deliberately start a war while it still had a notable military advantage. Anyone who understands the range of possible behavior by a democracy like ours knows how little ground there was for this fear. But the Kremlin was bound to lack that understanding so long as it looked more to the dogmas of its ideology than to the facts.

What the Kremlin now appears to believe is that the danger of a Western resort to war has passed with the passing of the West's military advantage. In this new view, the Western "ruling groups," calculating the new military balance, must have concluded that such a resort is no longer open to them. It follows that the Soviet Union can now do with relative impunity what is could not do without excessive risk in 1948, in 1950, or even in 1956. This seems to us the most plausible explanation of Khrushchev's recent brashness.

One assumption on which such a belief must depend is that the behavior of the Western democracies is a function of calculated long-range decisions made by a small ruling clique in the inner sanctums of some Western Kremlin. Such an assumption not only conforms to Soviet dogma, it also represents the tendency of every nation to judge others by itself.

The Kremlin has taken note, we may be sure, of statements by intellectual and political leaders in the West (generally unexceptionable in themselves) emphasizing the necessity of avoiding war in the present situation. It might conclude from these statements that the peoples of the West are being prepared for the possible necessity of a general accommodation to the policies of the Soviet Union, an accommodation that would be largely unilateral and to the West's disadvantage.

Though we suppose that the policy of the Kremlin continues to represent a traditional cautiousness, its new estimate of Western policy must increase the scope for action that it deems cautious. While it may still plan to eat the cherry in three bites, pausing after each to assess the consequences before going on to the next, prudence no longer forbids taking any bites at all.

The classic fault in this kind of calculation is in the assumption that it accurately describes the basis on which the behavior of the democratic societies is determined. If the calculations of the West were against war in 1936, when a relatively weak Hitler invaded the Rhineland, how much more must they be against war in 1939, when a relatively strong Hitler is about to invate Poland! Again — is it not evident in 1950 that the Americans having made their calculations, have concluded that Korea is not worth fighting for? But it does not follow that the Americans won't fight for Korea.

The Kremlin ought to read De Tocqueville on the nature of democratic societies and then it ought to look at the record. What the record would show is that the very people who, before the practical test, call for peace at any price are those who, when the test comes, call for defense at any price. The young men in England and America who in 1935 took the Oxford pledge never to fight for their country (thereby misleading Berlin and Rome) went to war quite readily when the time came.

The Kremlin has chosen Berlin, the point of the West's greatest strategic weakness, as the point at which to create a crisis. But Berlin is also the point at which the West is most sensitive, and at which it is therefore most liable to that reflex action which sometimes takes its opponents by surprise.

All one can ask of the Soviet leaders now, and in no unfriendly spirit, is that they open their minds to the facts which the historic record reveals. If they do, they will see that the scope for safe action is not as great as they think. They may then approach whatever top-level conferences are held in a sober spirit of earnest searching for possible agreements.

As for ourselves: we ought to read the record too, taking account of the price which we have repeatedly paid for being firm too late. The first bite of the Berlin cherry is the test of our will. Whether there will be second and third bites, with all the attendant dangers, depends on what the test shows. In this kind of situation the promptings of a panic fear are likely to increase the danger rather than diminish it. The fact that the snarling dog's teeth are so terrible is precisely the reason for standing firm. Running away is what will most surely bring those teeth into play.

A journal such as The New Republic which has often disagreed with our present leaders may say with the better grace that, on the maintenance of West Berlin's freedom, we ought now to support them in a policy of quiet firmness backed by preparations for limited military operations that will not be lost on the Kremlin. We ought to support them in a firm stand (which is not the same as a policy of strong words); and then encourage them, upon the foundations of such a stand, to be reasonably flexible in seeking with our Russian antagonists a mutual accommodation in Europe that, by promoting peace and stability, would keep open the vistas of hope for both sides.

Our position in Berlin resembles our position on Quemoy in that it is strategically weak. But it differs in being morally strong. Here — as is not the case on Quemoy — our government, in taking a firm stand that does not exclude a willingness to negotiate, may reasonably expect the support of the American people and of our allies, as well as the sympathetic approval of the uncommitted nations.

CHAPEL OF THE CROSS

The Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, bishop of the Diocese of North Carolina, will administer the Sacrament of Confirmation today at 11 a.m. at the Chapel of the Cross. Immediately following the service, a reception will be held for the bishop and the new confirmees.

This will be the last visit of the bishop to the Chapel of the Cross before his retirement in May. Bishop Penick has been in the service of the ministry since his ordination in 1922, having been consecrated a bishop in 1932.

BUDGET COMMITTEE

A Budget Committee meeting will be held Monday from 3 to 5 p.m. in Roland Parker I.

LUTHERAN STUDENT ASSOCIATION

The Lutheran Student Association and the Student Couple's Club will hold a joint pizza supper in the basement of the Holy Trinity Lutheran Church tonight at 6 p.m.

John Hallowell, professor of political science at Duke University, will speak on "Christianity and Communism."

Hallowell's talk will begin at 7 p.m. and all persons interested in attending have been invited.

SOUND AND FURY

Tryouts for this year's Sound and Fury production, "Oh Hellas," will be held Wednesday. Scripts for the production may be checked out at the Information Desk in Graham Memorial. The tryouts Wednesday will be from 3 to 6 p.m. and after 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

BSU

Miss Ann Allred, a missionary to Hawaii last summer, will speak to the local Baptist Student Union group today after a sacrifice supper at 5:45 p.m. at the University Baptist Church.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

John Honigmann of the Department of Anthropology will speak on "Pakistan" to the Cosmpolitan Club today at 3:45 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room.

The club will also discuss plans for an International Open House to be held April 19 at the Hillel House.

"DAVID COPPERFIELD"

One of the most popular novels in English literature, Charles Dickens' "David Copperfield" will be televised in thirteen episodes on WUNC-TV, Channel 4, beginning at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, March 15.

Produced by the British Broadcasting Corporation for use by American educational television stations, "David Copperfield" features an all-English cast. Fifteen year-old Leonard Crocknell makes his television debut as young David.

An adventure story, "David Copperfield" is also history at its best, painting a vivid picture of nineteenth century England.

The series will be of special interest to English literature, speech and dramatics students, so WUNC-TV has programmed each weekly episode at 7:30 Sunday evenings and again at 11:15 Thursday mornings for junior and senior high school classes.

"David Copperfield" is offered in cooperation with the National Educational Television and Radio Center.

FISH TUMORS

A research report on certain tumors which fish develop will be given at the UNC Zoology Seminar on Tuesday, March 17, at 4:45 p.m. in 105 Wilson Hall.

Dr. Myron Gordon, a geneticist from the American Museum of Natural History in New York, will be guest speaker. His subject will be "Genetics of Normal and Atypical Cell Growth."

Since completing his Ph.D. degree at Cornell University 30 years ago, Dr. Gordon has been a foremost investigator in the genetics of pigmentation and melanoma (tumor) formation in fish.

SYMPOSIUM PROGRAM

There will be an important meeting of the Symposium Program Committee Monday at 4 p.m. in the Di Hall on the 4th floor of New West.

WESLEY FOUNDATION

Wesley's Sunday activities include the regular Sunday morning seminar at 9:30 a.m. and the Sunday evening supper at 5:45 p.m. The speaker at the supper will be Jack Roth. The meeting will be held in the basement of the University Methodist Church.

GRAY

The professional group is devoted to raising the standards of competence of its members to recognize outstanding achievements by journalists and to promote recognition of the fact that Journalism is a true profession.

More Lessons In Dancing Start Tuesday

Dance lessons will be held again this semester, beginning Tuesday night.

But this time, two classes are being sponsored by the Special Events Committee of GMAB. An intermediate class will be held every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room. A class for beginners will be conducted Thursdays at 7 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room.

Because of the expense of two dance classes, a fee of $2 is being charged for eight lessons. However, since specific dances will be taught in the intermediate class, students may purchase a 50 cent ticket for two lessons.

The schedule of dances to be taken up by the intermediate class is as follows: cha cha cha, March 17 and 24; rumba, April 7 and 14; mambo, April 21 and 28; and tango and samba, May 5 and 12.

Teaching the intermediate class will be John Harris. Barbara Bounds will be the instructor for the beginner's class.

Gans On TV

Curtis Gans, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, goes on TV today.

The television program College Press Conference, may be seen over station WTVD, Durham, at 1 p.m. today.

Gans will return to Chapel Hill tonight.

While Gans has been away, Ron Shumate has been acting editor.

'Beat' Writers Subject Of Quarterly Article

A UNC English professor is the featured writer in the spring issue of The Carolina Quarterly, which goes on sale Monday.

Dr. Wolfgang Bernard Fleischmann has written "A Look at the 'Beat Generation' Writers."

Dr. Fleischmann is a personal friend of some of the "Beat Generation' writers, and has translated some of their work into German.

Dan Fowler, a student at UNC has a short prose fiction story in the Quarterly. Fowler's story is entitled "The Night Alone and the Day on Fire." This is his first published work.

Other writers who have articles in the campus literary magazine are from the University of California, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Reno and Russell Sage College.

The drawing which appears on the front cover of the Quarterly is by Catherine Pardington, an artist who resides in Chapel Hill.

The Quarterly will be sold for $.50 at various places around the campus.

Fleece Alumnus Excel In Many Varied Fields

rently on the board who were Golden Fleece members as students were Arch T. Allen, Raleigh attorney; Kemp D. Battle, Rocky Mount lawyer; Victor S. Bryant, Durham; Robert M. Hanes, Winston-Salem, formerly president of the Wachovia Bank and Trust Co.; George Watts Hill, Durham banker and business man; John H. Kerr Jr., Warrenton lawyer and veteran legislator, and W. Frank Taylor, Goldsboro attorney.

Among Fleece alumni in banking are Thomas C. Boushall, Richmond, Va.; Philip Woollcott, Asheville; Archie K. Davis, Winston-Salem, and Frank C. P. McGlinn, Philadelphia.

A Fleece alumnus who last year served as president of Rotary International is Charles G. ("Buzz") Tennent of Asheville. Congressman Charles Raper Jonas of Lincolnton was tapped in 1925. Thor M. Johnson, former director of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and now a professor of Northwestern University, was tapped in 1934.

Richard Adler, composer of music for the Broadway hits "Damn Yankees" and "Pajama Game," was a Fleece-tapped student in the 1940s. The variety of Fleece talents may be illustrated by citing as members Shepperd Strudwick Jr., noted actor; Victor Seixas, tennis stalwart; Kay Kyser, retired from a career in the entertainment world and now a Chapel Hill resident, and M. D. Whisnant, orphanage superintendent of Charlotte.

In the business world are numberous examples of Fleecemen: R. O. Huffman, president of Drexel Furniture, Morganton; Henry A. Lineberger and J. Harold Lineberger, Belmont industrialist; Agnew H. Bahnson Sr. and Jr., Winston-Salem manufacturing executives and A. L. M. Wiggins, Hartsville, S. C., board chairman of the A. C. L., L & N and two other railroads.

Editors and writers are well represented in the Fleece membership roster. The late Thomas C. Wolfe perhaps is most widely known, but others of national stature include the late Hatcher Hughes, Pulitzer playwright; Phillips Russell, Chapel Hill; the late W. T. Polk, Greensboro; E. Clifton Daniel, New York Times; Lenoir Chamber, editor of the Norfolk, Va., Virginian-Pilot; A. T. (Lon) Dill and Don Bishop, both natives of New Bern, now of West Point, Va., and New York, respectively; Don C. Shoemaker, editor of the Miami Herald; and J. Pat Kelly of Atlanta, Ga., now a Neiman Fellow at Harvard University.

Scurlock And Bishop Each Set New Records In ACC; Maryland Is Team Champ

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Two Carolina runners, seniors Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop, blazed to new conference records here last night in the ACC Indoor Track Meet.

In the team competition it was the same old story as Maryland's defending champion Terps did it again, and by a big margin. The Terrapins racked up 72½ points for an easy first place. Carolina edged Duke for second with 23½, the Devils had 21.

Following them were South Carolina with 10, Clemson with 9, State with 3 and Virginia and Wake Forest with 2 each.

Bishop's mark came in the 2-mile race. The easy-jogging Tar Teel jumped into an early lead and was never threatened at all. His time of 9:19.2 eclipsed Maryland's Burr Grimm's old record of 9:21.9 which was set last year.

Scurlock flashed home with a new mark in the 880-yard run. Big Dave's time of 1:52.7 chopped 3 seconds off State's Bob Jones' old record of 1:55.9.

Both Scurlock and Bishop said in commenting after their races that they knew they had new records.

Scurlock said, "I knew I had a conference record but I was going for a world record." Scurlock's time was only 2 seconds short of the world standard.

Said Bishop, "I knew I had a conference record, but I should have run much faster. I could have gotten under 9:10 if I had been pushed a little." Bishop lapped the entire field en route to the victory.

Bishop further commented that the fact that no spikes were allowed in the meet hurt both he and Scurlock. "I've got blisters on my feet right now, and I know Dave could have run faster with spikes," Bishop stated.

In the freshman division there were three record breaking performances. Duke's John Stevenson set a high jump mark of 6' 3 3/16" to better Tom Tait's old record by better than one inch. In the 60yd. dash trials Maryland's Bob Van Reenan broke Dave Sims record by one tenth of a second. The third record of the night was set by Clemson's Quincy Newman in the half mile.

Woollen Resembles Big Top

A circus big-top would have had a hard time competing with Woollen Gym yesterday during the ACC indoor track meet.

Multi-colored banners, loudly proclaiming competing teams, hung from the walls that housed the events. Blending with the banners were the uniforms of Carolina, Maryland, Duke, N. C. State, Clemson, Wake Forest, Virginia and South Carolina track men.

In direct contrast to the blues, reds, yellows and orange were the tuxedoes of the judges and other officials.

Woollen was even complete with at least three rings. While a pole vault and relay race were being judged, others practiced for broad jumps and the 60-yard dash.

Tally Lectures Wed. In 'Challenge' Series

J. O. Tally Jr., attorney and former mayor of Fayetteville, will give an after dinner address here Wednesday as the third speaker in the "Challenges of 1959" series.

Tally will speak on "Challenge to Freedom" at 7:30 p.m. after a dinner at the Hillel Foundation. Reservations for the dinner may be made today at the Y Building.

The YW-YMCA is sponsoring the talks on challenges to the American way of life and to institutions of democracy. The talks are generally held in Gerrard Hall, but since a Weil lecture is scheduled for tonight, Tally's speech will be made before a smaller group.

Tally is being brought here by a Y committee headed by Betty Kay Johnson and Parker Hodges.

Previous speakers in the series former Congressman Brooks Hays of Little Rock, Ark., and Dr. G. McLeod Bryan, an associate professor of religion at Wake Forest College.

Tally, who has served two terms as Fayetteville's mayor, is now treasurer of Kiwanis International. His service to his state and city has included presidency of the N. C. League of Municipalities, of the Duke Law School Alumni Assn., of the Harvard Club of North Carolina, and of the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce.

He is a past vice president of the N. C. Bar Association and past governor of the Kiwanis Clubs of North Carolina.

A member of the law firm of Tally, Tally and Taylor in Fayetteville, he taught law for one year at Wake Forest College after World War II service as a Navy officer.

Tally was born in Fayetteville, and was educated at Campbell College, Duke and the law schools of Duke and Harvard.

Interviews with students interesting in running for the Men's Honor Council and Student Council will be held today, Wednesday and Thursday from 2 to 5 p.m. in the Men's Council room in Graham Memorial.

All candidates have been requested to sign appointment sheets on the door of the council room for interviews by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

Yale On Probation

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—(AP)—The entire Yale undergraduate body was put on general probation Monday because of two outburst in which 41 students were arrested.

The probation—general and indefinite—carried a threat of immediate expulsion for any of the 4,000 undergraduates who publicly misbehave in the future.

Secretaries In New Post Announced

A secretarial branch of the student government has been established to expand coed participation and to enable more efficient work in various phases of student government work.

In interviews held last week, 10 girls were selected to various posts within the student government framework.

The international student correspondent, Pappy Churchill, will correspond with students from other countries who have held special scholarships at UNC, and with UNC students who are studying abroad.

Marsha Homeyer will do secretarial work for the Audit Board and other financial phases of student government. Nell Wiggins and Vickie Gruelach are co-chairmen of the student government scrapbook. Working on NSA projects and correspondence is Lou Ann Howell.

The standing committee to do secretarial work on special projects includes: Pappy Churchill, Marsha Homeyer, Molly Short, Ann Mills, Joan DuBose, Nell Wiggins, Becky Klopper and Lou Ann Howell.

The first meeting of the Secretariat will be held Wednesday at 4:30 in the student government office.

Band Announces Vote Results

Bill Kellam is the newly elected president of the UNC Marching and Concert Band.

Also at the annual elections Bob Cannon was chosen vice president, and Marvin Eargle, secretary.

Chi Omegas Work In Robbins Store

Another UNC sorority will work in Robbins Department Store Wednesday to raise money for Panhellenic Council charities.

This time, the Chi Omegas will be salesgirls from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the store.

Thus far this year, these other five sororities have worked at Robbins: Delta Delta Delta, Alpha Delta Pi, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Kappa Delta and Pi Beta Phi.

Fleece Initiates 12 Students In Memorial Hall Ceremonies

Twelve Carolina students and one faculty member were tapped into the Order of the Golden Fleece, highest men's honorary, Monday night.

The new members of the order are: Danny Lotz, Paul Woodard, David Scurlock, Charlie Huntington, Norman B. Smith, Al Goldsmith, Edward LeRoy, Don Furtado, Lawrence Lohr, Hugh Patterson, Larkin Kirkman and Wade Smith. Dr. Wilton Mason of the Music Department was also tapped.

The annual ceremony was held in Memorial Hall before an audience of nearly 2,000. The identity of new Fleece members was not revealed until the ceremony Monday night when two current members of the honorary walked through the audience and tapped the students and faculty member.

After the tapping, the names of officers of the honorary were also announced. Serving as Jason (or president) during the past year has been Raymond Mason Taylor of Washington, N. C. The other officers are as follows: Paul Gene Strassler, Hyparchos (vice president); Harvey Peck, Grammateus (secretary), and John Whitaker, Chrystopher (treasurer).

All of the students tapped into the Golden Fleece are seniors here except Patterson and the two Smiths, who are juniors, and LeRoy, who is a medical student.

Eleven of the thirteen are from North Carolina. Woodard is from Bayboro; Scurlock, from Greensboro; Norman Smith, from Franklin; Goldsmith, from Lincolnton; LeRoy, from Elizabeth City; Furtado, from Garner; Lohr, from Raleigh; Patterson, from Edenton; Dr. Mason, from Chapel Hill; Kirkman, from High Point, and Wade Smith, from Albemarle.

Lotz is from Northport, N. Y., and Huntington is from Spartanburg, S. C.

During the ceremony, the legend of Jason and the quest for the Golden Fleece was read by Foster Fitz-Simons, associate professor of dramatic art.

At the conclusion of the tapping, active Argonauts appeared on the stage with the new members. The actives included Kenneth Lawing Penegar, Edwin Osborne Ayscue Jr., Joel Lawrence Fleishman, William Ray Long, Eddie Covington Bass, George Robinson Ragsdale, John Aitken Sneden Jr., Edward Ulysses Hallford Jr., Wayne Staton Bishop, John Charles Brooks and Herman Godwin.

Occupying special seats in the auditorium were alumni of the order.

A banquet for active members, alumni and initiates were held after the tapping at the Carolina Inn. Main speaker for the occasion was Lenoir Chambers, editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. Chambers was tapped into the order in 1913.

The significance of Fleece membership was indicated in a speech during the ceremony by Raymond Taylor (Jason for the order). Taylor said, "The qualities sought in Argonauts of old are as real and as necessary today as in days past.

"In a world pleading for leadership, is it not proper that we here in all humility attempt to honor those qualities of leadership and the men among us who emulate them?

"To those chosen, let it be a tribute to work well done. To others, let it be an encouragement to higher achievement. To still others, let it be a challenge to prove the omissions of this night a testimony to human error in judgment."

Referring to the years of University history when "there have always been those who have risen in times of need and crisis, have loved this place, and given themselves in devoted service to it," Taylor said, "it is they and their ideal that made it great."

He said the Fleece 56 years ago when it was organized "became guardian of this ideal that it might have its fullest realization.

"In those men honored tonight and in their desires to give fully to University life are mirrored the qualities on which this ideal depends," he said.

"All that they possess cannot be enumerated on paper. Judge them for what they are as well as for what they have done for our University."

John Minter Praises, Discusses Candidates

University Party Chairman John Minter discussed qualifications of UP candidates for vice president, secretary and treasurer of the student body in a statement released Monday.

The UP's vice presidential candidate, David Grigg, has had the experience in Legislature which would enable him to be a good speaker of that body, Minter said. The main duty of the vice president is to serve as speaker of the Legislature.

In Legislature, Grigg has served as sergeant of arms and has been a member of the Budget and Finance committees. His experience membership of such committees as the Symposium General Committee, Committee on State Affairs and the Attorney General's staff.

Academically, Grigg is a member of Phi Eta Sigma fraternity for freshmen with a B plus average. He is attending UNC on a Morehead scholarship.

The UP's candidate for secretary, Sue Wood, has also had experience in Student Legislature. Minter listed her main work in Legislature as serving as assistant clerk.

Minter said that although Bob Bingham, candidate for treasurer, has not had experience with UNC finances, he has the interest to be capable in that position. Minter said he believed Bingham would do a good job in that office as has Charlie Gray, who likewise had had no experience before elected to that position.

In addition to listing specific qualification of UP candidates, Minter talked in general about what the candidates and the party "stand for."

The UP "does not believe in a crusade a day to keep reality away, he said.

Minter also dismissed what he termed Student Party arguments that "our slate for the big four is not 'progressive' enough in thought and action, that they will evade the privilege of governing the campus in perfecting and extending our self government, that they represent the party that is not capable of exercising the type leadership cognizant of the responsibility involved.

Minter named the qualifications of three UP candidates and commented that his party did not claim that any one UP candidate had "the most distinguished record of any legislator" as had the Student Party.

Weil Lecture Tonight On French Citizenship

The responsibilities of citizenship in Great Britain, France and the United States will be analyzed by a leading British political scientist, Prof. Denis W. Brogan, in the Weil Lectures today, Wednesday and Thursday.

Dr. Brogan, who teaches at Cambridge University, will open the Weil Lectures at 8 p.m. today in Hill Hall. The lectures are open to the public.

In the lectures entitled "Responsibilities of Citizenship" Professor Brogran will analyze the situations in Great Britain, France and the United States. A separate lecture on each of three successive nights will be devoted to each country. The French point of view will be discussed today; the British, Wednesday; and the American on Thursday.

An unusual combination of author-journalist - academician, Professor Brogan has travelled widely in the United States and Europe, and has written many books about the three countries involved in his lectures here.

A native of Scotland, he attended Glasgow University, Oxford's Balliol College and Harvard University. He lectured at the London School of Economics, Oxford's Corpus Christi College and University College, London.

At Cambridge he is professor of political science and a fellow of Peterhouse College. Professor Brogan is also a fellow of the British Academy, a chevalier of the French Legion of Honor and a commander of the Netherlands Order of Orange-Nassau.

The lectures originated at UNC in 1914-15 and later were endowed by the families of Sol and Henry Weil of Goldsboro. The first lectures were delivered by the late President Howard Taft.

Playmakers Schedule 3 Short Plays

The Carolina Playmakers will present three new one-act plays by student authors Thursday and Friday in the Playmakers Theatre at 7:30 p.m. The plays were chosen from those written in the playwriting class of Prof. Thomas Patterson of the Department of Dramatic Art.

The bill of plays opens with "We Might Become Examples," written by Arthur McDonald, of Milledgeville, Ga. The play is directed by Gunsam Lee. The cast includes Jeunese Hatter, Alan Pultz, Tim Jones and Douglas McDermott.

The second play of the evening is "An Age of Reason," by Robert Merritt, of Yonkers, N. Y., directed by Robert Ketler. Hunter Tillman, Tony Millili, Bill Bailey, Robert Inscoe, Gail Rice, Betty Rhodes, Charles Nisbet and David Peterson are in the cast.

The final play, by Douglas McDermott, of San Marino, Calif., is "With Apologies, Euripedes," directed by James Armacost. The cast includes Bob Merritt, Wayne Garber, Bill File, Darwin Solomon, Carolyn Myers and Jock Lauterer.

These productions are entirely student produced. They are a regular feature of the Playmakers season.

Admission to the plays is free.

UP Postpones Meet

The University Party meeting tonight has been called off.

Instead there will be a meeting of all UP candidates for offices Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II.

According to John Minter, party chairman, there will be a discussion of campaign procedures at this time.

Legislators will be excused because of the Student Legislature meeting.

Coed Interviews Begin At 2 Today

Interviews for Women's Orientation Counselors will begin today for the girls from Whitehead who have returned applications. These interviews will begin at 2:00 in Roland Parker III in Graham Memorial. Coordinator Belinda Foy requests that all girls be on time for their interviews.

Men's Orientation Applications Ready

Coordinator of Men's Orientation, Tom Overman urges all interested men to secure application blanks for Orientation Counselors from the following places: Graham Memorial Information Desk, Monogram Club, Reserve Room in the Library, Lenoir Hall, YMCA, and they also will be distributed in dormitories and fraternity houses.

Counselor Manuals can be checked out for study from the Reserve Room in the Library and from the Information Desk in GM. There will be a quiz covering this material in the Manual given on April 2. The deadline for the return of applications is Wednesday, March 25.

CENTS — Here's one beauty contest that students may judge. Penny votes of students in Y Building today through Saturday will determine which coed will reign as queen over the annual Blue-White football game between two teams from the UNC varsity squad. The Blue-White game Saturday afternoon will climax spring practice for the Tar Heels. Candidates for Blue-White Queen are: first row, left to right, Linda Watkins ,sponsored by Chi Omega; Jenny Elder, sponsored by Smith Dormitory; Carol Carruthers, sponsored by Pi Beta Phi; and Patricia Chandler, sponsored by Carr Dormitory; and second row, left to right, Sandra Carlton, sponsored by the Nurses Dorm; Kathy Davis, sponsored by Alderman; Jo Ann Hardin, sponsored by Alpha Gamma Delta; Lynn Walker, sponsored by McIver; and Judy Guerico, sponsored by Alpha Delta Pi. Not pictured are Judith Bunn, sponsored by Kappa Kappa Gamma; Jane Newsome, sponsored by Delta Delta Delta; and Doodie Waldman, sponsored by Kappa Delta.

At Twilight

American history can be compared to a hot summer's day, and when one views this comparison it has great validity.

Its dawn was hot and moist. The heat derivative of the sweat of the men who forged into the mostly barren wilderness to crave out a nation in the uncharted timber. The moist comes from the sea, the sea which many men crossed before the first group set out to make this unique edifice in the world. It is representative of the moisture that was shipped by these first settlers of this new domain.

The sun rose and the animals awakened to a beautiful warm morning in which the flowers bloomed and the birds sang. And upon this virgin soil man began carving out a new destiny and brought forth with new dynamism an idea implicit in the works of such men as Locke, but never before tried in a working form. This was the early morning, a morning of what promised to be a beautiful day.

And the birds flew around and spread a message of joy, and as the morning grew older, the whole land burst into activity, and the activity spread and the world felt its life. And so America spread and the arms and legs of men spread an idea until it spanned a continent and with the strength of several Hercules' a mighty fortress was built. And the morning drove on and activity slackened with the heat.

But in the slack time of the morning sweet voices were heard in the air. The tannager, the cardinal, the oriole and many others spread their wings for the world to admire their beauty. And in this slack time in America's life, the voices of Marshall, Clay, and Webster spoke truth to the multitude at a time when the multitude would still listen to truth.

And then the hour of noon passed and in the horizon the dark clouds of a summer thunderstorm appear to mar the blue of the summer sky and the fleecy cumulus clouds that sail at high speed through the summer heavens. And in the voices of Calhoun and others the clouds of rain foreshadowed the deluge to come. But still the sky of blue prevailed and the swiftness of industrial ascendance of the new nation rivalled the swiftness of the cumulus clouds in the sky, but there were many in the nation who knew that the blue could not prevail long.

And they were right for the sky grew overcast and although the flashes of lightning threw new illumination in the world, it broke through the clouds and severed their united strength. And soon it rained, and the summer's storm came down in a deluge with its accoutrements of hail to bring wreckage to parts of the world, but the storm was short as summer storms are, but as summer storms are prone to do, this one did not bring any relief to the summer heat, and while it brought a lull, the latent heat was certain to oppress the people before the day's end. And in the new nation the dividing forces of one economic system and one view on man against a totally different economic system and another view on man could not be contained, and all the light shed by a person of the stature of Lincoln could not keep back the flood. And as the lightning divided the heavens, the war between the states severed the new nations, and as the hail wrought havoc with property, the war cut into men's minds in such a way, that the sores would not heal for many years to come. The war ended, but the calm brought by the enforcement of one point of view over another did not still the fires of hatred, and they emerged in the white supremacist ideology of the Democratic Party of the South since the war.

And after the storm, the world again came out of its shelter and busied itself with activity before evening and activity would have to cease for the day. And the metallic sounds of the hammer against steel, of machines in action, and of the railroad as it sped communications to the people of the nation, heralded an era of industrial expansion that placed the new nation on the top of the world, but its leadership was short lived.

But even in this era of activity the vulture silently waited in the tree and the woods of the virgin timber rotted or were gutted with fire. And so within the country, the profit motive perverted the American ideal, and men became parasites on other mer resources were spoiled with greed, and jealousy for power sucked, as a leech would suck, the warm blood of America's greatness.

And before the sunset the clouds gathered in the horizon, and the people coming home from work were aware of the immensity of the horizons in the sky. And power hungry men with ideas of import brought strength to other nations, and twice challenged the power of the young country. The scope of the activities of the new nation were no longer limited to its own boundaries, so that the world became its concern, but only for a while did it posses men capable of dealing with an area so large.

Sunset came, and the day gave its last flourish of light and color. People turned their eyes to the sky to behold the greatness of this gift of nature, and they smiled with contentment. And so America came out of World War II with its greatest triumph as the undisputed leader in the world as the possessor of the foremost secret, the secret of the atom. And the people of America patted themselves on the back and sat before their newest technological success, the television.

But the sunset dissipated and the color left the sky, with giant clouds growing on the horizon and flashes of heat lightning periodically illuminating the horizon. And so America dissipated its strength and glory toward the end of its days, and the vultures of the other power seekers grew in strength and skill so that they beclouded the horizon. And the American people grew more complacent, and their leadership grew dull and unimaginative, and many saw the idea of America as doomed.

And it is now twilight, people begin making preparations for sleep. And the question in their minds is one which any living person has asked at one point or another in his life. The question is "Will there be another morning?"

Letters On Three DTH Writers

Editor:

After reading the blatant bleats of Bill Bailey on militarism, patriotism and the President, I thought of the hundreds of thousands of poor, uneducated American G.I.'s who have died in past wars so that Mr. Bailey and those like him could write such rubbish. Mr. Bailey is probably too young to realize that if it were not for the military training which he attacks he might very well be taking orders from one A. Hitler instead of the President.

I suppose Mr. Bailey proposes to defend himself from the bayonet with his powerful pen. He should be advised that some of us are not yet ready to rely upon his pen for our defense. Mr. Bailey no doubt holds the naive belief that the pen is mightier than the sword. When he goes out into the real world, he will qualify this opinion and will realize that the pen is mightier than the sword ONLY if the sword allows the pen to speak.

Mr. Bailey sounds like the person who "still wets his bed and sucks his thumb." His pillow is probably wet from the tears that he sheds nightly when he thinks about day when he might have to submit his delicate self to the wishes of some offensive master sergeant. The poor little dear! I am sure every veteran joins me in wishing that his fright will soon leave him. Mr. Bailey sounds like a little boy who has always enjoyed priviledges that have been won by someone else. Now that it is his time to "sacrifice" a little of his own time, his delicate constitution becomes upset. No doubt Mr. Bailey thinks that the veteran was very happy about taking mid-night hikes and sleeping in mud while training to remove the Japanese from the jungle strongholds in the Pacific. To placate his guilty feelings he blindly flings words about in the hope of convincing himself, more than anyone of us, that he really is justified in his attitude toward the military.

Mr. Bailey's article is typical of many others that appear in the Daily Tar Heel and all other newspapers, including the all-knowing New York Times. Most writers get carried away with their vast knowledge on any and all subjects and their eloquence in expressing this knowledge. The fact is that very few newspaper writers are expert in any field except maybe putting words on paper. Writing is a full-time job and leaves little time for studying intricate problems. The experts who spend most of their lives trying to understand a problem are too busy to spend their time writing; the writers are too busy writing to study the problem. Men who have spent 20 years working on some problem admit that they have no solution, but pick up any newspaper and you will see the solution right there in black and white.

I recall a remark by Oscar Wilde. "There is much to be said in favor of modern journalism. By giving us the opinions of the uneducated, it keeps us in touch with the ignorance of the community." Write on, write on, Mr. Bailey.

There has been of late much verbal garbage in the edit columns but none which has been more provoking (not thought - provoking, mind you) than Bill Bailey and his feeble attempt at sarcasm (I find no humor apparent). To attack established ideals of society seems the special province of college sophomores and it has been ever thus. At least it has been thus in this country as long as there were those who made the sacrifices necessary to preserve the freedoms which Mr. Bailey was exercising to the fullest on last Saturday's edit page.

Even the right to hold the various religious viewpoints including certain pacifist's and conscientious objector's beliefs are protected by others who are willing (to paraphrase Voltaire) to defend to the death your right to say it even though I may disagree with everything you say.

There are two points made in the article which are somewhat worthwhile and as a matter of fact ironically apply most aptly to their author. "I have smiled and put my faith in the homo sapiens; he has been but an infant, and who can not forgive an infant for making mud pies or kicking helpless animals . . ." and in another place, "but like I say, man is yet in his youth; he will grow up. I have great hopes for his future. He will build monuments to perfection: Ideals will swell into the noonday of human achievement."

Lest anyone who disagrees with Bailey be put in the untenable position of defending every thing our military has ever done let us concede to you that it, being an instrument of fallible human beings allied to a common purpose, has made errors—yes, even costly errors because in many cases the stakes were great; but (and this is vital and overriding in importance to the carping criticism of their detractors) the batting average was extremely high in their favor and our debt to them is monumental and unpayable. On this one issue I will go to the mat with you, Mr. Bailey—they are (however misguided you may think them) sincere in their efforts to protect you and your freedoms (many of which they must surrender temporarily, or in some cases permanently, in so doing).

In short: I find your logic faulty, your comment sickening, your maunderings sycophantic, and your opinion so scurrilous it makes one wretch.

For perspicacity and perspicuity commend me to that bloody but unbowed member of your staff, Anothony Wolff. Never have I read a more perceptive dramatic criticism than that of Sir Alec's adaptation and performance of "The Horse's Mouth" in your Daily Tar Heel of March 10th. The only fly in the ointment was the mis-spelling of Sir Alec's last name six times. Perhaps it is evidence of a small and petty mind to be disturbed by flies when the ointment is so good.

Textile Pressure

Sidney Dakar

The textile interests are jumping for joy over the recent recommendation for protective import quotas by a Senate subcommittee. Any bill that comes out of a subcommittee with a favorable recommendation is almost sure to be passed by the Senate proper. Score another victory for the pressure groups. This is politics.

The most amazing thing about our Congress is that they pass any bills. There are so many vocal pressure groups in Wasington that there will be almost certain opposition to any bill that might come up for action. Pity the congressmen who are saddened by the pleadings of others. He can rarely choose the ideal plan of action; it is always a question of choosing the lesser of two evils. No matter what action is being considered, there will be strong pressure groups pleading that such action would ruin the country. Unfortunately for the lowly consumer, most congressmen, always looking ahead for a source of funds for the next campaign, usually decide which pressure group is backed by the most money and vote accordingly.

Protective tariffs on textile products are a definite disadvantage to most of the voters in the United States. Such tariffs can hit the majority of us in several ways. The most obvious is that we must pay $5 for an American shirt instead of $1 for a Japanese shirt of the same quality. Do not be misled by the manufacturer's cry of "inferior workmanship."

Removing this tariff would certainly force all of the inefficient textile manufactures in this country out of business. But, after all, would not this be in line with our economic theory of the "free enterprise" system of the most efficient producer pushing the inefficient out of the market? Clearly such a move would be favor of the majority of shirt or washcloth buyers in this country. So what if Japan can make shirts cheaper than we can? There are still plenty of products that our workers can produce cheaper than Japanese workers.

A less obvious way in which protective tariffs can hurt the American consumer is that other countries erect similar tariffs on American goods. Let's suppose Joe Brown is working in a washing machine plant that does a large export business. When the U. S. erects a high tariff on textiles, Japan looks around for an American import on which she can raise import duties. One of the most basic "laws" of international trade is that total imports must equal total exports if the country is to avoid going into debt. There is no international currency; exports must pay for imports.

You guessed it; Japan decides to slap a steep tariff on American washing machines. Joe's company then frantically looks around in the international market for another customer that will buy some washing machines. Argentina looks like a good prospect. It just so happened, however, that the American beef interests pressured through a tariff on Argentine beef with the result that Argentina retaliated with a tariff on American washing machines.

Joe's company becomes desperate when all of its warehouses are full of unsold washing machines. It is forced to cut production in half because of the disappearing overseas markets. Joe loses his job and he still has to pay $5 for that shirt, but it probably does not matter because he will not be buying any shirts or much beef now that he has no job.

A Letter And A Reply

Editor:

I am writing for information from a fellow college newspaper editor. A controversy has erupted at Wilmington College which I, as editor of the monthly newspaper here, started. It has grown into a heated discussion.

Here is the story: I am a writer for the Wilmington News, the afternoon daily here. I also attend Wilmington College and edit the school's newspaper, The Seahawk. Since I have been editor, the paper has blossomed into a popular and integral part of the college, and until this week everyone, students and faculty members, were completely satisfied with its growth.

For this month's edition, I wrote an editorial on the Mississippi political leaders refusing to allow the Mississippi State basketball team to compete in the NCAA tournament because of the non-segregated policy of the tournament. I have been in newspaper work long enough to know how strongly I can press a point. I hit hard, through satire, but kept my criticism to a level that would not leave myself or my paper open to legal repercussions. In the last part of the editorial, I compared the Mississippi segregation policy to that of Wilmington, and asked the logical question: Why don't the Seahawks play military teams in Brogden Hall?

As soon as Dr. William Randall, president of Wilmington College, read the editorial, he ordered all copies of the paper to be put in the administration office. Approximately 20 copies were circulated before he picked them up. He said that in his opinion the editorial was "oppressive" and "inflammatroy," and that it could place the college in a bad light. He said that it was ill-timed because the college has been trying to keep the whole segregation subject quiet, and that the community might think Wilmington College is pushing for integration.

The newspapers were kept in the office, and a meeting of the Board of Trustees was given the question to solve. Meanwhile, when the students learned that their paper was being suppressed, they joined forces with the newspaper against the administration. Every person who could find a copy of the paper read the editorial, and not one student told me he (or she) thought the editorial was "oppressive" or "inflammatory."

Now, because of Randall's hasty action, the subject has become a school-wide controversy. The students want to know if a college paper has the right to freedom of the press or if its policies and views shuold be controlled by the administration.

You, being the editor of the state's largest college newspaper are in a position to reflect the views of most other state editors.

Has this situation arisen at other colleges? Are other editors controlled by the administration of their college or the trustees? Have you or other editors you know written editorials criticizing segregation? Do you, as a college newspaperman, believe that a college newspaper should have complete freedom of the press? Do you think my editorial subject was appropriate for a segregated junior college newspaper?

Your honest answers to these questions and any remarks you might care to make on the subject will be greatly appreciated by me and the student body at Wilmington College.

DAN GREENE

The Reply

Dear Mr. Greene,

I am taking the liberty of answering your letter this way because I feel that your letter poses the issue of freedom of the press on a college campus in a clear light.

simple. They were blatantly in violation of the principles of the simple. They were slatantly in violation of the principles of the free press which this nation has protected by an article in the bill of rights.

It is further a violation of the academic freedom upon which the whole concept of American education is grounded. Indeed, the principles of academic freedom seem to dictate that any inquiry toward knowledge is valid and any point of view has its relevance.

The Daily Tar Heel has in its recent history been completely independent from any censorship of any type, and to my knowledge, although many suffer from pressures and faculty advisors, no paper in recent North Carolina history has been disposed of the way your paper was.

It is indeed a shame that the administrators of your University have no more wisdom than they have shown. It is a shame that an editor's point of view is not respected by these administrators, and it is funny that they are so afraid of their position as to feel that your editorial might damage it.

At the University there have been many pro-integration columns and a few pro-segregation. I have taken an affirmative stand in favor of integration on several occasions and it is clearly my belief that you were right on your stand.

Every person who has the courage of his convictions pays a price. But no price that you may have to pay can match in value the preservation of your self-respect and your integrity.

I'm glad to see that your student body is behind you, and I am certain that every editor in the state regardless of point of view will give you his backing on the issue of freedom of the press.

I hope you will be able to succeed in changing the administrative attitude toward the student press. Judging from the freedom of the press resolution passed last summer by the Congress of the United States National Student Association, a vast majority of the students in the United States are behind you on the free press issue, and a great many more on the integration issue.

If you are not able to succeed in changing the administrative attitude, keep the courage up. A friend of mine told me recently, "A person who has courage usually lives a short life, but a person without lives not at all." This probably will hold true in your situation.

It was brought to my attention not to long ago that one of the better campus police officers was retiring for "personal reasons"; concerning this I would like to put before the student body some facts and opinions for their thought and consideration concerning this man, Scotty the cop.

This retirement, after 23 yrs. of military and civil duty in uniform, brings to mind the question of why should a man of Scotty's ability and tact be allowed to quietly leave the life which he does best, to manage a country store? There is no doubt that a man of his talents and one who takes such pride in his organization and his uniform, as Scotty does in the university and his personal appearance while on duty, should be given the opportunity to continue his good work in the field in which he best performs and in this case it is police work.

President Friday and Mr. Carmichael have both seen fit to personally extend their compliements and best wishes to Scotty, as have other members of the facutly and student body. There is little doubt in my mind that if he is not going to work as a "campus cop" that the best thing that could be done is that he should be given the opportunity to work on the Chapel Hill Police Force; even if it would mean creating a special position for him. Personally I think that this man Scotty, is the best damn campus cop I have come in contact with in the last 4 years and I believe that the people of Chapel Hill and future students of the university will be missing a good man if he is allowed to leave his present mode of work for some country store. What do some of you other students think about this?

Over 500 To Compete For Steaks And Trophies

By BEN TAYLOR

Over 500 dormitory and fraternity men will pit wits, talents, and energy tonight at 7 o'clock in Woollen Gym as they vie for steaks and trophies being offered as prizes in the second annual Grail - Mural Sports Jamboree.

Co-sponsored by the Intramural Dept and the Order of The Grail, the jamboree of brawn, brain and skill is a two-night event aimed at bringing together the campus' best athletes in a show of competition. Last year's initial event involved about 400 students and was termed a success by the co-sponsors.

Twenty-two fraternities have been paired with a like number of dormitories, and each of these "joint" teams will battle tonight in round robin tournaments in seven events. Winners will advance to the single eliminations finals Wednesday night.

Whenever you get together the best athletes from every group on campus, you can expect to see some good, closely-fought games," Coach Walter Rabb, director of intramurals, said in commenting on the Jamboree. He also cited the opportunity the Jamboree provides for dormitory and fraternity members to get together.

Many of the fraternities have invited the team members from their paired dormitories over for supper tonight or Wednesday night, Jamboree officials said. Herman Godwin, delegate to the Grail, said he believed this helps a great deal to increase friendship between the two segments of campus population.

"I hope as many students as possible will take advantage of this opportunity to bridge the gap that often tends to alienate dormitory and fraternity," he said.

The Intramural Department has urged that all contestants appear promptly on the main floor of Woollen Gym at 6:45 tonight so that all events can begin on schedule.

The public has been invited ot attend the contests, officials said.

University Officials Face Appropriations Committee

By NEIL MURPHY

President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University will appear before the Joint Appropriations Committee Wednesday to follow "the many forceful arguments" of the State Board of Higher Education.

The entire afternoon has been devoted to hearing the University's case as presented by President William C. Friday, Vice President William D. Carmichael, and Chancellors William B. Aycock, Cary H. Bostian, and Gordon Blackwell.

The public hearing will be held in the Joint Appropriations Committee Hearing Room on the sixth floor of the Revenue Building in Raleigh. President Friday expects the 2 p.m. meeting to be "quite crowded."

Friday, speaking of the case presented by the Board of Higher Education, said, "They made, from my point of view, many forceful statements on public education in North Carolina. I cannot say what effect it had on the legislators. I did not get a chance to talk with any members of the committee." Friday attended the meeting held on the 11th of March only as a spectator.

The requests of the State Board of Higher Education included one for Carolina's new two-million dollar Student Union.

Sheffield Blasts UP For 'Bad Deal' Planks

Student Party's Vice Chairman Dewey Sheffield attacked the University Party for giving the campus a "Bad Deal" in a statement Monday.

Sheffield said, "The chairman of the University Party has called for a 'New Deal' in campus politics." The UP has a duty to ask for a "New Deal," Sheffield commented, "considering the 'Bad Deal' that the inactive University Party has given to the campus this year."

In defense of his own party which, he said, had been labeled as the party of crusaders, Sheffield asserted that SP "has taken and kept the initiative in bringing this campus better student government.

"If this is crusading, I for one will wear the label of a 'crusader' with the utmost pride."

The reason for UP's attack on the Student Party, Sheffield said, is because UP "has done nothing to further student government of the students on this campus."

Thus the UP can cover its record of "doing nothing" by attacking the Student Party's record of progress, he said.

Sheffield specifically referred to the record of 27 SP authorized bills in Legislature this session as compared with seven from the UP.

Instead of a "New Deal," Sheffield said his party was offering the campus the "Best Deal."

He challenged the UP to "talk sense" about its record.

Select Board Endorses 17 Women

Seventeen coeds were endorsed by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board last week to run for the three seats open on Women's Honor Council, pending their statements of good scholastic standing.

Those endorsed include Diana Harmon, Janie Walters, Gayle Melton, Tina Baensch, Peggy O'Neil, Jane Durham, Kitty Allen, Florence McGowan, Sophie Martin, Julie Redhead, Elizabeth McCorie, Linda Rehm, Ann Shepherd, Jane Park, Carol Tieslau, Frances Syder and LaRuth Sutton.

The Board also said coeds may run for Honor Council without Board endorsement by submitting to the chairman of the Elections Board a statement of good scholastic standing signed by their dean.

English Club Hears Graves On Brecht

Dr. Russell B. Graves, visiting professor in the Department of Dramatic Arts, will speak to the Graduate English Club today at 8 p.m. in 103 Bingham.

Dr. Graves will talk on "Bertolt Brecht's Theory of Epic Theatre."

Dr. Graves is currently on leave of absence from Lycoming College in Williamsburg, Pa. He has worked previously as a radio director and writer in New York. In 1945 he was playwright in residence at Dartmouth.

In addition to his position here, Dr. Graves is currently chairman of the Editorial Board of the American Education Theatre Association.

He has received degrees from Carnegie Tech and Florida State University.

Men's Dorms To Elect IDC Reps

In a short time, there will be meetings in the men's dormitories to nominate candidates for the offices of dorm president and IDC representative.

Election for these offices will be April 7.

Anyone who has a "C" average and is not a social fraternity member is eligible to run.

According to Rudy Edwards, IDC president, the office of dorm president requires a great deal of time and hard work. He said the candidates nominated should be willing to devote their time and ideas to the dorm.

Edwards said Monday, "I urge each of you (men's dorm residents) in the next few days to consider carefully persons who you feel would make good officers. Talk to them and encourage them to run if they are sincerely interested in the office. It is only by filling these offices in every dormitory with capable and dedicated people that we can have a successful dormitory program at Carolina."

Counselor Applications Available

Coeds interested in being freshmen counselors next fall may obtain application blanks in the dean of women's office today through Thursday.

Counselors will live with the freshmen in Spencer and serve yearround as well as being orientation guides.

Future sophomores who have been through the program are urged to apply although any woman student is eligible.

Interviews will be held before spring vacation by a joint committee of Women's Residence Council and the Orientation Committee.

Communication Requested By Furtado

Student Body President Don Furtado has urged students to write letters to their representatives in the N. C. General Assembly about financial needs of the University.

Furtado said Saturday UNC can remain a real University only if adequate appropriations are made to restore budgetary needs. Some of these needs, Furtado said, are funds for the Library, for attracting qualified faculty members and for continuing the present operations of the University.

Other needs outlined by Furtado include construction of a new student union and classroom buildings.

"No one should feel that the issue does not directly apply to him because many students will feel the pressures of inadequacies of insufficient funds," Furtado commented.

The names of members of the General Assembly and their counties and senatorial districts are available in the student government office.

Records Fell In Indoor Games

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The records fell faster than snow in a blizzard in Woollen Gym Saturday night as four conference marks were broken and two tied in the sixth running of the ACC Indoor Games.

Three more records were bettered in the freshman division, with Maryland, Duke and Clemson all getting into the act.

Two Carolina runners, Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop, closed out their indoor track careers at Carolina with record-smashing performances.

Bishop got his first and it came in his specialty, the 2-mile run. He jumped into an early lead and kept building on it, finally lapping the entire field in an easy victory. His time was 9:19.2 and it was 2.7 seconds under the record Maryland's Burr Grimm set in the same Indoor Games last year. Grimm's time was 9:21.9.

Scurlock In 880

Scurlock, who made an almost-successful bid for a world record, ran away with the 880 and established another new ACC standard. His time of 1:52.7 chopped three seconds off the old mark.

Maryland's Terps, who walked off with team honors as usual, accounted for the other fallen record with their 1-mile relay team. The team of Smith, Salmon, Lowndes, and Colavita got a record time of 3:27.

John Starboard, another Terp, galloped in with a record in the 70-yard high hurles. His time was 8.5.

South Carolina's Billy Latham, in a come-from-behind victory, tied the conference record of 4:12.5 in the mile.

Clemson's John Dunkelberg grabbed off a share of the honors by tying another conference standard in the 600-yard run. Dunkelberg closed fast to finish with a time of 1:12.7.

Overall, there were six events in which records were either broken or tied and only seven events won without records.

Three Frosh Records

John Stevenson of Duke got a freshman record in the high jump by getting over the pole at 5' 3 3/16". In the 60-yard dash trials Maryland's Bob Van Reenan broke Dave Sime's record by one tenth of a second. The third frosh record of the night was set by Quincy Newman of Clemson in the half-mile.

Carolina mentor Dale Ranson was high in his praise of both his record breakers, Scurlock and Bishop. "Both boys finished their indoor track careers at Carolina in fine style," Ranson said.

Ranson also had words of praise for assistant track coach and assistant athletic director Joe Hilton, who staged and organized the indoor games. The games, described the "Indoor Track Classic of the South", are growing in popularity each year. Four outside teams were attracted to the site this year.

Baseball Season Starts Next Week; Rabb Cautious About Predictions

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Although the opening of the baseball season is less than a week away, Coach Walter Rabb is still quite cautious about predicting the future of his 1959 club.

"We feel we have the potential," Rabb said, "to develop into a representative college ball club. So far we have been working extremely hard on all phases of fundamentals."

Out of a total of forty players who tried out for the squad there are twenty-nine left and this will probably be the team roster number. Included in this count are twelve pitchers and four catchers.

Pitching Outlook

"We have our pitchers back," the coach went on, "and thus far they have shown good progress. We also expect to get help from sophomores Johnny Stot and Bob Deaton. Also Ben Hammett seems to have recovered from his sore arm and he has done good work in two scrimmages."

"Our scrimmages to date seem to indicate that the pitchers are still ahead of the hitters, however, the whole squad is beginning to hit the ball better."

A year ago Rabb's Tar Heels, a team with only three seniors in the starting lineup, finished in a tie for the ACC championship and were beaten 4-1 in a playoff by Clemson for the right to advance to the NCAA finals. Carolina's overall record last year was 19-7-1 and in the conference the Heels won eleven and lost three.

Gone from this suprising squad are the three seniors who made up the center of the infield, third baseman Al Pons, captain and shortspot Roger Honeycutt, and second sacker Carson Oldham.

Lineup Picture

Right now, according to the coach, the starting lineup for this season presents about the following picture. In the infield it would be Vaughn Bryson at first, Larry Craver at second, Harold Workman at short, with either Jerry Nestor or Ferg Norton on third and Al Baldwin catching. The outfiled shapes up as a battle between John Burgwyn, Gerald Griffin, Bruce Crump, and Russ Hollers for the starting spots.

Commenting on the overall ACC outlook for the season Rabb said, "Clemson would have to be considered the favorite. At this stage it could be Wake Forest or Maryland next. We would rate our ball club with a chance to finish in the upper half."

The Tar Heels officially get underway next Monday when they take on Dartmouth College at Emerson Stadium. On the following day Carolina will entertain the University of Connecticut. Last year both of these teams were in the District 1 NCAA playoffs and are expected to field fine teams again this season.

Friday Makes Budget Appeal Today

NOW LET'S SEE . . . You belong over there — a certain amount of confusion was present at first, a natural happening for any operation as big as the Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree. This cleared up quickly as each group of boys was assigned to its correct location in the gym. (Photo by Peter Ness)

Grail-Mural Sports Revel Attracts 300 Competitors

Some 300 the intramural athletes from fraternities and dormitories combined their skills to compete in the Second Annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree last night in Woollen Gym.

Winners for the first night round-robin play advanced to sing elimination finals scheduled tonight at 7. Finals will be played in handball, table tennis, badminton, swimming, and half-court basketball.

Chi Psi - Joyner - I won the foul shooting event as team members George Craver (Chi Psi) and Mitchel' Daughtry (Joyner) dropped in a total of 40 shots out of a possible 50. SAE-Avery ran a close second, but lost to the Chi Psi-Joyner-1 club in a playoff round.

Team relays are scheduled to get underway at 8 p.m. with four fraternity men and four dorm men combined to make up a team. There are 22 teams entered in three sections. Three preliminary relays will be run with the top two teams in each section competing in the finals to determine the champion.

Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver will present winners with individual trophies at a "steak supper" to be held at Watt's Restaurant on Monday, March 23, at 7 p.m. Trophies are now on display in the Woollen Gym Trophy Case.

Finalists in the events are: HANDBALL: Beta-Winston-1, Phi Gam-2-Cobb-1, Theta Chi - Law School, SAE - Avery, SPE - Old West and Chi Psi-Joyner-1.

TABLE TENNIS: Zeta Psi - Ruffin, DU-Lewis-1, Theta Chi - Law School, Delta Sig-Winston-2, ZBT - Alexander-2, and DKE - Lewis-2.

HALF-COURT BASKETBALL: TEP - Cobb-2, Chi Phi - Parker, PiKA - Everett, Beta - Winston-I, Delta Sig-Winston-2 and SAE - Avery.

BADMINTON: Stacy - Sigma Nu, SAE - Avery, Phi Gam-2-Cobb-2, TEP - Cobb-2, Zeta Psi Ruffin, and DKE - Lewis-2.
Avery-SAE, Beta - Winston-1, ATO-

SWIMMING: (200 yd. Freestyle) Manly, DKE-LEWIS-2, Phi Gam-2-Cobb-1 and ZBT - Alexander-2. (150 yd. Medley) The above teams will also participate in the medley event with the following exception: Chi-Phi - Parker replaces DKE-Lewis--2.

In archery competition TEP - Cobb-2 and Chi Phi-Parker are leading with six more teams remaining on the schedule.

Students and faculty have been invited to watch the final night of competition.

'Oh, Hellas!' Tryouts Today In Memorial

Tryouts for all parts in this spring's annual "Sound and Fury" production, "Oh, Hellas!," will be held today in Memorial Hall from 3 to 6 p.m. and at 7:30 p.m.

Tryouts for dancing parts will be at 9 p.m.

Al Salley, producer, said no experience is necessary for any of the parts available.

The script, based on Aristophanes' "Lysistrata," was written by Lew Hardee and Carl Bridgers and will be directed by Joel Fleishman.

Production heads include Ed Crow, set designs; Clara Mack, costumes; Jack Mitchell, business manager; Bob Gibson, publicity; Lew Hardee, musical director, and Ess Brunner, assistant musical director.

Anyone interested in working with the production of the show may do so by contacting one of the production heads.

Sound and Fury will be presented May 1 and 2.

How Undergrads Spend Time Is Investigated

How UNC undergraduates spend their leisure time is the subject of a research study conducted by Elsie Prevatte, a graduate student in the Sociology Department.

She will be assisted by Women's Residence Council, Panhellenic Council, the IDC and the IFC in administering questionnaires to 600 students.

The students who will answer the questionnaires have been selected through stratified random sampling to represent the undergraduate population, according to Miss Prevatte.

The study will be conducted during the second week of April.

Yack Editor To Meet Bi-Partisan Board

The Bi-Partisan Selections Board to endorse candidates running for editor of the Yackety Yack will meet Friday at 3 p.m. in the Grail Room.

"All persons interested in running are to appear at this time," Harold O'Tuel, chairman of the board, said yesterday.

Members of the board include the faculty advisers to the Publications Board, the treasurer of the Publications Board, and the editor and business manager of the Yack this year.

Touches On Race Issue

Assembly Hears Graham

CHAPEL HILL — (AP) — People must not be classified as superior or inferior on the basis of color, race, creed, nationality or status, Dr. Frank Graham, United Nations mediator, declared here Tuesday.

Graham, former president of UNC addressed the 14th annual Health Education Conference.

"In the free minds and generous hearts of millions of Southern people of both races who have long cooperated in human relations and works of personal loyalty and kindness," Graham said, "there will live and grow the unfulfilled teachings of religion for equal freedom, dignity and opportunity for all human beings."

He added, "The great adventure in creative cooperation of the different peoples, without violation of the rights of privacy, friendship and personal choice, will tend to preserve their racial identity and diversities to the enrichment of the south. Racial tensions will be eliminated as man works together in equal freedom and opportunity in the local communities and the world neighborhood."

Graham told the delegates the UN has become the biological, humane, political, economic and moral necessity of the atomic age.

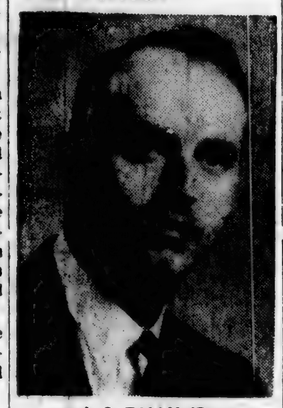
The world is faced with two alternatives, he said. One is an arms race and a precarious peace. The other is international cooperation and bold long range development programs through the United Nations.

Men's Orientation Applications Ready

Coordinator of Men's Orientation, Tom Overman urges all interested men to secure application blanks for Orientation Counselors from the following places: Graham Memorial Information Desk, Monogram Club, Reserve Room in the Library, Lenoir Hall, YMCA, and they also will be distributed in dormitories and fraternity houses.

Counselor Manuals can be checked out for study from the Reserve Room in the Library and from the Information Desk in GM. There will be a quiz covering this material in the Manual given on April 2. The deadline for the return of applications is Wednesday, March 25.

Tally Speaks In Y Series At Hillel



J. O. TALLY JR.

Attorney J. O. Tally Jr. will speak here today at 7:30 at the Hillel Foundation.

Tally, the third speaker in the "Challenges of 1959" series, will speak on "Challenge to Freedom." The YW-YMCA is sponsoring the talks on challenges to the American way of life and to institutions of democracy.

Former mayor of Fayetteville, Tally is now treasurer of Kiwanis International and has served as president of the N. C. League of Municipalities, of the Duke Law School Alumni Assn., of the Harvard Club of North Carolina and of the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce.

Tally was educated at Campbell College, Duke and the law schools of Duke and Harvard.

Jones Airs Plans For Edit Page

"Both sides of any important issue that comes up should be freely aired on the pages of The Daily Tar Heel," said Dave Jones in a statement prepared for release Tuesday.

"I think that it would be a gross neglect of editorial responsibility and a step toward the corruption of editorial freedom to ignore or supress anyone's views on an issue," he continued.

Jones pointed out that as editor he would seek a variety of opinion on the editorial page and always welcome letters to the editor.

"This does not mean that I would not employ my daily column to point out facts that I thought to be pertinant to issues, or to give my opinion," he added.

Jones defined the mission of The Daily Tar Heel as being threefold. "First the paper must provide its readers with news in the areas in which their interest lie," he said.

"Second, it should provide a publicity outlet for cultural and social events that are sponsored locally for the benefit of the students.

"Third, it should provoke thought and discussion among its readers on subjects pertinent to their existence

Bi-Partisan Board Begins Interviews

Interviews with students interesting in running for the Men's Honor Council and Student Council will be held today and tomorrow from 2 to 5 p.m. in the Men's Council rom in Graham Memorial.

All candidates have been requested to sign appointment sheets on the door of the council room for interviews by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

The vacancies on both councils are three senior seats on the Student Council and three seats at large for the Men's Honor Council.

Committee Will Hear Reinstatement Request

By NEIL MURPHY

President William C. Friday will appear before the joint Appropriations Committee today in the last scheduled appeal for the reinstatement of the University's budget requests.

The Universtiy has appeared before the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees, the State Board of Higher Education, the Budget Advisory Commission, and will state its case tomorrow before the Joint Appropriations Committee of the General Assembly.

"The presentation to be made by Vice President William D. Carmichael, and Chancellors William B. Aycock, Cary H. Bostian and Gordon Blackwell and myself will stress the importance of restoring the original 'A' budget, to provide more faculty members, increase substancially the funds for salary increases and provide for additional funds for equipment, supplies and services.

"We will also stress the need for additional capital improvements, and the Student Union requested for Chapel Hill will be emphasized," Friday said Tuesday.

Friday expects a large number of interested persons to attend the public meeting.

The hearing will be held at 2 p.m. today in the Joint Appropriations Committee Hearing Room on the sixth floor of the Revenue Building in Raleigh.

Dorm Courts Established For Action

Dormitory Council Courts have been set up to try violations of men's dormitory rules, according to Rudy Edwards, IDC president.

"This gives the dorm officers the means of implementing the responsibilities of their office," said Edwards. The dorm president is a permanent member of the court.

"One of the primary jobs of the dormitory presidents and IDC representatives is to establish an atmosphere of quiet and study in the dorms," Edwards said.

Campaign Managers Named

Davis Young, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, announced Tuesday the appointment of Hunton Tiffany and Art Shields as co-managers of his campaign.

Both Tiffany and Shields are sophomores. Tiffany is a Morehead scholar, a member of DKE social fraternity and will handle Young's campaign in fraternity areas.

Shields has served on the Elections Board, in student government and was a dorm officer in Mangum. He will supervise Young's dormitory campaigning.

The two managers issued the following statement on Young's qualifications and his campaign to date:

"Davis Young is not only the most experienced candidate now in the race, he is also the most experienced candidate who will be in the race.

"As a Daily Tar Heel reporter, feature editor, columnist and as editor of The Summer School Weekly, Young's qualifications are beyond dispute.

"Further, his record as an SP member of Student Legislature and his present job as president of the sophomore class give him a background in campus activities which is indispenible for a Daily Tar Heel editor."

Tiffany and Shields also noted that

'Old MacDonald' Wins Prize

By ANN FRYE

An impromtu rendition of "Old MacDonald Had a Farm," starring Harvey Saltz as the monkey, won a tropy for the Monogram Club in the annual Valkyrie Sing Monday night.

In addition to the Monogram Club, four other trophies were presented in Memorial Hall Monday.

Sigma Nu fraternity with their "Music in the Modern Idiom! — 'The Shades'" won a trophy in the men's sing division of the Valkyrie Sing.

In the men's skit division, Manley Dormitory's "Johnny Jones Comes Home" was judged the best in that group.

"From the Hungry ADPi," performed by Alpha Delta Pi sorority, took the trophy in the women's sing division. The fifth trophy was awarded Kappa Delta sorority for its "Auntie Mame At Carolina" in the women's skit division.

In the men's sing division, the other entries were Delta Upsilon, Lambda Chi Alpha, Lewis Dormitory and Theta Chi. Stacy Dormitory was the other entry in the men's skit division.

Delta Delta Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Chi Omega and the Nurses Dorm also entered the women's sing division. Other entries in the women's skit' division were Alpha Gamma Delta, McIver Dormitory, Pi Beta Phi, Smith Dormitory and Spencer Dormitory.

Judges for the Valkyrie Sing were Mrs. Marion Fitz-Simmons, Walter Golde, Mrs. William Noland, Dr. Beverly Raney and Doug Sessoms.

Mistress of ceremoies during the program was Paddy Wall. LuRuth Sutton was in charge of arrangements.

The annual Valkyrie Sing followed the Golden Fleece tapping and the presentation of members of the Valkyries.

Intermission music was supplied by the UNC Men's Glee Club.

'61 Fine Arts Forum Up To Frosh, Sophs

If a Fine Arts Forum is held here in the spring of 1961, freshmen and sophomores now enrolled will be concerned with the planning and carrying through of the program.

For freshmen and sophomores interested in such a project, a meeting is being held Friday from 12 oon to 2 p.m. in the back room of Lenoir Hall.

Meeting with the underclassmen will be students who attempted to hold a Fine Arts Forum this year. Mark Wilson, chairman of the Fine Arts Forum Committee, said Tuesday a resume of what had been done and what went wrong with Forum plans this year would be discussed Friday.

The meeting will be to explore the possibility of continuing the efforts to bring people in the field of fine arts to Carolina for lectures and discussions on alternate years with the Carolina Symposium, Wilson said.

Students who worked with the Forum committee this year have been asked to attend the meeting, in addition to freshmen and sophomores who are interested in carrying through the proposal in 1961.

What Ike Missed

The drama critic for the Associated Press noted that President Eisenhower, in his speech Monday night on the Berlin crisis, "seemed to stumble on fewer words than usual." And for those who like back-stage intimacies, the AP man reported that at the end of his speech Eisenhower went up to his TV adviser, Robert Montgomery, and said: "Boy, that's a long haul."

As of this hour, it is not clear whether the President's "long haul" referred to the speech itself, or the 110 mile supply route to West Berlin.

The great AP also moved a wirephoto showing a grim and intense Eisenhower pointing at a map, his hand covering beleaguered Berlin. We comfort ourselves with the thought that our President at least knows where the dammed place is.

What about the speech? Well, it was typical Eisenhower. There was something in it for everybody. You want adherence to "principle"? Ike reiterated his determination not to budge "an inch." You want "flexibility"? Ike offered "to participate fully in every sincere effort at negotiation." You want war? Ike said we were ready for it, and tossed in the casual thought that "free men" have in the past shown a willingness to die for "duty and honor and freedom."

The President offered no hint as to how principle, flexibility, and war could be resolved into a coherent policy.

All of the above is really quite amusing (in a terrifying sort of way). But now we come to a portion of the President's speech which is much more sinister. We come to that portion of the speech where the President of the United States deliberately used his great prestige to mislead the people he serves and to choke off mounting criticism of his stewardship. We come, in short, to missiles.

The President correctly stated that we are spending billions of dollars a year on missiles, and that the best military and scientific brains of the country are working in this crucial area. Then, with a magic wave of his hand, the President unveiled three charts: the first showed missiles which are already operational; the second chart showed missiles which will be operational this year; and the third chart showed missiles which are under development. Even though the lettering on thee charts was illegible, we accept them all as Gospel truth. In fact we accept the President's whole presentation here as Gospel truth.

The point however is not what the U. S. is doing about missiles. The point is what the U. S. is doing about missiles IN COMPARISON WITH WHAT THE RUSSIANS ARE DOING. And it was precisely at this point that the President of the United States spoke not a word. It is now necessary to ask a metaphysical question: Is it possible to lie while keeping silent, saying nothing? If the answer is yes, then the President of the United States lied. Period.

There are two serious competitors in the great missile race — the United States and the Soviet Union. As of now in this race, the Russians have a long lead which they are continually lengthening. This is the so-called "missile gap" about which much has been written. The missile gap is a terrible FACT, not a figment of Joe Alsop's preverse imagination. The FACT of our missile deficiency is at the root of increasingly aggressive Soviet behavior. The military balance of power is tipping and the Russians (no fools, they) are exploiting this FACT with brilliance and nerve.

For better than a year now, the President has responded to this FACT with the hoary argument of our "diversified capability." But even this old, fallacious routine was left off-stage on Monday night. The charts were The Beginning and The End. Every day, in every way, we are getting better and better. To have even so much as mentioned the Russian missile capability would have thrown a nasty crimp into the President's flowing rhetoric and impressive (though unreadable) charts.

The President has quite obviously (and painfully) failed to fool the Russians. But always optimistic, he has not yet given up the truly wicked hope that he can fool his own people. That's US, buster. —P.B.Y.

The Fall Quarterly: A Depressing Issue

Thomas Witherspoon

"since Man from beast by words is known, Words are Man's province, Words we teach alone."
—The Dunciad

The latest issue of The Carolina Quarterly is a depressing one. This is not because the fiction and poetry are for the most part poor in quality; that is to be expected in this sort of "little" magazine. The most one could hope for in the way of truly interesting and provocative writing would be a single story or poem. One such alone could more than justify the existence of the issue. Even without such an item a pleasing stanza or paragraph or a hint of a talent in embryo can provide a sense of satisfaction, meager though it may be. For even the most discriminating reader this issue of the Quarterly should contain something that meets the latter standard. But the absence of superior material is not why this issue is depressing. It is depressing because its contents are imitative, conventional, and conforming. With the individual cases this may vary greatly in importance: Robert Robinson admires J. D. Salinger and Joanne de Longchamps can imitate Dylan Thomas. What seems to be a crippling influence on the former may be but the springboard for a new career for the latter. This is of no great moment; the questions it brings up are.

What sort of periodical is The Carolina Quarterly? Do its editors conceive of it as fulfilling any particular function other than the crepuscular one stated on the masthead that it "publishes short fiction, poetry, reviews, criticism and articles of general interest?" The only answers the present reviewer can find, based solely on the current issue, are very dispiriting ones indeed. The editors appear to be restricting what they publish to what is "safe," that which if not approaching commercial slickness is glibly obfuscate. If a mansucript is in an old familiar form reminiscent of a famous writer and if the author has had work published elsewhere it has met what seem to be the overriding criteria for publication. And so the Quarterly becomes a repository of the second-rate and conventional instead of the fresh, new, and imaginative (if still second-rate) which should be its province. Remember, the Quarterly is not a regional or undergraduate magazine (would that it were one or the other or both), it places itself in the general class —even if in the lowest ranks—of such professional "little" magazines as the Kenyon, Sewanee, and Hudson reviews, to name but a few of the better ones. Being among the weakest of members of this group it inevitably becomes the resting place of many unrealized aspirations, inferior techniques, and confused and/or commonplace ideas.

This need not be so. If the editors would be more sympathetic to new talent their chances of finding something provacative would be much greater than among the work (rejected elsewhere?) of minor writers who have been published previously. This is not to say that the Quarterly should restrict itself to the work of newcomers—the story and poem in the present issue by writers who have never published before are of the same quality as the rest. It is just that given the Quarterly's peculiar position in the periodical world it is far more likely to receive good material from newcomers than from previously published talent. Something that is bold even if bad is to be preferred to the second-rate imitation. That is precisely why the first issue of Spectrum was, for all its faults, an exciting collection, and why the current issue of the Quarterly is merely dull and depressing. The editors of the Quarterly would do well to take more heed of and less umbrage at that publication than they have evinced in the past. In brief, The Carolina Quarterly is in desperate need of a re-oriented editorial policy.

"Ambrose," a chapter from a novel by Robert Robinson, is evocative (to put it mildly) of The Catcher in the Rye. This is its most prominent feature and the source of most of its weakneses. (An author who doesn't write well only looks the worse for imitating a good one.) The character of David is incredible. He's almost as Gothic as Matt Lewis's Ambrosio) and it is unlikely that in the novel as a whole he becomes any less fore and after this brief chapter there is no need to comment on plot or the central character other than to note that the former is unapparent and the latter enigmatic. "Ambrose" is strictly a first person narrative and the word "I" appears at least every other sentence to remind you. Mr. Robinson's vocabulary seems small and the repetitious description of things as either "real," or "right," or "pretty" becomes quickly monotonous. However, as Robinson appears to have a fine sense of the absurd and a certain flair for dialogue, time and practice may work wonders.

"We're Cleverly Fooling The Russians By Acting As If Our Country Were Bankrupt"

The pervading tone of Carolyn See's "Rite de Passage" is one of despair and Weltschmerz brought on by a grubby little wedding reception. Her prose is bad and marvelously pretentious. The story with the Algren-omnibus title by John D. Keefauver is a fantasy in which both the central and peripheral symbols (blatantly erotic at times) get so out of hand they and the story with them become meaningless. Possibly it is meant as a parody of the Algren novels alluded to in the title. But as there are overtones of such disparate writers as Lewis Carroll and Erskine Caldwell it becomes impossible to determine what the author is attempting to say. Keefauver writes in a pseudo-poetic dialect that is alternately vivid and distressing.

Jacob Fisher's "Inky" is at the same time both the best and worst story in the Quarterly. It is pulp magazine fiction written in pulp magazine prose and a good sample of its type. It is dime a dozen stuff and completely out of place here. If the Quarterly continues to publish such slick and uninspired trifles as this its very existence is apt to be endangered.

The poetry is on a slightly higher level in that it is more immediately stimulating. Rereading soon discloses an inner confusion of image and idea that results in a greater disappointment than that produced by the fiction. It is impossible to believe that of the great number of poems submitted to the Quarterly these five represent the best.

Earl Bargainnier's "the bassoonist" contains a succession of vivid pictures tied together by extravagant color imagery. To paraphrase a line from the poem itself, "color-madness is over all." From "Lions, The Lions Are Lovely" we can discern that Joanne de Longchamps has a gift for striking phrases as well as a penchant for alliteration. This may enable her eventually to produce something original that is more than a clever imitation of Dylan Thomas.

An unusual arrangement of words on a page does not make a poem. Henry Birnbaum's "Systle" falls victim to this misconception. There are a number of interesting phrases in the poem, but they fail to connect, to become part of any overall pattern of meaning, and so the poem ends in a mass of contradictions. But there is a promise here as there is a greater one in Gene Frumkin's "The Oneness of the World." Frumkin is a craftsman which makes him rather an anomaly among today's budding poets. The poem contains a consistent and meaningful imagic pattern in the first four and last stanzas. In the three intervening ones confusion is so rampant as to undermine all else. David Young's "Sonnet: The Prodigal" has been described previously by an eminent poet: "And ten low words oft creep in one dull line."

Professor E. M. Adams' article entitled "The Liberal View of Man and Society" is an interesting presentation of just that. He states his case for the Liberal view well and in language relatively free of the professional jargon of modern philosophy. The semantic problems involved in the third section, centering on the meaning of "ought," make it less understandable and convincing than the rest of the article, but this could hardly have been avoided.

The reviews which conclude this issue of the Quarterly are well written summaries of the contents of the books concerned. As many weekly and monthly magazines and newspaper supplements perform this function equally well and at an earlier date, the presence of reviews here seems a waste of space.

Letters From Many Readers

To the Librarian:

I should like to propose a worthy and much needed addition to our library — a courting chamber, where the calls of nature might be answered without disturbing those of us more interested in intellectual endeavors.

I will allow my above suggestion to be viewed as a joke. However, I am serious when I suggest that something should be done about the noise in the areas of the library provided for study. While I am a firm advocate of the natural rights of man, I am not able to bring myself to believe that a few scattered "QUIET PLEASE" signs would constitute a serious infringement upon the freedom of speech.

NAME WITHELD BY REQUEST

Dear Bill Bailey:

What is the address of your Draft Board? I would like to forward them a copy of your recent article on MILITARISM.

Sincerely,

KENNERT STYERS

Editor:

I have become increasing disturbed by the gross irrationalities that have been so obviously manifested in many of the articles that have recently appeared on your editorial page. The vague idealism, completely remote to reality, that has characterized these articles seems to indicate that you and some of your writers have become so absorbed in your radicalism that you have completely lost touch with the pratical nature of your subjects.

Because radicalism has traditionally been linked with intellectualism and individualism is no reason for one to assume that he can become an intellectual or even a true individualist just by being radical. A supposition to the contrary, however, seems to have been made by several of the regular contributors to The Daily Tar Heel in their attempt to make themselves known as intellectuals, or simply, to make themselves known. I take for example the most recent and most glaring example of the bombast that has been so liberally spread across your editorial page. I refer to the article by Bill Bailey which sweepingly condemns the military elements of American society. This article is not only wonderfully radical, but also wholly unrelated to the realm of reason. I think that most of us, even the vacant-eyed participants of a military program must agree with Mr. Bailey to a point — that military systems are, under ideal circumstances, undesirable. This fact indeed seems too obvious to be discussed, even by The Daily Tar Heel. Even those who Bailey says are so duped by "love of country hog-wash" that they join the military are perceptive enough to realize that the United States must either be militarily strong or be subject to Communist domination. Is Bailey too blinded by dreamy idealism to appreciate this alternative, or is the alternative, Communist domination, what he desires?

It is unfortunate that a military organization must demand conformity on the part of its members, and that their individuality must, in some phases of life, be restricted. Non-conformists like Mr. Bailey, however, make a little conforming a lot more tolerable; for, if everyone were a free-thinker after his order, the amount of unreadable trash that would fill our newspapers would be unbearable.

It seems to me to be inexcusable that the readers of The Daily Tar Heel have this type of writing so frequently placed before them that they must come to believe that it reflects the attitudes of the University in general, rather than simply that of a few oft-beat leftists on The Daily Tar Heel staff.

THOMAS TOWLES LAWSON

Editor:

A bulletin board in your DTH office sports the following letter and picture:

"Dear Curtis.

I ran across this old picture of you the other day and though your 'clique' would be interested in it.

Sincerely,
Dave Jones"

Lance in hand, armor of red and gold, forging across some barren plain on a brilliant white horse is a picture of a 12th century CRUSADER.

Evidently, some people think you are a "crusader". Your "clique"? Who are they? The Student Party . . . or your staff . . . or the Student Party?

God bless you all!

Your crusades have been glorious!

I trust your last crusade this season will be the endorsment of all Student Party candidates, those glorious heroes who will reach for the ideals you have so valiantly fought for. Good luck, Curt! Inspire them; stick your lance of radicalism and controversy into their rear ends, push them onto greater things, make them "leaders" such as yourself have proven to be.

I wish you luck!

GEORGE W. VOGEL

P.S. Don't fall off the horse. Such a blow might shock you and your "clique" back into reality . . . and I hear it's damn dull down there.

A Letter

Editor:

In reply to Nancy Combes' letter concerning my series of articles on Paris, I would like to refer to paragraph two of the first installment which reads: "Therefore, I here begin (with apologies to Equire Magazine) the first French reader . . . ."

If this is not an acknowledgement, I'll hire a hall and prostrate myself next time. As Miss Combes wrote: "we, the public are unread . . . ." Aside from the poor punctuation, she is also right—at least in her own case. I suggest the reading course offered by the university.

IFC Rush Report

The IFC

The Rush Committee of the IFC, after studying the preposed system of deferred rush, has come to the conclusion that deferred rush is impractical and would be very detrimental to the fraternity system for the following reasons:

1. Finances. Fraternities would not be able to bear the increased financial burden caused by the absence of a pledge class during the five-month deferment of rush. The same or increased amount of expenses would be shared by approximately one-third to one-fourth fewer people, thereby increasing the bill per member by one-third or one-fourth. Their extra expense caused by deferred rush would total between $100,000 and $150,000 for all fraternities. Included is the mortgage payment paid by many fraternities each month regardless of the number of members. The increased cost would prevent many boys from being able to join or remain in fraternities. The loan system would be an additional burden to be paid, and with the mortgage, extra extra expenses, parties, etc., fraternities would be hard pressed to make needed house improvements. Also any fraternities with needs or desires to build new houses or additions would be prevented from doing so because of the debt incurred by deferred rush. Fraternities reserve the right to take only the men they choose, not additional ones just to bolster the finances of the houses. A loan at any interest or time would still have to be paid back, causing additional financial burdens.

2. Dirty Rush. Since under our present early rush system there is less opportunity for dirty rush, the problem that deferred rush would definitely create in this area is not immediately conceivable. However, dirty rush would be impossible to curb in a five-month period with freshmen scattered over the campus as they are. Policing would be impossible. The effects of dirty rush would be detrimental to those houses refraining from it, and beneficial to those houses that engaged in it. Whether there were silence or not, dirty rush would still present an insurmountable problem. Dirty rush can be controlled under the present system, but is uncontrolled under deferred rush; thus a step back in self discipline. We who are in fraternities know that dirty rush would be rampant under a deferred rush system.

3. Loss of Fraternity Benefits.

a. Individual Orientation. A fraternity provides a freshman with friends and a "home away from home" that he could not otherwise have during the first semester. Older boys can help with advice on both fraternity life and school life. Through Big Brothers, which most fraternities have, a boy receives the benefit of an older boy's experience and learns to cope with some of the many problems that beset a boy away from home for the first time. One Big Brother has one Little Brother. Here is the opportunity for closer friendship and more personal help.

b. Grades. Fraternities have a good influence on grades, for the most part, through the Big Brothers, study halls, etc., of the pledge program. The fraternity gives a boy incentive to make his grades and enacts a program to help him. The fraternity realizes that a boy is no good to it unless he makes his grades, and thus works to help him. Those boys who do not make their grades probably can blame their own apathy, which is a problem all over the campus, and not their fraternity. A fraternity sometimes can help a boy make his grades who might not if left alone with no one to push him. Through faculty teas and guest speakers fraternities allow pledges personal contact with faculty members. Where rush is over in one week now, rushing over a five-month period, silent or not, would consume more time and would have a worse effect on grades. Study halls are compulsory only for those boys who need them.

Most boys are happy and satisfied with the fraternities that they choose to join. These benefit from being in fraternities socially and scholastically from the very first.

4. Weaker Pledge Training. The length of time a fraternity would have to acclimate its pledges would be cut to approximately two months, as grades would not be available of the first semester until the last of February, and pledges would have to be initiated in plenty of time to study for examinations. It would be impossible to carry pledges over the summer. The shortness of pledge training would not be enough time for the fraternity to enact a successful program. Two primary objectives of pledge training are developing unity and a feeling of brotherhood among the pledges. Also, in a short pledge training period more training would be concentrated in less time, and this would have an adverse effect on grades for both pledges and actives.

5. Pledging Is Voluntary. From fraternity interest cards it is clear that the majority of rushees have some knowledge of fraternities. Most boys are able to list two or three houses in which they are interested. These boys would be penalized by not being able to make friends and enjoy the benefits of a fraternity during the first semester. It is not fair to penalize the majority for the few who would possibly benefit by deferred rush. Most boys want to join fraternities as soon as possible.

a. All fraternities do have informal rush after formal rush, at which time it is possible for a fraternity to pledge a boy. There is no compulsion for a boy either to go through formal rush or to pledge at the end of formal rush. Pledging is voluntary. Those who prefer to wait may do so.

b. Plans are underway for establishing a short informal rush period at the beginning of the second semester to give both fraternities and boys a second look.

6. Housing. Fraternities house 640 boys at present, and with deferred rush dormitories would not get the relief from fraternities as now. Also, the flow out of fraternities into the dormitories for rush purposes would create a greater housing problem. This is not a major argument against deferred rush, but merely a point, in passing, well worth mentioning.

Covering The Campus

FREE BRIDGE LESSONS

The Special Events Committee is sponsoring free bridge lessons tonight at 7 o'clock in the Rendezvous Room.

ELECTIONS BOARD

There will be a meeting of the Elections Board this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Woodhouse Conference Room, second floor Graham Memorial.

ALPHA EPSILON DELTA

There will be an A. E. D., pre-medical and dental fraternity, meeting Thursday in Lenoir Hall at 6 p.m.

The meeting will feature a talk by Dr. William R. Straughn of the Department of Bacteriology in the School of Medicine.

PHARMACY WIVES

The Pharmacy Wives will meet Thursday at 8 p.m. at the Institute of Government. John B. Harris, state horticulturist from Raleigh, will speak on landscaping.

All Chapel Hillians interested in landscaping have been invited to attend.

Hostesses for the occasion will be Mrs. John David Hoval, Mrs. Robert M. Morris and Mrs. Thomas M. Yost.

SOUND AND FURY

Tryouts for this year's Sound and Fury productions, "Oh, Hellas," will be held today. Scripts for the productions may be checked out at the Information Desk in Graham Memorial.

The tryouts today will be from 3 to 6 p.m. and after 7:30 in Memorial Hall.

MEN'S ORIENTATION

Application blanks for men's orientation counselors for next fall are now available at the reserve reading room in the Library, the YMCA, Graham Memorial Information Desk and Lenoir Hall.

NAVAL INTERVIEWS

Persons interested in the Navy's officer candidate programs will have a chance to talk with representatives of the Raleigh Recruitment Office and the Naval Aviation Cadet Information Office who will visit the UNC campus.

Any young man or woman interested in serving as a commissioned officer in the U. S. Navy is invited to visit the information booth at the YMCA today and Thursday between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

WRC

Any rising junior or senior girl who is interested in running for chairman of Women's Residence Council andh as an overall "C" average is eligible.

Each girl must submit to the Elections Board a petition of 25 names plus her own. The petitions must be in the student government office in Graham Memorial by 7 p.m. March 23.

JONES

and their future," he concluded.

Jones said to accomplish the first objective of the paper, he would work toward a broader reportorial staff and seek out news from areas of the campus that now seem remote to everyone who doesn't actually live there.

"Local outlets like the dormitory and fraternity newspapers or "poop sheets" should be regularly checked over for news items and leads," he said.

"Student money, either in the form of fees or indirectly through advertising, pays for The Daily Tar Heels, and at the same time the students support Graham Memorial activities, Student Entertainment Committee programs, IDC, IFC, German Club and University Club dances and events," he explained to illustrate his second point.

"As for provoking thought, this is the job of the editorial writers and to some extent, feature writers. Members of all the 'generations' should be persuaded to write for the editorial page. There are many excellent student writers on this campus, and I will exert every effort to get them to contribute to the paper," he concluded.

Alpha Epsilon Delta Initiates 8 Tuesday

Eight Carolina students were initiated into the national pre-medical and pre-dental honorary society, Alpha Epsilon Delta, Tuesday night in ceremonies held in the clinical auditorium of the UNC Medical School.

AED candidates for membership are judged by their scholastic accomplishments, extra-curricular activities, social ability, character and interest in their chosen fields.

This semester's initiates are Edgar Gerome Hoecutt, Jasper Bert Perdue Jr., Angus MacLeon Duff, Floyd Telmadge Bryan, Artus Monroe Moser Jr., Joe Paul Hurt, William Brenisen Long and Chester Winfield Taylor.

Hoecutt, a sophomore from Chapel Hill, is a member of Phi Eta Sigma and the Order of the Grail and was awarded the Freshman Honor Award. Perdue is a junior from Louisburg, who is working for a B. S. degree in medicine.

Duff, a sophomore from Greenville, is a Morehead Scholar, vice president of APO, vice chairman of the University Party, a member of the Men's Honor Council, the Varsity baseball and soccer teams and a student in the superior sophomore program.

A sophomore from Ahoskie, Bryan is also a Morehead Scholar, active in the UP, and working for an A. B. in English literature. Moser, a candidate for an A.B. degree in English, is a junior from Swannanoa.

Hurt, a junior English literature major from Raleigh, is a member of Chi Psi social fraternity. He will work a year as student research assistant in the Pathology Department of the UNC Medical School before entering medical school.

Unanimously by Young Democrats

'B' Budget Is Endorsed

The B budget of the University of North Carolina was unaminously endorsed by the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Young Democratic Clubs Sunday.

The committee, meeting at the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham, endorsed the B budget after hearing Dewey Sheffield's talk on it.

Sheffield, a member of the committee, said, "to better the educational status of the University . . . we must increase and provide for adequate salaries for our instructors, especially due to the fact that they could receive much more money in private industry and they are under a financial burden with the present inadequate salaries . . ."

He also emphasized the need for an outstanding library and a new student union. "The present student union is grossly inadequate and . . . future enrollment will be substantially larger the present enrollment," he said.

Sheffield also spoke for a new coliseum for basketball games and other events drawing large crowds.

Young Names Managers

Young, though an SP member and officeholder, had received the endorsement of the University Party.

"This endorsement was granted," they said, "because of Young's pledge to keep the newspaper and its staff free from grubby political maneuvering."

The two managers added that this promise did not mean that Young would run a "gutless" editorial page. The promise meant, they said, that Young would be an editor, not a combination lobbyist and leading light for one of the campus' political parties.

"In order to do a proper job as editor, it is necesary to concentrate on immediate problems that affect the newpaper. There is not enough time in the day to huddle in all the smoke-filled rooms, attempting, among other things, to handpick a successor."

Tiffany and Shields also stated their belief that the present editor, Curtis Gans, would print an editorial page endorsement for the major candidates of his choice.

"Nobody," they said, "will dispute the editor's 'right' to do this. We are simply saying that when next year's election rolls around, Young will act differently. He will make no endorsements on his editorial page, and he will not attempt to handpick a successor."

Faculty Fraternity Report Soon Due

The Faculty Committee on Fraternities is expected to report their findings on deferred rush, housing, discrimatory clauses and scholarship next Monday.

Newman Club Convention Is Here

Some 200 students from 27 colleges and universities in North Carolina and Virginia will come here April 3-5 for the fifth annual convention of the Piedmont Province of the National Newman Club Federation.

The Newman Club movement, which began in 1893 at the University of Pennsylvania, includes 670 participating clubs for Catholic students at secular institutions of higher learning.

Tate M. Robertson, president of the UNC Newman Club, has announced details for the convention which will open Friday, April 3, with registration and social program in Graham Memorial.

Keynote speaker will be the province chaplain, the Rev. Thomas J. Walsh of Norfolk, Va., who will speak at the first plenary session Saturday morning, April 4.

The Very Rev. Michael P. Walsh, S. J., president of Boston College, will give a public lecture on "The Catholic Church and Evolution" at 2 p.m. April 4 in Carrol Hall. Father Walsh is a noted Jesuit biologist.

Two other convention speakers will be the Most Rev. Paul J. Hallinan, D. D., Bishop of Charleston, S. C.; and the Rt. Rev. Msgr. George E. Lynch, J. C. D, Chancellor, Diocese of Raleigh

Election of new officers, a banquet and a dance are other events to be included in the convention program.

This meeting was originally scheduled for March 16 but postponed until March 23.

George Esser, assistant director of the Institute of Government, heads the committee which has subcommittees studying each of the four topics.

Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs, said new fraternities probably will not come on campus until some of the present fraternities are" more stable."

However, Magill expects several more fraternities by 1962. "Part of the long-range planning calls for about 11 more social fraternities and three or four sororities by 1970," he reported.

Delta Upsilon, the newest fraternity, came on campus in 1953.

Officer Slate Of U. S. Navy Is Explained

Representatives from the Office of Naval Officer Procurement in Raleigh will be on campus today and Thursday to explain the Navy's commissioned officer programs to interested personnel. Interviews will be conducted in the Y Building.

Openings are available for assignment in aviation, general line and in specialty categories. Most of the programs are open only to the college seniors who expect to graduate; however, undergraduates who have completed 60 semester hours of accredited college work may apply for appointment as a Naval aviation cadet.

To avoid delay in being ordered to active duty after graduation, applications may be processed several months prior to attaining the required academic qualifications. Final acceptance will depend upon the successful completion of these qualifications.

Any candidate who meets the required standards may take the qualification test and make application with the visiting Navy Procurement Team if he desires. Those who take the qualification tests or who make application and subsequently change their mind are not obligated in any way.

'Beatniks' To Be Topic Of Fleishmann

The "Beat Generation" will be the subject under fire when Dr. Bernard Fleischmann of the English Dept. speaks Thursday in Graham Memorial.

The Current Affairs Committee of GMAB headed by Jerry Stokes is sponsoring this discussion at 8 p.m. in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial. Literary, rather than sociological, aspects of the beat generation will be discussed with special emphasis on the generation's authors and their works.

Dr. Fleischmann is editor of the yearbook of General and Comparative Literature, an international publication of scholarly literature.

Feature writer for the Carolina Quarterly, Fleischmann corresponds with Ginsberg and Gregory Korso, Beat Generation authors, and is now translating poems of Ginsberg into German.

On Campus with Max Shulman
(By the Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and, "Barefoot Boy with Cheek.")

THE TRUE AND TYPICAL CASE OF CHATSWORTH OSCEOLA

You all know, of course, that every engineering senior is receiving fabulous offers from dozens of corporations, but do you know just how fabulous these offers are? Do you have any idea how widely the corporations are competing? Let me cite for you the true and typical case of Chatsworth Osceola, a true and typical senior.

Chatsworth, walking across the M.I.T. campus one day last week, was hailed by a man sitting in a yellow convertible studded with precious gem stones. "Hello," said the man, "I am Norwaik T. Sigafoos of the Sigafoos Bearing and Bushing Company. Do you like this car?"

"Yeah, hey," said Chatsworth.

"It's yours," said Sigafoos.

"Thanks, hey," said Chatsworth.

"Do you like Philip Morris?" said Sigafoos.

"Of corris," said Chatsworth.

"Here is a pack," said Sigafoos. "And a new pack will be delivered to you at twelve-minute intervals every day as long as you shall live."

"Thanks, hey," said Chatsworth.

"Does your wife like Philip Morris?" said Sigafoos.

"She would," said Chatsworth, "but I'm not married."

"Do you want to be?" said Sigafoos.

"What American boy doesn't?" said Chatsworth.

Sigafoos pressed a button on the dashboard of his convertible and the trunk opened up and out came a nubile maiden with golden hair, flawless features, a perfect disposition, and the appendix already removed. "This is Laurel Geduldig," said Sigafoos. "Would you like to marry her?"

"Is her appendix out?" said Chatsworth.

"Yes," said Sigafoos.

"Okay, hey," said Chatsworth.

"Congratulations," said Sigafoos. "And for the happy bride, a pack of Philip Morris every twelve minutes for the rest of her life."

"Thanks, hey," said Laurel.

"Now then," said Sigafoos to Chatsworth, "let's get down to business. My company will start you at $45,000 a year. You will retire at full salary upon reaching the age of 26. When you start work, we will give you a three-story house made of bullion, complete with a French Provincial swimming pool. We will provide sitter service for all your children until they are safely through puberty. We will keep your teeth in good repair, and also the teeth of your wife and children unto the third generation. We will send your dentist a pack of Philip Morris every twelve minutes as long as he shall live . . . Now, son, I want you to think carefully about this offer. Meanwhile, here is ten thousand dollars in small, unmarked bills, which places you under no obligation whatsoever."

"It certainly seems like a fair offer," said Chatsworth. "But there is something you should know. I am not an engineer. In fact, I don't go to M.I.T. at all. I am a poetry major at Harvard. I just came over here on a bird walk."

"Oh," said Sigafoos.

"I guess I don't get to keep the money and the convertible and Laurel now, do I?" said Chatsworth.

"Of course you do," said Sigafoos. "And if you'd like the job, my offer still stands." © 1959, Max Shulman

Footballers Prep For Annual Blue-White Game

Scrap Set For 2 This Saturday In Kenan

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's football Tar Heels are busily preparing for this Saturday's traditional intra-squad battle, the Blue-White spring football game.

Numerous injuries have sidelined a number of stars and several proven players will not see action Saturday.

There should be plenty of offensive fireworks to greet football fans who want a preview of next year's Tar Heels Coach Jim Tatum has announced still another new type offense - the "swinging end."

The swinging end, as Tatum explains it, will be much like Army's now-famous "lonesome end." Like the lonesome end, the swinging end will not go into the huddle. The main variation will be that the end will play both sides whereas the lonesome end was always stationed on the same side.

Three Stars Injured

Jack Cummings, Al Goldstein, and John Schroeder are the three biggest stars who will miss the Blue-White game. Cummings is doing everything but contact work after recovering from jaundice but doctors feel he should avoid heavy work until next fall.

Both Goldstein and Schroeder have knee injuries. A recent operation on Schroeder was termed a success and he is working out lightly, but will see no action Saturday. Goldstein's leg is in a cast and will be for a long while. Tatum said Goldstein would be ready to go next fall if he rebuilds the leg this summer.

All three of the stars should be in action next fall barring unforeseen complications.

Other injuries find frosh quarterback Ward Marslander out with a broken finger, George Knox missing because of a pulled muscle, and halfback Larry Frederick out of action due to a dislocated collarbone.

Promising Sophs

Switching the scene, Tatum pointed out his most promising sophomores, and there were plenty of them. Jack Tillery, a guard, will "play some ball next year." Laughlin and Taylor look like two fine prospects but may be held out.

Dan Sofranko, ineligible last year, looks like he'll play some ball. Jim Shumate is back at guard and both Ron Crabtree and Ben Gallagher have a chance at tackle.

Two sub ends from last season, Jim Rice and Mike Greenday, have looked very good.

Three backs from last year's squad have been switched, to end. Rabe Walton, Conrad Sloop and Charley Davis have all made the move, apparently with success.

Joe Davies and George Knox top the list of newcomers at the fullback slot. Gene Shuford and Gil Carson, two rising sophs, have been looking good at halfback.

Tatum said that he expected to cut his squad to around 66 by next fall, but right now there are eight full teams in operation.

When asked whether he expected an offensive or defensive show this Saturday, Tatum replied that probably the offense will shine a little brighter. While he said that he liked for the defense to look better, he explained that defense rarely looks good in a spring game because it has to be highly specialized.

As last year, there will be a scrimmage after the regular length Blue-White game to enable those players who missed the action to mix it a little.

Tatum commented, "This is the first spring practice since I've been back we've really been able to select the team and have competition that is beneficial to the boys."

Here are the Blue-White lineups as of now:

WHITE - Ends: Rogers and Davis, Tackles: Bardy and Crabtree, Guards: Frank Riggs and Hokanson, Center: LeCompte, Quarterback: Ray Farris, Halfback: Lenny Beck and Nelson Lowe, Fullback: Joe Davies.

Kick-off time is set for 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon in Kenan Stadium.

Baseball Team Set For 24-Game Spring Slate

Carolina's varsity baseball squad will play a total of 24 games this spring. 17 of them will be against conference teams but three of those won't count in the standings.

The outstanding out of state teams will be Dartmouth, Connecticut, and Ithaca. The team travels to sunny Florida March 26 for the Florida State Invitational Tournament at Tallahassee.

The season opens here this Monday when Dartmouth invades Emerson Stadium in the season lid-lifter.

Coaches Predict

LOUISVLLE, Ky — (AP) — Each of the four coaches whose teams will participate in the NCAA basketball championships this weekend made these predictions Tuesday:

1. My team will not win.

2. I don't think my team will lose, either.

Coaches of West Virginia, Cincinnati, California and the University of Louisville were the subjects of an electronic press interview over a four-way telehpone hookup. It originated from the site of the tournament, Freedom Hall.

Actually, in the coaches predictions of the tournament winner, it was Louisville 2-1.

Coach George Smith of Cincinnati and Freddie Schaus of West Virginia predicted Louisville would win because of its home floor advantage.

Coach Pete Newell of California and Peck Hickman of Louisville picked their first round opponents, Cincinnati and West Virginia.

All except California's Newell complained of a lack of scouting reports on their opponents, and without exception, the coaches had nothing but praise for the teams they face.

Friday night's schedule has the University of Louisville meeting West Virginia at 7:30 p.m., CST, and Cincinnati playing California at 9:30 p.m.

West Virginia's Schaus said his team is "apprehensive" because of Louisville's spectacular performance in the Mid-East regional tournament.

"When you beat the University of Kentucky and Michigan State on successive nights, you've got to have a fine team," Schaus said.

Murals Teams Past Halfway Mark In Team Point Race

Now that the sporting activities for the Intramural Department are a little past the half way mark, the race for the point championship is headed into the home stretch.

In the fraternity white division SAE is on top closely followed by DKE, Sig Nu, Zeta Psi and Chi Psi. SAE also leads the fraternity blue division, and in that division they are followed by DKE, Phi Delt, Beta and Sigma Nu in that order. The top five for the dormitiry division are Joyner, Cobb, Avery, Ruffin, and Winston in that order. In the grad division the lineup is Law Sch, Med Sch, Dent Sch, Peacocks, Grad Hist, and City Planning. Although most of the teams now hold a commanding lead, it does not mean that they can not be overtaken.

Last year's champs were Zeta Psi, fraternity blue; DKE, fraternity white; Cobb, dormitory, and Med Sch in the grad division.

The remaining sports for this year are badminton, tennis, horseshoes, track and softball.

The point system divides the sports into three groups. In the major group is tag football, basketball and softball. In the intermediate group is wrestling, volleyball, tennis and track. In the last group called the minor group is table tennis, horseshoes, badminton and handball. Each group has different numbers for the different places.

High School Baseball Clinic To Be Conducted Here April 4

The first annual high school baseball clinic, with the University of North Carolina as host, will be held in Emerson Stadium here Saturday, Apirl 4.

Carolina coach Walter Rabb, who inaugurated the event to promote baseball on the high school level, looking later to college participation, said the response to mail invitations to attend had been highly gratifying. So far there have been 26 acceptances of high school teams.

In his letter to the schools, Rabb said: "Our objectives are to generate interest in both high school and college baseball in the state; to become better acquainted with the high school coaches, their squads, and their problems; and to discuss and demonstrate various aspects of the game for the benefit of all concerned.

The invitations went to both coaches and schools.

In addition to Rabb, other instructors will be UNC assistant coach Harry Lee Lloyd, freshman coach Pat Earey, and Professor Henry House, who for many years was on the coaching staff here. All are widely experienced in both coaching and playing. UNC players will be used in demonstrations.

Tentative plans call for four sessions, the first beginning at 10 a.m. Afternoon sessions will begin at 1:30 o'clock and last until 3:30.

Among the phases of baseball to be taken up in the clinic are pitching and catching, baserunning and sliding, infield and outfield techniques, hitting and bunting, and play situations.

WEIL LECTURE

French Citizen Revives

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Alienation of the laborers which caused the growth of the Communist Party has been the greatest hardship in France, according to Prof. Denis W. Brogan.

Prfo. Brogan stated the case of "Citizenship in France" in his second lecture in the series on "Responsibilities of Citizenship" sponsored by the Weil Lectures.

He said that the French laborers had been denied to organize into trade unions or to strike since the time of Napoleon to the present. The state was hostile to any sort of labor movements.

This alienization caused the growth of the Communist Party in France, and it has just recently begun to decline because "France is the most rapidly growing economy in Europe," Brogan said.

France is going through an economic transformation, thus causing the new state to react to working and social conditions of the citizens.

Another reason that Brogan gave for the decline of Communism is the growing number of French youth who "want things they see in movies."

Not only did he emphasize the growth of industry, ("France has more cars than any other country in Europe") but he also emphasized the new scientific movement in agriculture.

The noted British political scientist said the French farmer was over represented in government. In a system similar to the American farm price support "the farmer is paid more by the state than the value of the crop he grows."

Although he recognized the threat of Communism as trying to create a state within a state, he also gave credit to the Communist Party as a means of teaching citizen responsibility in 1959. The Catholic church, and "in a small way" the Lutheran church, also has produced more individuals.

Through the decentralization of the government in 1959, the citizens have take on more responsibility. He said that things done locally are better for the citizens than the same done by the state.

Publications Board Revision Introduced

By DEE DANIELS

A revision of by-laws of the Publications Board will be among the bills presented to Student Legislature tonight.

A bill calling for the revision, which was introduced in the last Legislature session by Harold O'Tuel (SP), was passed out favorably by the Ways and Means Committee of the Legislature Wednesday.

The bill was formulated after extensive study by a President's Committee on the Publications Board set-up.

Concerning his bill, O'Tuel said yesterday, "With the passage of this bill, present and future publication problems will be minimized. It will affect formalization policy and procedure which will be beneficial to publications in the future."

Charlie Gray (UP), who worked on the revision committee, said, "The Publications Board has shown definite need for some revision. This committee worked hard and long on the problems facing the Publications Board. I think the bill that came out of this committee clarifies and strengthens in many ways the real duties of the Publications Board."

Don Furtado, student body president, expressed the feeling that the bill "will provide an answer to many of the various problems which have arisen in the financial, organizational and administrative elements of the student publications. It clarifies and sets down many previous traditions and alters others with the view in mind of preparing a document which will provide the needed continuity of operation from year to year."

Student Party Chairman John Brooks said Tuesday, "I think it's (the bill) an excellent job; one of the most commendable pieces of work that has been carried on in Legislature this year. Mr. O'Tuel is to be congratulated. This is the result of many hours or work. The faculty advisers to the Publications Board gave many hours and made a significant contribution. It is one of the most outstanding projects Student Government has carried out this year."

No Ultimatum On Berlin: Red Leader

LONDON — (AP) — Mikail Suslov, a top Kremlin leader, told British Labor Party leaders Wednesday Moscow has presented no ultimatum over Berlin and wants to settle the issue in East-West conferences.

Suslov addressed labor members of Parliament at a meeting in a private room of the House of Commons. His remarks were reported later by people who attended.

Suslov, secretary of the central committee of the Soviet Communist Party, was quoted as saying:

SAE-Avery copped the second annual Grail-Mural Jamboree last night in Woollen Gym as 22 teams representing 44 campus organizations competed for steaks and trophies in the two-day event.

Finishing second and third, respectively, in the co-sponsored event were Beta-Winston-1 and Phi Gam-2—Cobb-1.

Coach Walter Rabb, director of Intramurals, expressed the opinion that the event "contributed to a greater degree of acquaintanceship and sportsmanship between dorms and fraternities, thus realizing a primary goal of the Jamboree."

"In providing an opportunity for 400 of the campus' best athletes to compete together, the event was highly successful," Grail-Mural Chairman Paul Woodard said.

Ringing up a total of 139 points, the SAE-Avery team won convincingly; winning both swimming events and reaching the finals in handball, and badminton and placing high in other events.

The swim events, an innovation this year, were "successful and well worth including in future Jamboree plans," Woodard said. Eight events, plus relays comprised the two-day event.

Relay winners were in order of finish; Pika-Lewis, Sigma-Nu-Stacy, Phi Gam-Cobb-2; SAE-Avery; Winston-Beta; and Chi-Phi-Parker.

Individual winners were:

Handball: Beta-Winston (Hunnicutt and Griffith)

Badminton: TEP-Cobb-2 (Vinnik and Henderson)

Table Tennis: Theta Chi-Law School (Fasul and Summey)

Half-Court Basketball: (Chi Phi-Parker (Sabiston and Rattay, Beck and Mauldin)

Archery: Phi Gam-1-Alexander-1 (Dunn and Ferrell)

Swimming: (200 yd. freestyle and 150 yd. medley) SAE-Avery (Wellons, Henderson, Bordogna, Craighill, and Perry Henderson)

Foul Shooting: Chi Psi-Joyner-1 (Craver and Daughtry)

Committee Postpones Pay Bill

The Student Dining Hall Committee's bill to have the student employes of Lenoir Hall and the Pine Room paid with cash has been tabled by the Ways and Means Committee of Student Legislature until April 15.

After much discussion as to the possible systems of paying the students and the question of whether or not the poll taken among the employes actually revealed their feelings, a suggestion made by Ben Johnson, student supervisor, that the bill be tabled was passed.

Johnson gave as his reason efforts on the part of the administration of Lenoir to check into the possibilities of making changes in current procedures. These changes would have to be cleared by the Student Aid Office here and in Raleigh by the state.

Hobart T. Steele, Jr., Chairman o fthe Committee spoke on its behalf and Jerry Patrick spoke on behalf of the student employees who want cash payment.

Gray Lists Qualifications For Office

Charlie Gray, UP candidate for president of the student body, listed some of his "qualifications" for that office in a statement released Wednesday.

Gray said, "Since it is almost impossible to reach the entire campus, I would like to tell why I think I will be able to meet the necessary qualifications for president of the student body."

The president should be a progressive leader who, at the same time, realizes the responsibility he has to the campus, Gray commented. To be a progressive leader, the UP candidate thinks the student body president should have a "realistic" understanding of all segments of campus life.

Experience in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government is also essential, Gray said.

Speaking of his own experience, Gray said he had worked in the three branches of student government, as well as having gained an understanding of the entire campus through living in a dormitory and fraternity.

Gray said his executive experience has included membership on the President's Cabinet and Chancellor's Cabinet. His major work in this area, he indicated, has been his work as treasurer on the student body this year.

Commenting on his position as treasurer, Gray said, "I believe an understanding of finances is almost a prerequisite for any student body president."

In the legislative branch of student government, Gray's experience has been assistant floor leader and floor leader in Legislature and a member of various Legislature committees.

His judicial experience has included work on the changes recently made in the Carolina judicial system.

Gray said students should cast

Joint Appropriations Comm. Hears Friday Ask Full Budget

W. D. Carmichael, Aycock Ask Hikes

Vice-President and Finance Officer William D. Carmichael told the Joint Appropriations Committee of the General Assembly in Raleigh that there were 43 faculty members of the Consolidated University who had offers in their pockets for higher pay to other institutions.

Carmichael added as part of the two hour Consolidated University presentation in Raleigh yesterday that unless money for faculty salaries was secured these and many more faculty members would leave the University.

Carmichael pointed out that this was prior to "open season" on faculty members, and once open season started other Universities were likely to bag plenty of game.

He explained further by saying that it was true that when Universities go shopping for professors, they look for the best not the mediocre.

Chancellor William B. Aycock of the University at Chapel Hill told the committee that the University might have to freeze graduate enrollment if sufficient funds were not offered to keep up the faculty-student ratio.

He explained that graduate teaching was the most costly and that this was what brought forward new teachers to fill the gaps all over the nation.

Aycock pointed out that the state could not afford to sacrifice quality for quantity, and that it would have to provide the quality to match the growth of the University.

Aycock pointed out that there was a discrepancy between the Advisory Budget Commission's figures on full time teachers and the actual figures, and explained that the ratio was considerably higher than the Commissions recommendations.

The meeting of the committee was packed as a large mountain contingent of State College alumni and a large group of girls from Woman's College were on hand to give their Chancellors' support.

By NEIL MURPHY

President William C. Friday argued the Consolidated University's case for the reinstatemet of the budget Wednesday before a packed session of the Joint Appropriations Committee in Raleigh.

He climaxed a series of appearances to various committees related to the budget with the statement that the requests contained "items and amounts considered very essential for the approaching biennium."

Friday presented a strongly worded plea for the proposed student union at Chapel Hill.

"The student union requested for the University at Chapel Hill is vitaly needed. Our experience with the facilities provided by the state at Woman's College and State College clearly demonstrates the need and importance of a student union to the total educational experience for our students. We strongly urge your approval of this request as a great forward step in student welfare at the University," Friday told legislators.

A second point emphasized by the president was the request for additional teaching positions in the "A" budget. Before he introduced the three chancellors of the Consolidated University, Friday said, "The Advisory Budget Committion recommended 54 of the 135 additional teachers the University requested under this 'A' budget formula. This reduction was based on the commission's decision to increase the ratio of the number of students per teacher at each of our three institutions."

He explained, "Since additional faculty members to teach more students represent the big item in the 'A' budget, it was necessary to reach some understanding on the enrollment projections for our institutions . . . The University administration, acting on this agreement (of increases in enrollment) reached with the Board of Higher Education and the budget officials, then determined the number of new teachers we should ask for in the 'A' budget in accordance with the formula we provided . . .

"Almost every faculty member does some teaching and some research, and many perform duties in administrative work and service to the people of the state . . . We did not identify the extent to which the faculty member was engaged in teaching, research or service activity. The result, for which we assume our share of responsibility, has made it appear that the University has fewer students for each teacher than is actually the case."

The Joint Appropriations Committee was told that "higher education depends on strong public schools" and "there is no conflict of interests here for each of us is a part of the whole effort" of education in North Carolina.

Friday said that he felt that he spoke for all state-supported institutions of higher learning in urging greater support for the public schools.

"Excellence of teaching, research and the distinction and competence of our faculty members" were cited as reasons for UN'S international reputation .

On the preparation of the budget, Friday said that "we were obliged to omit or reduce some requests for the maintenance and operation of our institutions that were submitted to us, valid and meritorious as we thought them to be. Our requests in their final form contained only those items and amounts considered very essential for the approaching biennium."

"Insofar as our 'A' budgets are concerned, it comes down to this: if the University is to continue its present programs of teaching and research at their present levels of quality, and if we are to teach the increasing positions requested under the 'A" budget must be provided.

"If this not done, the effect of such a decision will be to increase an already heavy work load for our faculty members and to decrease the vitally essential research activities of the University faculties."

Friday stated that increased research at the University was of vital importance to the Research Triangle.

"Increased appropriations for the improvement of faculty salaries is the most urgent item in our 'B' budget," Friday asserted. Vice President William Carmichael then

Norman Smith Discusses Dorm Life

Student Party candidate Norman B. Smith seeking the office of Student Body President stated yesterday:

"Having been a dormitory resident for the past two and a half years and have represented Dorm Men's Five in Student Legislature this past year, I have become increasingly aware of a multitude of problems which face dormitory residents. I have done a lot of thinking about dorms an their problems, and I believe that there are many constructive things that can be done and I pledge that many of these things will be instituted if I am elected.

"Although there are social facilities now existing in every dormitory, there is much demand, and legitimate demand it is, to enlarge and enrich the social facilities program. One of the finest suggestions I have received is from Doug Baliff, the SP co-ordinator for Mangum Dormitory. His idea, which he has been working on for some time, is to remodel the basement of one of the dormitories in the Upper Quad and make it into a real party room where residents of the nearby dormitories could bring dates on weekends.

"He would suggest game facilities, a juke box, and other innovation which would make it much more than just a "social room". This sort of thing can be done in several locations on campus for dormitory residents. All we need is interest and willingness to work.

'Freedom Not Free' Says Tally In Y Series

The treasurer of Kiwanis International told a UNC student group Wednesday night that America faces challenges from all sides because her citizens have not accepted freedom's responsibilities along with its privileges.

J. O. Tally Jr., past governor of N. C. Kiwanians and former mayor of Fayetteville, gave the third in a YMCA-YWCA series on the "Challenges of 1959."

"Freedom is not free," Tally emphasized. "The challenge to freedom is present and mortal today because we have failed to respond to the challenge of freedom."

American citizens "no longer have a wide acceptance of our individual resposibility for the conduct of public affairs," the civic leader said. "We stumble from crisis to crisis in a daze. We have doped ourselves by duping ourselves."

Tally said America's freedom is "mortally challenged" on the military, economic, educational, political, and spiritual levels.

Discussing the U. S. "stymied" military situation, Tally criticized the Eisenhower administration for reducing the defense budget and asserted that "it has wasted most of the billions we have spent on so-called defense."

"History will not honor, or even remember, presidents and state leaders whose highest goal was balancing budgets — particularly by balancing them down by cutting vital services and refusing to raise taxes instead of balancing them up by raising taxes and vital services," he said.

Urging replacement of ailing Secretary of State Dulles, Tally called for "positive leadership."

America's lack of initiative and of sufficient support for foreign aid and trade has facilitated Russia's economic penetration into the world's undeveloped and underdeveloped areas, Tally added.

A member of the Fayetteville law firm of Tall, Tally and Taylor, he is past president of the N. C. League of Municipalities, past president of the Duke Law Alumni Ass., and past president of the Harvard Club of North Carolina. Tally has also headed the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce and was an officer of the North Carolina Bar Assn.

CANDIDATES — New officers for the YWCA will be elected today in the coed residences. Candidates for the offices are, left to right, Julie Redhead, for program chairman; Linda Rehm and Lou Johnson, for membership chairman; Harriette Dwelle, for recording secretary; Maxine Lee and Nan Robinson, for vice president; Margaret Ray, for executive secretary; Mary Sue Hannah and Nancy Smathers, for treasurer; Sophie Martin, for president, and Leslie Sevier, for recording secretary. Lenoir Hall

In the joint appropriations hearing yesterday, Rep. Kizer brought out the fact that the University budgeted $10,000 profits for Lenoir Hall for the biennium, an establishment that is supposed to be non-profit.

Vice-President William Carmichael pointed out with certain justification that it is better to operate at a small profit rather than at a small loss, but the case is clear that Lenoir Hall can afford to pay its workers in cash at the same rate, 75c an hour, as it pays them in meal tickets.

Moreover, a large group of Lenoir Hall workers have been scared by the thought of taxation on their salaries, and this fear is mostly groundless, for it is only if the earnings of a student are over $600 is he subject to taxation and at that point he is subject to the lowest possible rate. In other words, even if witholding tax were taken out of a students's wages, he would be entitled to a refund, if his sum total wages were less than $600. If he earned more than $600, a student can still declare himself as a dependent and is entitled to a tax reduction.

There is a certain group of students in Lenoir Hall who might not profit by being paid in cash. These are those who work for an hour and a half and get paid the same as those who work for two hours, but if they had the opportunity, they too might find that even with hourly wages, they would have greater freedom and mobility with their cash, and that which is seemingly less money would bring them more.

For all other workers, the issue is no issue. They stand to gain at least twice as much as they stand to lose. They stand to be able to have money to spend on other items than food, as well as being able to have their meals paid for them. They stand to have more just recompense for their labors.

It is important to make clear that it is high time the University established a policy with respect to self-help jobs in which a 75c an hour wage minimum is placed on all University sponsored jobs. Any less is discouraging the purpose of self-help jobs. This purpose is namely to enable the student to make his way through college by working rather than working so much for enough to get through college so that he will not make his way through his academic work.

A good place to start would be Lenoir. They can afford it, and if they can, it should be done.

Publications Board

There is a measure before the Student Legislature to revise the structure of the Publications Board. Much of this measure is sound, while a few parts remain to be quarreled with.

The basic quarrel is the heavy preponderance of non-publications people on a board whose singular interest is publications. The idea of publications having their only voting strength in half-votes rubs one the wrong way, for it may create a situation where three non-publication members decide to call a meeting and then legislate, for there is no provision for a quorum.

Secondly, the editor of the Yackety-Yack, however unimportant in the minds of the average voter, should continue to be an elective office because of the vested interest of over $25,000 of student money. Indeed, this is the only way that the students have some say in how this amount of money is to be distributed is through their own ballot, and without this ballot the money goes unrepresented.

A good feature of the bill is the feature calling for a monthly report of the editors and business managers of the various publications, and the provision for keeping records, something that has been lacking in the past.

Segregation: Some Myths Exploded

P. W. Carlton

I watched the little colored boys go by, chattering and gesticulating in the innocent mannerisms of youth. They were happy and artless in their gestures. The sparkling of their eyes made the negroid facial features almost unnoticable, the happiness in their voices obliterated their heavy accents. For a long moment they were, to me, just people, just happy children enjoying the afternoon sun and gazing into the store windows as children have done since time immemorial. They prattled gaily about the contents of the stores, about the school activities of the day, about supper and mother. I listened intently to their conversation, drinking in the rapture of youth and almost identifying myself with their rose-tinted world. I remembered doing the same things myself not too many years ago. A glow entered my conscieusness.

They turned to go, shuffling away, and I suddenly remembered my place as a southerner, I realized that they were different, that they were black and I white, which made me better than them. They were the lower class upon which I must cast a pious and supercilious glance, to whom I must speak condescendingly or at least patronizingly.

I noticed that their clothing was a bit frayed, with more than the usual accumulation of dirt upon them. Their ridiculous hats were last year's ivy league model, soiled and faded with use. One of them wore a pair of shoes which were completely worn out, so that his toes and the top part of his right foot showed through the broken leather.

And somehow I couldn't feel the expected southern Caucasian revulsion toward these children. On examing my emotions I found only a deep sadness at the injustice of it all and a fatalistic realization that this same sort of problem had been facing man since the Lord confused man's speech at Babel. I felt a strong sense of pity for these small members of a minority group, ostracized by circumstance.

Certainly, one could not say that these children purposely chose to be born dark and in poverty-stricken homes. That their parents should be illiterate and poorly prepared to make a living. Somehow in the greta infinity of Being, some wound up with white faces and they with brown. Others got yellow and some reddish tints but all have the same unconquerable soul.

Bitterness came as I realized that undoubtedly the very people who supported this ostracization were the ones who deplored the oppression of the Jews by their tax-masters, burnin[illegible] persecution of Protestant dissenters by the Roman Catholic church, the wholesale slaughter of the American Indian, and prohibition.

There wasn"t any point in becoming angry, because it seemed the inevitable situation. Man's nature has always been to stomp on the low man on the totem pole. It did seem unfair, in fact monstrous, that these innocent children, should be subjected to a lowered standard of living, social exclusion, and limited opportunity simply because they had the misfortune to be Negro.

One of the most grotesque points is that I knew for certain that ministers of many religions were preaching love and brotherhood from the pulpit on Sunday morning, then fighting integrated schools and legislation for equality of opportunity in the business world during the week. I wondered if segregationalists ever really stop to examine their motives — what it is that is driving them on in their madness, making them say and do things that are completely foreign to their sense of honor and decency, contrary to the principles of justice and honesty that Americans have dide for in six major conflicts and a small internal distrubance which cropped up in 1861.

Principle, yes, there is the key point in attitude toward segregation. It's not whether a person has more melanin in his skin than another, and whether one feels a revulsion or aversion to a person or group, but rather, whether one is prepared to stand for the premises upon which this country and yes, even the Christian church is founded. It's' that simple. One either identifies himself with the American way or else sides with oppression and terrorism.

Someone must, of course raise the question of segregation and religion, backing his claims for segregation with scripture. Well he hasn't got a prayer, as is obvious to any thinking person. It is said that even the Devil can quote scripture. There are just too many possible interpretations for one to retire into biblical snobbery and injustice. Wild-eyed biblical theorists and religious fanatics are fast losing their power to stir men's souls. Educated people are awakening. Only the ignorant and the old and staid cling to the shreds of their rosy fantasy of white omnipotence. As citizens and honest people, we have an obligation to raise people to a standard of living comparable to our own. Much money is spent each year in an attempt to relieve suffering in other countries. It certainly does seem silly to do this when there is deprivation and ignorance in America, right before southern eyes. "Charity begins at home" may be appropos at this point and Americans have no right to rest at night while even one little Negro child goes to bed hungry or shivers because there is no fuel for the fire. And, what is even more important than these physical considerations, every one of them deserves the chance to utilize American educational facilities, to rise from intellectual death to life in education, to taste the enlihgtenment and broad vistas of intellectual insight. These things are of vital importance, and it is criminal to deprive anyone of the opportunity to attain at least some of them in a lifetime.

Inevitably, some reader wil arise in pseudo-pious indignation and write a scathing denunciation of the "nigger lover" who launched this attack upon his bigotry and dishonesty. Fortunately, most of us will realize that this excoriation stems from a sense of guilt rather than righteous indignation from insecurity and fear. The segregationalist is probably intelligent enough to realize that he's no longer regarded as a glorious crusader in a noble cause, out as a narrow, misinformed individual. He's really quite a pathetic figure, clinging to his myth and stubbornly refusing to admit the truth—the truth that he and his father and his grandfather have all done the wrong thing in oppressing the Negro.

Thank goodness North Carolina is progressive and is peopled for the most part with citizens who recognize their responsibility to Man, white and black alike, and who will see to it that all are eventually granted their rightful place of equality in all aspects of living.

"Surely You've Heard Of Supply-And-Demand"

Men Who Amaze And Amuse Us

Gail Godwin

Almost all women experience a slight quickening of the pulse at the mention of such names as Lord Byron, Clark Gable, Maurice Chevalier, and the Don Juans of Moliere, Shaw, Tirso de Molina, and Mozart.

These gentlemen, real and fictitious, have been a tremendou success with women throughout their lives duc to some intangible, indescribable and irresistable "quality" which exudes from their being as naturally as an oil well gushes wealth.

This "quality" is not linked with age (Chevalier is a joyous and mischievious seventy; Gable is mellowing into a delightful combination of well-placed wrinkles and gray-haired dignity); and it is not altogether bound up with physical perfection (Lord Byron had foot trouble and was also reluctant to 'turn the other cheek'); perhaps the very essence of this "quality" is its elusivenes, its refusal to be captured upon a printed page or by a descriptive tongue.

And yet, do we not always recognize the lucky possessor of this enchanting characteristic? Does a woman ever fail to take notice of him when he enters a room, a store, a train, a restaurant? Can he succeed in hiding himself behind a sober mask, a professional costume, a uniform which is worn by thousands of other men?

No, the woman does not ever fail to take notice of him; and no, he cannot disguise his fatal attraction. If this is so, then there must be some outward evidences of his identity as "a man who amazes and amuses" all women who are drawn, or who wander, into his orbit.

What are the evidences? All the eager males who have been diligently studying their ESQUIRES, scrutinizing their reflections in the windows of haberdasheries, consulting their scantily filled datebooks, suddenly look attentive. Tell us, tell us the secret, they demand, so that we can go out and buy it and wrap it up and take it home and put it on.

Unfortunately, Julian isn't carrying it this season, even though he may be able to improve on those who already have "it;" It cannot be ordered from Brooks Brothers, and as yet no manual or do it yourself kit has been released on it.

To join the many past, present and future unsuccesful describers of the undescribable, let us conclude by saying that it seems to us that the man who has it is usually proud of something—whether it be his taste, his career, or his intelligence—and when he stops to notice us, we have that instinctive knowledge that he is ours for a moment and ours alone; but that he can never be ours for keeps.

As Queen Victoria said of her favorite statesman, Disraeli, whom she infinitely preferred over the sober Gladstone:

"Mr. Disraeli speaks to me as though I were a woman . . . Mr. Gladstone speaks to me as though I were a public meeting."

Both men had great things on their minds; only one knew how to pause and give himself—for an instant—to a woman.

The Phi Assembly, in selecting a topic for its Tuesday evening discussion, hit upon a problem which is definitely just that. The Phi resolution reads — Resolved: that the Editor of The Daily Tar Heel should hence forth appoint his successor, subject to the approval of the Student Legislature."

The candidate situation, particularly this year, presents a difficult situation to the student voter. Confronted with two equally un-known — talentwise — candidates, he is thrown into a dilemma that will probably be resolved by merely checking the first name, tossing a coin, or just not voting at all. None of these, it is quite evident, is a very commendable solution.

To throw the problem of selecting a successor into the lap of The Daily Tar Heel editor, however, does not appear to be the most feasible solution either. Despite his sincere strivings for an unbiased choice, the pressure on the editor to pick a successor who will continue on the same path which he has so laboriously hewed in the woods of University betterment would be difficult to resist.

The approval of the Student Legislature would necessarily put some check on such a situation, of course, but there recommendation would be primarily based on the relative success of the editor making the choice.

The need for a removal of the political restrictions on the editor's' office is apparent to anyone familiar with the situation. To put an individual in the position where his election depends on his amiability and ability to say what the student population wishes to hear is a vicious thwarting of his journalstic personality.

The fact that the two candidates who have declared for the editorship are "politicians" adds emphasis to this fact.

Perhaps the solution of the problem lies in the putting the selection of one or two editorial candidates to the staff of The Daily Tar Heel. These individuals are the most familiair with the conditions under which the prospective candidates would have to work. They are also the most competent to judge how well the persons with whom they have associated would be able to perform under these conditions. It would still be practical to present the candidates to the students elected representative in the Student Legislature for the ultimate decision, thus spreading the final responsibility over a general area.

The various answers to this distinct problem must be weighed and reflected upon. The Phi-Assembly discussion is a commendable start along this way. At present, however, the students should rely on the decision of the Bi-Partisan Board. It is the most qualified to judge.

Pasternak

Cynthia Bivins

While few females would object to a reading assignment in a fashion magazine, we hesitate to suggest to the brawnier members of our population that they wander through pages of the newest shades of pink and coral for the bit of culture beyond. Still, despite the objections of some, the March 15 issue of Vogue is one of note. In seclusion on its latter pages is a monumental article on a well-worn topic—Shekespeare. This time the great bard's critic is a man of only slightly less note than the famous playwright himself. This critic is Boris Pasternak.

In addition to SAFE CONDUCT, DR. ZHIVAGO, and a noteworthy autobiography, and numerous other literary efforts, Pasternak has received acclaim for his brilliant translations of Shakespeare. Is it any wonder, then, that he should choose to give us his views on a phase of literature with which he has worked so carefully?

Pasternak hints at the central idea of his commentary early in his work as he acknowledges that Shakespeare's dramas are ". . . profoundly realistic in their spirit." He leaves this comment idle for a time as he launches a discussion of the music and rhythm in Shakespeare's plays. He sees rhythm as a means of characterization in HAMLET, a powerful tool of negation in ROMEO AND JULIET, and as a means of transportation from classicism and scholasticism to absolutism in OTHELLO.

Upon beginning his comments on JULIUS CAESAR and ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA, Pasternak no longer continues his search for the musical elements in Shakespeare. His main concern now is with Shakespeare's realism. Pasternak labels these two plays as ". . . the fruit of a study of unvarnished everyday life." He considers ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA the more realistic of these two plays and possibly the greatest of all the Shakespearean plays. He sees these two greats as the predecessors of the "psychological novel" of the 19th century. Pasternak goes even further to comment that "Shakespeare was the father and teacher of realism. To mention only the most important thing, Shakespeare is the percursor of the subsequent symbolic theater of Ibsen and Chekov."

Mobilization

Norman Cousins

Recently, the radar screens of our military defenses picked up some unidentified flying objects. The U. S. Strategic Air Command immediately dispatched jet bombers armed with nuclear bombs in the direction of the Soviet Union. While the bombers were still well on this side of the border of the Soviet Union, the markings on our military radar screens were positively identified as a migrations of large birds. The order went out in time to stop our planes.

The incident has served to call attention to the system set up by our armed forces for retaliating against "surprise" attack. We now have plans for launching a crushing nuclear counterattack within seconds after we discover that an enemy is on his way to attack us. First, we have jet bombers loaded with large nuclear bombs on twenty-four hour alert. Second, as soon as suspicious objects are sighted on our radar screens, our bombers are sent winging towards the Soviet Union. Third, these bombers must turn back from their target unless they receive specific order to continue on their way when only two hours away from the enemy border.

The balancing act on the brink becomes increasingly precarious. Let us suppose that Soviet radar screens were to pick up markings caused by a massed flock of geese. Suppose the Soviet Union has its own "fail safe" system by which its bombers are allowed to come within two hours of American territory before the attack order is confirmed. Suppose our own radar screens detect the existence of Soviet planes coming towards us only a few hours away. Suppose our SAC system goes into immediate operation and we send our own bomebrs winging towards the Soviet Union. With bombers from each country approaching the other, neither side is going to draw back.

Meanwhile, available time for detecting error or coping with accident is shrinking almost to the vanishing point. The intercontinental ballistic missile will cut the distance between the United States and the Soviet Union from hours to minutes. The Soviet already claims to have perfected such a missile. The United States expects to have one before long. The significant feature of an intercontinental ballistic missile, other than the fact that it can carry a hydrogen bomb across the Atlantic Ocean in about ten minutes, is that there is no way of cal ng it back once it is dispatched. If it is released as the result of human error in diagnosing a radar screen, or out of faulty military intelligence regarding the plans of a potential enemy, then all men on earth stand condemned by the error and all must pay.

When Prime Minister Harold Macmillan returned from his recent visit to the Soviet Union, he emphasiezd that he believed the great danger of a world nuclear war stemmed not from the intent of any nation to start one but rather from an accident or a miscalculation. Perhaps he had in mind the possibility that a pilot in a plane armed with a hydrogen bomb might go berserk. It wasn't long ago that a colonel in a French army plane took it upon himself to bomb an Algerian village. Or perhaps the Prime Minister was thinking of an accidental large nuclear explosion that might be misinterpreted as an attack.

There is also the danger that the strain on the nerves may be too severe to sustain for the men at the ultimate triggers. Just the other day, Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy told a Congressional committee that this nation might not be able to stand by its promise not to hit first. He was responding, of course, to the fact that there is no longer any workable military defense, and that each side now stands at the absolute mercy of the other. And he felt impelled to warn the Soviet Union that one false move might mean that the United States would push every button on its switchboard of instant annihilation.

Doubtless, there are men in the Kremlin who take the same quick-trigger view of us.

Meanwhile, life for everyman goes on as usual. People attend to their business: they make plans, pay premiums on their life insurance, build new homes, spend evenings in front of their television sets, write letters to their children at college, read their newspapers, and assume that questions of war and peace can best be handled by people in government. There is only the thinnest awareness that the problem has already billowed out far beyond the means or capacity of people in government. The most significant aspect of the current crisis is that the national sovereign governments are floundering and, indeed, are intensifying the peril by refusing to create the only basis on which a common security can be built, namely, a pooling of sovereignty under world law.

What is most needed today — and this holds for all people and not just the peoples of the United States or the Soviet Union — is massive assurance of wisdom and restraint rather than nervous proclamations that one side or the other is all set to unleash the nuclear terror. It would be in greater keeping with our history if we were to announce, not that we were all primed to press the ultimate trigger, but that we would rather die ourselves than start a world nuclear war. And it would help to serve the cause of all history if we were to make known with absolute sincerity our own iron determination to put an end to the runaway nuclear race under enforceable safeguards that would be binding on all. And if we speak of mobiliaztion, let it be the mobilization of purpose and resources in combatting hunger or disease or injustice — abroad or at home.

Our security depends on control of force rather than on the pursuit of force. It is not enough for the governments to recognize this. The citizen must recognize it, give it priority over his personal affairs, and create the kind of mandate that can give leadership to leaders. —The Saturday Review

PETITE MUSICALE — The Pasquier Trio will appear on a Petite Musicale program Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. The musicians will be performing compositions by Beethoven, Schoenberg and Dohnyani. The concert is open to the public.

Jazz Show To Feature Popular Artists

British jazz artists will join well-known American jazz performers in a concert Sunday at 2:30 in the State Fair Arena in Raleigh.

Chris Barber and his jazz orchestra from England will be featured with such American jazz notables as Woody Herman and his orchestra and vocalist Dakota Staton.

Other performances will be by Ottilie Patterson, drummer Graham Burbudge, trumpeter Pat Halcox and Monty Sunshine.

Tickets for the concert are available at Kemp's in Chapel Hill.

Set Date Early For Planetarium

North Carolinians planning to include the Morehead Planetarium's traditional Easter program in their March and April schedules have been urged to set an early date for their visit to Chapel Hill.

Manager Tony Jenzano reported today that more than 5,000 persons have seen the 1959 version of "Easter, the Awakening" since it opened on February 24.

Another 6,000 have made advance reservations for the coming weeks.

"None of the weekday performances for the general public is crowded thus far," Jenzano said.

Post-Grad Slacks

These trousers are young in style, comfortable to wear, easy to wash and realistically priced. That's true of all sportswear that bears the H I S label. At men's shops that know what you want. Pleatless front. Tapered legs. $4.95 to $6.95, depending on fabric.

Physical Therapists Meet Friday, Saturday

Approximately 50 physical therapists from throughout the state will attend a seminar at the UNC School of Medicine Friday and Saturday.

The seminar on Physical Therapy Education and Current Programs Contributing to North Carolina's Health is being sponsored by the Section of Physical Therapy of the UNC Medical School.

Friday's sessions will be held in the auditorium of Gravely Sanatorium, Saturday's sessions will be held in the Interns' Quarters of N. C. Memorial Hospital.

The public is invited to attend all sessions with the exception of Friday's luncheon at 12:15 p.m. Registration will begin at 8:30 a.m. and the regular sessions start at 9 a.m.

The speakers on the Friday morning program include Mabel M Parker, Margaret L. Moore, Rachel L. Nunley, Mildred L. Wood, all of the UNC Section of Physical Therapy; Helen Kaiser, Duke University, Durham; Evelyn McNeil Watts Hospital, Durham; Anne Parrish, State Board of Health, Raleigh; and Sue Hirt, Medical College of Virginia, Richmond.

Those appearing on the Friday afternoon program are Miss Moore; Barbara C. White, Univesrity of Florida; Miss Hirt; E. Sue Flowers UNC Section of Physical Therapy Virginia Whitfield, Home for Crippled Children, Pittsburgh, Pa. Kathryn E. Phillips, Georgia Warm Springs Foundation; Ray M. Litaker, Greenville (S. C.) General Hospital; Jacqueline Maiden, Medical College Hospital, Charleston, S. C and Elise Rutledge, UNC Section of Physical Therapy.

Young Republicans Vote Representatives

The UNC Young Republican Club voted unanimously at the Tuesday night meeting to send representatives to the North Carolina General Assembly.

These representatives will urge Republican members of the Assembly to vote for appropriations the University has requested.

The YRC also decided that the Young Republican Club of North Carolina would be invited here for the 1960 state convention.

It was announced at the meeting that Warren H. Coolidge, UNC law student, has been elected to the Executive Committee of the N. C. Young Republican Club.

Intellect Important In Military Career

"The military mind has to understand all technical innovations, and, even more important, the military mind has to pass on to the political mind the importance, the influence and the impact that these technical innovations will have."

Dr. Robin D. C. Higham, instructor in the History Department, recently said this to freshmen midshipman of the NROTC.

He first outlined naval innovations between the American Civil War and the twentieth century.

Lecturing on the military mind and the technical innovations between 1900 - 1918 in England, Dr. Higham pointed out that Naval Officers entered the service around 12 years old and grew up within the Navy.

Military instructors did not have time to read books or to write them, and during the monotony of peace "spit and polish" was emphasized over combat efficiency. The military mind of the 19th century was comparitively isolated from intellectual contacts, he said.

Many of the new weapons were misunderstood, Dr. Higham commented. Winston Churchill in 1914 did not think that the submarine would ever be used for commerce raiding.

The British used airplanes primarily as an extension of artillery spotting system, and tanks were also misused, he said.

Dr. Higham concluded that World War I "is the war that was fought much too soon. That technological developments were not far enough along nor were the younger officers who understood them as yet high enough up in the service to bring their influence to bear."

From his talk he drew these conclusions for the Midshipmen: the study of history is important to a military career; a wide intellectual experience with a skeptical mind is essential; fear of a device can be wiped out only by understanding its limitations and capabilities.

Locks, Keys Exhibited At Acklank Art Center

Style and Security, traveling exhibition of locks, keys, and door ornamentation which traces 4,000 years of history, will open in the Ackland Art Center Tuesday, March 24, for a three-week showing.

Composed of an Historical Section which includes locks of a type used in 2,000 B.C., and a Contemporary Design Section made up of door ornamentation created by leading contemporary artists, Style and Security is presented by The Yale and Towne Manufacturing Company and circulated by the American Federation of Arts.

An interesting historical lock in the exhibit is an Egyptian device which was reported to have been placed on the West Gate of the Holy Sepulchre by the Crusaders in the twelfth century. Also included in the Historical Section is an assortment of ancient Roman bolts and ring keys dating back as far as 100 B.C., and a small Egyptian type lock from Abydos, Asia Minor, inlaid with ivory and pearl, reporterly owned by the Persian King, Darius III, about 300 B.C.

Another unusual device is an American 19th century rim lock which can be loaded with a percussion cap that explodes when the knob is turned to frighten the intruder and warn the occupants of the house.

The Contemporary Design Section of the exhibition includes pulls, handles, knobs and other pieces of door ornamentation created by The Yale and Towne Hardware Styling Department and by contemporary artists and designers commissioned by the Department. This group of contributing artists includes Fernand Leger, Jacques Lipchitz, Ibram Lassaw, Theodore J. Roszak, Mirko, Philip Johnson and Isamu Noguchi.

Style and Security will remain at the Art Center through Saturday, April 11.

Angel Flight Hostesses At Assembly

Members of the Angel Flight will act as hostesses and guardians at the CCUN Model United Nations Assembly here April 9, 10 and 11.

The Angels will meet the student delegates, show them to their assigned residences and conduct them on a brief tour of Chapel Hill.

The pages, eighth and ninth grade boys chosen from schools throughout the state, will also be supervised by the Angels.

Mary Cabell Carlan of the Angel Flight and Edie Dalton and Melissa Osborne of the CCUN are the coordinators of this phase of the Model Assembly.

Tri Delts Elect Durham President

Mary Margaret Durham was recently elected president for the coming year of Delta Delta Delta social sorority.

Assisting her as vice president will be Ann Taylor and Connie Kenedy will serve as secretary.

Other officers include Marilyn Hussman, treasurer; Connie Spivey, chaplain; Mary Britton marshal; Carol Tieslau, social chairman; Nancy Aubrey, Panhellenic Council president; Mary Gregory, rush chairmamn; Polly Wooten, scholarship chairman; Ann Norton, house manager, and Peppy Currie, personnel coordinator.

Applications Available

Applications from men interested as serving as orientation counselors in the fall must be submitted by March 25.

The applications are available at the following places: Graham Memorial Information Desk, Monogram Club, reserve room in the Library, Lenoir Hall, the Y Building, dormitories and fraternity houses.

Counselor manuals may be checked out for study from the reserve room of the Library and the Information Desk in Graham Memorial.

A quiz covering the material in the manual will be given April 2.

Last Day For Council Vacancy Interviews

Today is the last day of interviewing by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board with students interested in running for the Men's Honor Council and Student Council.

The interviews will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. today in the Men's Council Room in Graham Memorial.

Vacancies on the two councils include three senior seats on the Student Council and three seats at large on the Men's Honor Council.

Candidates have been requested to sign an appointment sheet on the door of the council room.

Coed Counselors

Application blanks for coeds interested in being freshmen counselors next fall are available today in the dean of women's office.

Counselors will live with the freshmen in Spencer and will serve year-round as well as during the orientation period.

Rising sophomores, who have been through the program, have been urged to apply, although any woman student is eligible.

Interviews for the positions will be held before spring vacation by a joint committe of Women's Residence Council and the Orientation Committee.

ONE WEEK

Librarians Tour

Approximately 30 students in the School of Library Science will get a week off from the routine of classes and reports when they tour several libraries in Washington and New York next week.

The group will leave Chapel Hill by chartered bus Sunday afternoon and return here the following Sunday. First stop on the trip will be the nation's capital, where tours of the Library of Congress, National Archives Library and U. S. Department of Agriculture Library are planned. Second stop for the group will be the Princeton University Library Wednesday afternoon.

New York will be the final stop for the future librarians, who will tour the Brooklyn and New York Public Libraries, U. N. Library and the H. W. Wilson Publishing Co. plant.

The annual trip by library science students is held to acquaint them with the operating practices and procedures of key U. S. government, special, university and publiv libraries. Miss Margaret Allman, member of the School of Library Science faculty, yill accompany the group.

Earlier this year students visited libraries in Durham, Raleigh, and Greensboro.

'Crackdown' Is Hit With Everett Viewers

The name of the new show is 'Crackdown', a mystery which is solved by the viewers themselves. The problem is one of keeping cigarette butts out of the fireplace. The subtitle announced by dorm officers is "no if's, and's or butts to be thrown in the fireplace and vicinity.

A similar notice posted some weeks ago resulted in a new look in the TV room. Besides the buttless fireplace Everett TV addicts are proud of their new furniture issued by the University Operations Office.

Social Angle Important In IDC Vote

IDC President Rudy Edwards said Wednesday that dormitory residents should nominate and elect those who will work for improved privileges, with particular reference to the dorm social program.

Edwards mentioned that the Coed Visiting Agreement has failed in many instances because dorm officers have negleteed to meet provisions that faculty couples must chaperone and that the social rooms must be fixed up.

The agreement was worked out by the IDC in conjunction with the dean of women's office. All men's dorms voted for this visiting privilege, but many have been denied the privilege because of lack of preparation.

Edwards also said despite a limited social fund dormitories have been able to sponsor a fairly active social program. This program includes such events as dances and parties.

These social events are important, Edwards said, because they furnish dorm men the chance to make contacts they would not have otherwise.

Edwards stated that men should keep the social programs in mind when dorm elections are held April 7.

Methodists Display Modern Art

A collection of modern religious art is on display through Sunday at the Methodist Youth Center, 214 Pittsboro Street.

Contributors of paintings and sculpture in the exhibit are Georges Roualt, Margaret Rigg (art editor of Motive magazine), Robert Broderson (chairman of Dept. of Art, Duke University), Robert Howard (UNC Art Dept.), Robert Hodgell (University of Wisconsin Dept. of Art and contributor to Motive magazine) and Sarah Northington (student at Duke).

The exhibit is being sponsored here by the Wesley Foundation.

The Rev. Bob Johnson, director of Wesley Foundation and chaplain to Methodist students, said that the Center hopes this will be an annual event.

"In doing this," he said, "we hope to give evidence of expression of religious feeling in modern form and style, and to show, moreover, that truly 'religious' art need not be limited to works of religious subject matter."

He said that any artist who looks honestly below the surface of life may be considered "religious."

BERLIN

on Berlin is to deal with a danger spot. I was very much surprised when the western powers suggested this was a sort of ultimatum or 'diktat' by the Soviet Union.

"In fact, some powers are threatening the use of violence to prevent the handing over of Soviet rights to East Germany.

"There are two German states and therefore there must be either a peace treaty with the two Germanys or with a confederal Germany or, alternatively, we would make a peace treaty with East Germany if other methods did not succeed."

Suslov asserted Russia has no desire to change the social status of West Berliners or to impose on them a social system they do not want.

Then he referred to Soviet Premier Khrushchev's proposal for stationing U.N. or Allied and Soviet forces in West Berlin to preserve the status quo.

"To settle these differences," Suslov said, "Russia is prepared to agree to a foreign minister's conference and subsequently to summit talks to dispose of such matters by negotiation, peacefully."

GRAY

their ballot on April 7 for the candidate who has had the necessary experience and "whose ideas are not radically different from those of the students.'

Gray commented that he would be a progressive student body president and would keep in mind the problems affecting all segments of the campus.

Friday Explains Needs

stated the University's case on salaries in detail.

After stating several items on the Capital Improvements Budget, Friday singled out increased appropriations for the Public Health Building and the Student union as key issues.

Friday closed by telling the legislators that he had "great faith that you will respond to the challenge and that North Carolina through the education and enlightment of its young people, will continue to make her significant contribution of leadership in the South and to the peace and security of our nation and the world in which we live."

Smith Runs For Editor Of Yack

The first student to announce his candidacy for editor of the Yackety Yack is Michael F. Smith.

Smith filed his application to enter the April 7 elections with the Elections Board this week.

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board, also reported that another candidate has entered the race for a one-year Legislature seat in Dorm Men's III.

This candidate is Phil S. Edwards, who is running without endorsement of either campus political party.

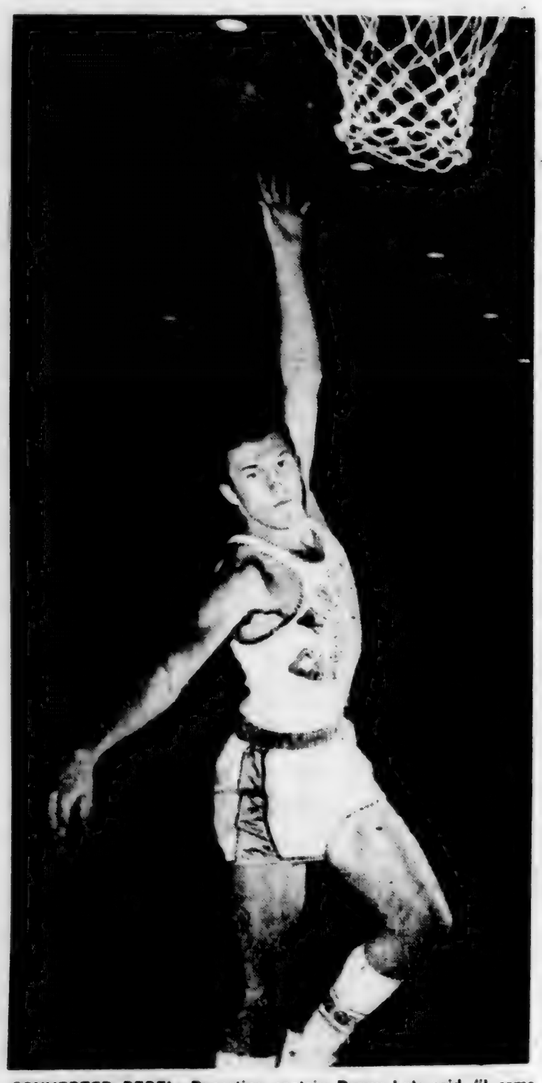
Lotz: 'I'd Give A Million To Do It All Over Again'



CONVERTED REBEL: Departing captain Danny Lotz said, "I came down here a yankee, was converted to a rebel and I love it." Lotz was recently tapped into the Order of the Golden Fleece.

By RUSTY HAMMOND

"I came down here a yankee, I've been converted to a rebel and I love it." So spoke Danny Lotz, captain of the 1958-59 Carolina Tar Heels.

Lotz, a tall, good-looking guy from Long Island, had nothing but praise for the school he has made his alma mater. "I'd give a million dollars to do it all over again," Lotz said. "I love it here. Everyone - the students, faculty and townspeople - have been great to me."

Tapped Into Fleece

Lotz was tapped into the Order of the Golden Fleece Monday night. All five starters from the Tar Heels' national champs and the coach had previously been tapped. Danny is also in the Order of the Grail.

He sited the National Championship in 1957 as his greatest thrill. But Lotz said that "my last game here (against Duke when he got a long standing ovation) meant the most to me of anything in my life."

Going back to the National Championship, Lotz recalled that he started against Syracuse and played over half of both the Michigan State and Kansas games. All this was when he was a sophomore. Lotz was in the game, after Lenny Rosenbluth had fouled out, when the Tar Heels beat Kansas 54-53 in three overtimes to become National Champions of basketball.

Remembering more thrills in his playing career, Danny recalled winning the Louisville Invitational this year, beating Cincinnati in the Dixie Classic, and whipping State in Raleigh this season.

"Great Year"

On this season's Tar Heels, Lotz commented, "It was a great year. I didn't expect us to go so high. Every year I've been here we've been number 1. Of course, the finish was disappointing; I hated to lose against Navy."

Danny sees bright hopes for next year's Tar Heels. He sited their chances as "very good." He thought the frosh will be a big help and stated that experience will be the big thing with all five starters back.

Lotz brought in a point that has escaped most writers. Next year's national champs will go to the Olympics. He felt that this might give the team more incentive.

When asked about Carolina soph stars York Larese and Doug Moe, Lotz, "All you can say is great. They really showed well as sophs. The way they came out and took over as sophomores was just great!"

When asked if he would have liked to play more this year, Lotz said, "Any athlete always likes to play more."

Offered 40 Scholarships

Lotz was all-Long Island in both football and basketball for two years. He had over 40 offers for scholarships; almost as many in football as basketball.

Danny has just been accepted into the UNC Dental School, where he will be for the next four years. Both he and Joe Quigg, another member of the National Champs, are going to become dentists.

The University of North Carolina owes a lot to guys like Danny Lotz. He will be missed on next year's basketball team, sure, but he will be missed even more in many other ways.

Football Unveiled Sat.

Carolina's football legions for 1959 will be unveiled before the public in Kenan Memorial Stadium here Saturday in the fourteenth running of the annual Blue-White game.

Kickoff of the regulation game between two squads chosen to make the competition as even as possible will be 2 p.m. A small admission charge will be made and proceeds will go to the Carolina Monogram Club.

The contest, always a thrilling spring sports event, looking to what to expect in the autumn, will be the windup of 20 days of practice, as prescribed by the NCAA, spread over a period of five weeks.

Twenty four lettermen are on the Tar Heel squad, including six of last year's starting lineup, ends John Schroeder and All-America Al Goldstein, guard Fred Mueller, quarterback Jack Cummings, halfback Wade Smith and fullback Don Klochak.

Schroeder, however, was unable to engage in sring practice because of a knee operation, and his mate on the other flank, Goldstein, also is now out with similar trouble and will be unable to play Saturday. Cummings also has been absent due to a siege of illness.

The lettermen back for 1959:

Ends: John Schroeder, Al Goldstein, Jim Rice, Mike Greenday.

Tackles: Don Stallings, Moose Butler, John Stunda.

Center: Jim Davis, Rip Hawkins.

Quarterbacks: Jack Cummings, Skip Clement.

Halfbacks: Wade Smith, Moyer Smith, Sonny Folckomer, Milam Wall, Rabe Walton, Nelson Lowe.

Fullbacks: Don Klochak, Ed Lipski.

Augmenting the lettermen, on view Saturday, will be a host of reserves from last season, and the rising sophomores, many of whom have sparkled in spring work and will fill the vacancies left by the departed.

McGuire To Speak At Two Banquets

Carolina basketball coach Frank McGuire will be the guest speak at the banquets of two of the nation's leading teams, following the NCAA finals at Louisville this weekend, which he and assistant coach Dean Smith will attend.

McGuire will speak at the University of Kentucky banquet on March 23 and the West Virginia University banquet on April 4.

The UNC coach also has accepted an invitation to address the All-Sports banquet at Buffalo, N. Y., on April 29.

Outstanding Spring Sports Slate Set

The annual Blue White spring football game, a 24-game baseball slate for Walt Rabb's crew, and outstanding schedules for the tennis, golf, and track teams spell out another banner spring sports season for Carolina fans.

Tatum's Tar Heels will have it out with each other this Saturday afternoon at 2:00 in Kenan Stadium and a fine display of football is expected. The squads are divided up fairly evenly and Tatum's new "swing end" offense and unbalanced line will be unveiled.

The baseball schedule gets rolling next Monday when Dartmouth of the Ivy League comes to Emerson Stadium. Connecticut plays here on Tuesday. Last season the baseball Tar Heels finished up in a tie for first place in the conference before losing out to Clemson in a playoff game.

In addition to those two schools, the baseball squad meets Ithaca of New York and East Carolina. March 26 they travel to Florida to participate in the three-day Florida State Invitational Tournament.

The freshman baseball team has a 15-game chart, with most of the competition being furnished by frosh teams in the Big Four. They also meet Presbyterian, Oak Ridge, Wilmington and Campbell.

Dale Ranson's tracksters have a meet scheduled with every conference team. They will run in the Florida Relays on March 28. Late in the year, May 16, those lucky enough will take part in the national AAU event. Their first meet is at State next Tuesday.

The varsity tennis team takes on everyone in the ACC plus several outside teams. Illinois, Rollins, Davidson, Georgetown, and George Washington will all bring teams against the Carolina netters.

Last year the UNC tennis team won the ACC championship, plus the singles and doubles individual championships. Their first match is next Tuesday with Illinois.

The golf team also plays plenty of outside teams. In fact, their schedule furnishes the biggest number of outside competitors of any varsity team.

The golfers meet Indiana, Cornell, Mchigan State, Davidson, and Princeton in addition to the usual ACC teams. Missing from this year's squad will be all-American Billy Thornton, last year's ACC champ. The golfers open with Indiana here next Wednesday.

Lacrosse Team

All those interested in playing lacrosse this spring are asked to come to a meeting in Room 304 of Woollen Gym Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Plans for the formation of a squad will be discussed at this time.

When you see this sign there's just one thing to do—turn around and take a new route. If you've reached a dead end in planning your career, maybe you should do the same.

A few minutes spent with the head of our campus unit will bring to light the many advantages of a career in life insurance sales. Take the time now to look into the possibilities.

Dave Jones Fails To Win Selection Board Endorsement

The Bi-Partisans Selections Board endorsed Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate as co-editor candidates and Davis Young as a candidate for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel.

Dave Jones, the other candidate for editor, was not endorsed by the board in their meeting Thursday afternoon.

The board selected the team of Shumate and O'Tuel because of their experience with The Daily Tar Heel and other publications.

Shumate has worked on the paper as acting news editor, night editor, and acting editor.

He has also served as reporter and columnist.

His other work has included feature writer for the UNC News Bureau and feature editor of the Charlotte College newspaper and his high school paper.

Harold O'Tuel has written for the Goldsboro News Argus; The Speaker of the House; a national trade magazine; and his high school papaper and yearbook.

For the past two years he has been Publications Board chairman. He is a legislator and a past member of the Carolina Quarterly.

The Bi-Partisans Selections Board also endorsed Davis Young because of his journalism experience.

Young worked on The Daily Tar Heel as reporter in 1957 and as feature editor from April to October, 1958-59.

He was newspaper director of the Carolina Symposium from December 1957 to March 1958. During the summer of 1958 Young edited the Summer School Weekly. While editor he did all of the layout, advertising, proof reading, and a great deal of news and sports coverage.

Dave Jones was unavailable for comment as to whether he would continue to run despite his failure to receive the Bi-Partisan Endorsement.

The committee consisted of one representative of each political party; one member of the paid Daily Tar Heel staff, elected by that staff; one member of the non-paid staff, elected by that staff; the chairman of the University faculty; and a member of the school of journalism. Rusty Hammond, The Daily Tar Heel paid staff member was elected by the board as its chairman.

Brogan Names Disunity As Segregation Disaster

By RON SHUMATE

"One of the great disasters of the segregation controversy in the United States is national disunity," Prof. Denis W. Brogan said Thursday night in Hill Hall.

Prof. Brogan, concluding his series of three lectures here, stated that in the heat of the controversy Americans may "lose sight of the unity of the United States."

In speaking of the lack of voters in America, Prof. Brogan said the average citizen is "colder to indulging in more political decisions than in any other country known to me."

He asserted that Americans vote less than most other countries because of the larger number of elections in the United States (local, state, federal and primary elections).

"But the average American is a better citizen because he takes more time in making all the decisions he has to make than do people in France and England," Prof. Brogan said.

He stated that "many Americans are still living nostalgically in a past in which they owe almost no loyalty to the Federal government. Rather, their sense of loyalty is to the state government."

The one side of American character that remains unchanged by the rapidly changing complexion of the world is the "elaborate organized charity for all human ills," stated the British political scientist.

He explained that in France and England the people feel that the problem of their fellow-man's troubles and ills is up to the state, rather than the people themselves.

Prof Brogan listed one of the advantages of American citizens in the modern world as being the fact that "Americans are still not associated with the name 'empire.' The name has been applied to the United States, but it has not stuck securely."

PROF. DENIS W. BROGAN

He further stated that the basic responsibility of the American citizen is to "combine his patriotism (or national pride) with the new way of thinking of himself as a citizen of the world."

Phi Defeats Bill On Editor Selection

By HUBART T. STEELE JR.

A resolution that the editor of The Daily Tar Heel henceforth should appoint his successor, subject to approval by the Student Legislature, was overwhelmingly defeated by the Phi Assembly Tuesday night.

Rep. Lee Arbogast presented the bill and spoke for its adoption. Rep. Arbogast explained that since the paper is a "ritual" of University life and since the editor is an important part of the paper's operation, he should be extremely well qualified.

She said possible editors may be discouraged from competition for the elected position because of timidness. She also stated that by appointing the new editor, the old editor could introduce him to the members of the staff, thereby getting him off to a good start in his new job.

Rep. Hobart Steele then rose to criticize the bill. In his rebuttal to the previous speaker, Steele said that a capable editor could not be shy. Shyness should prevent one from running since a self-conscious editor would make too many concessions to save face.

Rep. Stan Black also spoke against the bill. He favored the present method of election so that the editor could better reflect the ideas of the students on major issues.

Spring Is Busy Season With Placement Service

By DELL H. LITTLE

The personnel director of a large North Carolina manufacturing firm sat in Gardner Hall last week talking with a senior accounting major, discussing the student's aims, his ambitions and his job qualifications.

Across the nation this scene is being duplicated on college and university campuses as job recruitment interviews begin to hit their yearly peak.

February and March find placement officials at their busiest, arranging for company recruiters to visit the campus to screen prospective employees among the spring and summer graduates.

Job openings and salaries are slightly "up" and placement officials throughout the nation have expressed "cautious optimism" that last year's recession effect is improving.

Joe M. Galloway, director of UNC's Placement Service for the past 11 years, agrees with the national survey which foresaw a two per cent rise in this year's starting salaries.

"The number of interviews at present is just about on par with this time last year," Galloway comments. "Companies are open to hiring slightly more individuals, but they still are being selective."

The UNC official adds that the tight job situation last year—in sharp contrast to the abundant job years of 1955-56-57—brought a changed attitude among students applying for jobs.

In his annual report submitted to Chancellor William B. Aycock last fall, Galloway said: "Placement this year was more difficult than in 1957, but probably more realistic."

Recruiters come seeking graduates to fill jobs as accountants, business trainees, chemists, physicist, salesmen, personnel specialists and in many other fields.

Among the North Carolina companies whose recruiters visited Chapel Hill during the past month were American Enka, Broyhill Furniture of Lenoir, Cone Mills and Burlington Industries, both of Greensboro; Home Finance Group of Charlotte, Chatham Manufacturing Company of Elkin, Fieldcrest Mills of Spray, Ernst and Ernst, public accountants, and Piedmont Publishing Company, both of Winston-Salem.

A company representative usually spends one or two days on the campus in Chapel Hill, interviewing an average of 14 applicants daily on half-hour intervals.

Although the actual interview between company official and the applicant is short, much ground work has preceded. This includes a form filled out by the emplyoer to give an idea of job qualifications and requirements, and the studying of company literature by both placement officials and the student himself.

For the use of the interviewer, the applicant has filled out a data sheet which gives his background and activities as a UNC student. grades and some faculty rating The data, plus a transcript of sheets, are available to the recruiter before the interview.

The Placement Service's responsibility does not end with the campus interview, for it keeps close tabs on the job negotiations and hirings, which are completed usually either by letter or by a visit to the company, and it records information about the final placement.

Some attempt is made to guide the student toward suitable job interviews and possibly to divert him from an area to which he is obviously unsuited. Galloway or the assistant director, Mrs. Mary Barber Holmes, talks with each student when he initially applies.

Run As Co-Editors; Ups Field To Three

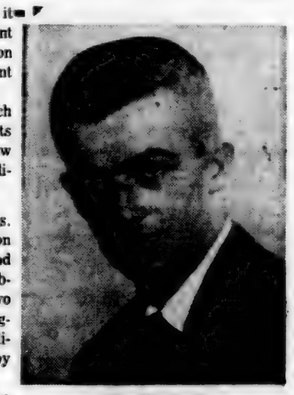
"The Daily Tar Heel ought to be an educational paper" declared editorial candidates Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate who announced yesterday as candidates for co-editorship of The Daily Tar Heel.

The announcement by O'Tuel and Shumate brings the number of candidates up to three, as they are opposed by Dave Jones and Davis Young who announced earlier.

The last time a co-editor candidate offering was presented to the student body, Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder won without opposition in 1955.

The candidates explained that it was the paper's job to fully present the information on the campus on pages one and three and to present differing ideas on page two.

"We feel quite strongly that much must be done to secure columnists who have a different point of view from that of the editor," the candidates said.



RON SHUMATE

Both candidates are Juniors. O'Tuel is a business administration major, a Morehead Scholar, and has served as Chairman of the Publications Board for the past two years. He was instrumental in bringing about the changes in the Publicatins Board discussed last night by the Student Legislature.

O'Tuel has also worked on the Goldsboro News Argus, has written for Speaker of The House, a trade magazine, and did much writing for high school publcations. He is a past member of the staffs of the Carolina Quarterly and has served for three years in the Student Legislature.

Shumate, a transfer from Charlotte College, where he was feature editor of the student paper, is a journalism major. He has worked on The Daily Tar Heel in the capacities of night editor, acting news editor, reporter, columnist, and served as acting editor when the present editor was away from town.

He has also worked as a feature writer for the UNC News Bureau, and currently is contemplating work-

Pres. Friday 'Encouraged' By Committee Response

President Willam C. Friday reported yesterday that he was "encouraged" by the response of the Joint Appropriations Committee in Raleigh Wednesday.

Friday explained that he has not been in touch with any legislators since shortly after the meeting where he, Vice President William Carmichael and Chancellors Aycock, Bostian and Blackwell presented an appeal for the reinstatement of the University's budget.

"I should like to express our appreciation to the students, faculty members, deans, administrators, trustees, and friends of the University who attended the hearings yesterday," Friday said.

"We have received favorable comments on the presentations made yesterday, particularly those of Chancellor Aycock and Vice President Carmichael and we are encouraged by the interest and attention shown by the Committee members," he said.

The crowd in attendance at the hearing was estimated at two hundred persons.

Commissioner of Agriculture L. Y. Ballentine said that he could not recall a larger turnout for a budget hearing. Ballentine has been serving the State Government in Raleigh since the early '40s.

Chancelor William B. Aycock said he "wouldn't know" anything of the reaction of the legislators to the presentations.

"President Friday speaks for all of us on the legislative reaction. He is quite a good judge of it," affirmed Aycock.

Brooks Cites Student Party Year Activities

Several projects completed by the Student Party legislators in the past semester were cited by John Brooks, SP chairman yesterday.

"The Student Party has demonstrated during the past semester that it is concerned about the student's welfare and can accomplish needed legislation even when it is in a minority in the Student Legislature, said Brooks.

"While in a minority," he continued, "the Student Party legislators introduced and got passed five times as much legislation as did the opposition.

"More important than the amount, however," he added, "is the significance of what the SP legislators presented."

He then listed the following completed SP projects.

The establishment of a chaplain; the adoption of a recommendation to the campus to henceforth have a

JESTER IS NOMINATED

The Student Party announced yesterday that Bunky Jester would be the party's candidate for social chairman of the senior class.

Bunky, a junior from Yardly, Pa., is the newly elected president of the Stray Greeks.

She is also active in Angel Flight, Splash Club and the YMCA.

The SP slate includes George Grayson for president, Dave Evans for vice president, Martha Morgan for secretary and John Crotty for treasurer.

UP Discusses Platform Intentions

The University Party, in a statement released Thursday, stated that the intent of a platform must be realized before the planks can be emumerated.

The UP stated that the intent of their platform is to "again unify this campus, to give student government a place in all segments of the campus, and above all, to realize that our power in student government is limited."

The party further stated that "we cannot drastically innovate changes over the world. It's time to talk sense. The University Party is truly moderate against radical idealism."

The party also said that they are "liberal when suggestions discussions and the implemention of improvements and expansion of ideas can be realized yet within a rational concept."

On the subject of women's dorm regulations, the UP advocates a

Forum Will Present Beckett's 'Endgame'

By FREEMAN BAILEY

The Freshman Forum, in conjunction with its studies of the various art forms that compose our culture, will present a one-act play by Samuel Beckett entitled "Endgame."

Try-outs will be held in Gerrard Hall on Wednesday, March 25, at 7:30 p.m.

Participation in this play is not limited to freshmen, but will be open to all who are interested. Copies of the script are available at the office in the "Y" building. The play itself will be presented sometime in April.

Beckett has been called "the most remarkable writer to emerge since World War II" and the play is said to have "outraged the Philistines, earned the contempt of half-wits, and filled those who are capable of telling the difference between a theater and a bawdy house with a profound and sombre and paradoxical joy." The author is essentially a poet, and is noted for his originality and grasp of human emotion.

The Freshman Forum is also planning a creative workshop, to be conducted at Cherry Grove Beach the first weekend in May. Those interested may inquire at the "Y."

Election Of Yack Editor Dropped

Solons Approve Revised Publications Board By-Laws

By DEE DANIELS

Revision of the by-laws of the Publications Board was sanctioned by the Student Legislature last night after extensive debate on requiring candidates for editor of the Yackety Yack to appear before the Selections Board of the Publications Board.

Harold O'Tuel (SP), author of the bill, pointed out that the bill changes the composition of the Publications Board and if passed it would formalize policy and set up definite areas of procedure.

As for composition of the Board, there would be the addition of two student legislators, a member of the Finance Committee of the Legislature and the treasurer of the student body. The auditor of the Student Activities Fund Office, who has been sitting in unofficially, would also be a member.

The solons approved the revision article by article, but debate halted the sanctioning process as Ira Hardy (UP) questioned the advisibility of requiring candidates for Yack editor to appear before the Selections Board of the Publications Board.

The Selections Board also would have the authority of recall. The editor of the Daily Tar Heel does not come under such jurisdiction.

Hardy felt that by making the Yack editor responsible to others, the faculty might attempt to remove him if he used something in the yearbook not meeting their approval.

Hardy's proposed amendment to except the Yack editor from appearing before the Selections Board was defeated.

As the bill now stands, the Yack editor for 1960-61 will be selected by a Selections Board of the Publications Board and the former shall have the power of removal of appointed officer if it deems such action necessary.

The remainder of the bill was approved without further debate by the solons.

David Grigg (UP) introduced two bills last session, one for the establishment of a Campus Affairs Board and another to suggest specific areas of interest to the Campus Affairs Board.

Grigg explained that the main idea of the first is to provide a group free to go out on its own to look into student affairs. He stressed that it would not involve investigation or purge, but just study into matters of student interest.

The second bill's purpose is to provide the Board something to work on upon assuming office following spring elections.

Both were passed. The Ram and Ewe, campus humor magazine, was declared formally a defunct organization due to bill, presented last time by O'Tuel. It provides that last year's subscribers be reimbursed since they didn't receive the two publications due them.

Panhel Endorses Parent's Day

The Panhellenic Council endorsed and gave their support to the plans for Parents Day, May 3, during their meeting Wednesday night.

An officer training school for the new officers was set for March 25. Mrs. Busse will speak to the council at this time on various panhel policies and procedures.

Bowling Alley Construction To Begin

Construction on a 36-lane bowling center is scheduled to begin in a short while on a 10-acre tract on the north side of the Chapel Hill Boulevard, about five miles from Durham.

Future plans call for the center to have other recreational facilities in addition to bowling. Details of the other facilities will be announced later.

The center is being constructed and operated by Sportland, Inc., of Rocky Mount. Sportland, Inc. is the brainchild of Robert D. Gorham Jr., a graduate of UNC.

The center is designed to be one of the finest and most up-to-date bowling centers in the east. All bowling lanes will be equipped with AMF pinspotters. This eliminates the necessity for "pin boys," and speeds the resetting of pins and the return of the bowling balls to the players.

Churchill To Chair New Student Board

Pappy Churchill has been appointed by Don Furtado as chairman of the newly-organized International Student Board.

Assisting her will be Marcy Klingel, Hal Miller, Jean Billingsley and Cynthia Grant.

This board will serve, along with the active members of the old Foreign Student Committee, as the nucleus of the international student affairs on campus.

"Each of the students appointed has been active in some phase of international student programming, and each has shown a sincere interest and desire to formulate and put into effect the international student program," said Furtado.

Four Win Endorsement By Bi-Partisan Board

Bill Crutchfield, David Harper, Jimmy Smalley and George Campbell were endorsed for seats at large on the Men's Honor Council by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board, Hugh Patterson, chairman of the board, announced yesterday.

The board also endorsed Neal Boden and John Ray for Student Council.

The Committee

The Chairman of the Joint Appropriations Committee rapped his gavel, opened his mouth, and in so doing uttered the first mistake of the afternoon.

He addressed the group by saying that he was pleased to introduce to the group one of the finest organizations of its kind in the south—the Consolidated University.

His statement was true enough, but his concept was limited, for there is no time anymore for the provincialism that would segregate the south from the north or the east from the west. They are today part of one large competitive whole in which the University of North Carolina will fall out of sight if the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations remain the way they are.

To say the University presentation was forceful would be to say no more than the truth. In spite of the repetition of several phrases from the presentation to the Board of Trustees, yesterday's presentation was forceful and probably succeeded in getting a favorable disposition on the part of the legislators.

To hear the Chancellor come out for quality as strongly as he did was a good sign, even to those like the editor who wished he would not even mention quantity, which he also emphasized.

If there was any bad side of yesterday's performance, it was in the emphasis of the University's responsibility to take in growing numbers of students of this state, to train the technicians for the growing industries, to provide the professional men where they are needed, and to keep up with other developments. This is probably all true, but the University at Chapel Hill has a greater cause—its justification to itself as an entity which is constantly aspiring to higher levels of quality on the mundane level or to more zealous pursuit of truth on a more esoteric level.

This currently is being impeded by the philosophy that a state University cannot compete with a private University. Yet, it is true that the University is currently in competition with these very private universities for the top faculty talent in the nation, so it is rather foolish to say that the University cannot compete. It can and it must.

The future of the University is based on the wisdom of those legislators who can tie the purse strings so tight that they will suffocate this University out of existence, or can open the gates to a new era of University greatness after a long drought.

While in New York, the editor fell into the habit of watching the late, late show, and one of the sponsors was "Chock Full 'O Nuts" coffee. The commercial showed a pile of silver currency being poured on a flat top, a hot iron melted the currency, and the resultant insignia was "The Best Things In Life Cost Money."

And while it is that the editor does not agree with this philosophy, it is true that that which is most vital to a democratic society—education—costs money. It is this money, the money differentiating mediocrity from excellence that the University must get.

The General Assembly is charged with a great responsibility.

Correction

The editor made a mistake in pointing out that the Publications Board revision bill lacked provision for a quorum. This clause is there.

However, the clause does not alleviate the major objection to the Bill—that action can be taken without a single publication having a voice in what is going on.

It would be wise if in its quorum clause, the Student Legislature inserted that half this representation in voting strength should be made up of publications.

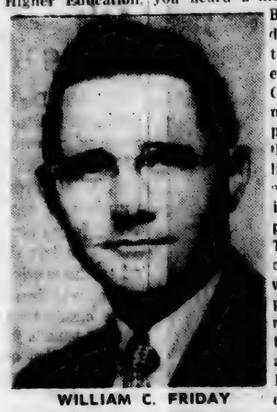
Consolidated University Needs

William C. Friday

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Joint Committees:

We appreciate this opportunity to present our statements to you in behalf of the Univversity budget requests. In making this presentation I have asked the assistance of Chancellor Aycock, Chancellor Blackwell, and Chancellor Bostian in order that you may hear at first hand from each of our institutions. Vice President Carmichael will comment later on the problems we face in the matter of faculty salaries.

Last week in the presentation of the Board of Higher Education, you heard a member of that Board who is a distinguished national figure in education, Dr. O. C. Carmichael, express his great pride in the way that North Carolina has marshalled its resources in support of public education. This testimony came from a man who has been president of two major universities, president of a woman's college, and president of a great private foundation that has programs reaching over the world. We could hope for no more competent witness.



WILLIAM C. FRIDAY

There are many of you who through the years have done much to establish this reputation that North Carolina enjoys for the excellence of its system of public education. You have been courageous in your decisions, and it is because of your courage and concern that we have the kind of educational system we now possess.

Along with our public schools we now have a system of state-supported institutions of higher education in North Carolina composed of the community colleges in Asheville, Charlotte, and Wilmington; the four-year colleges and the Consolidated University. By law, each of these institutions has been given a definite mission in higher education. We should like to express our hope that you will assist each of the men every way you can as they seek greater fulfillment of their obligations.

Higher education depends upon strong and vigorous public schools, and I am sure I speak for all state-supported institutions of higher learning in urging greater support for the public schools. We are inseparable partners in the cause of public education in this state. There is no conflict of interests here for each of us is a part of the whole effort being supported by our people in their conviction that education is the underpinning of progress in North Carolina.

Universities are unique institutions created to preserve knowledge, to teach each rising generation and to provide an environment in which scholars may work to enlarge our understanding and knowledge of man and the world in which he lives. They are centers where men and women labor to solve problems which confront us on all sides and to gain the knowledge that will build the foundations of the future. These are the obligations of any university worthy of the name, and the stature of our University is measured by the quality of its achievements in each of these areas of academic responsibility.

As you know, the Consolidated University of North Carolina, under the laws of the state, consists of the Woman's College, North Carolina State College, and the University in Chaepl Hill. Each of these institutions is accepting its obligations in teaching, research, and extended service to the citizens of the state, in a vigorous manner consistent with the over-all mission of the Consolidated University.

Last week Dr. Carmichael gave you his judgment on the stature of our institutions. To be a member of the Association of American Universities one of the top forty-one institutions of 1800 colleges and universities on this continent; to be known as one of the nation's outstanding colleges for women; to be known as one of the nation's strong and rapidly developing land-grant colleges are distinctions of which North Carolina can be proud. The excellence of the teaching, research, and service in each of our institutions, the distinction and competence of our faculty members, have made us a university of national and international reputation. We are ever mindful that it is the support from the several General Assemblies and the support from the people of the state, from our alumni, friends, foundations, and other that have made this reputation possible.

This afternoon we ask you to help us maintain and strengthen this stature your University possesses.

BUDGET PREPARATION

We began preparation of our requests well over a year ago. At the outset we agreed that we should determine those areas where increased support would be necessary to maintain and strengthen the quality of our existing programs. We found that such a decision focused attention upon the importance of increasing faculty salaries, the need for more faculty members to teach more students (for our enrollments are increasing each year), and the need for increases in appropriations for our libraries, and additional support for our research and service programs.

During this long period of preparation many conferences were held with faculty members and academic deans. Following these discussions, the Chancellors and the Consolidated officers considered their requests carefully and critically. Reluctantly we were obliged to omit or reduce some requests for the mantenance and operation of our institutions that were submitted to us, valid and meritorious as we thought them to be. Our requests in their final form contained only those items and amounts considered very essential for the approaching biennium. And, as Major McLendon pointed out to you last week, after conferences with the Board of Higher Education, the University administration reduced its Capital Improvements request substantially.

At the conclusion of our own administrative deliberations, we presented our proposed budgets to the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees. Upon receiving its approval, we made our presentations to the Board of Higher Education. After hearing all state-supported institutions, the Board of Higher Education submitted its own recommendations to the Advisory Budget Commission. Later, the University administration exercised its right to appear before the Advisory Budget Commission, and again we stated the urgent need for the increased support identified in our original requests.

I have reviewed this procedure for you to show how much time, careful thought and judgment have gone into the requests that we shall place before you.

THE "A" BUDGETS

Let me turn now to the "A" budgets. Under this budget we were to include only those requests necessary to continue operating our existing programs and related activities and services at present levels of quality. The increases requested reflect primarily the requirements arising from expected increases in enrollment, although funds for some supplies and equipment and cost increases were also included. Many conferences were held with Budget officials on the "A" budgets prior to their final presentation to be sure that the University had carefully followed the prescribed formula.

Since additional faculty members to teach more students represents the big item in the "A" budget, it was necessary to reach some understanding on the enrollment projections for our institutions. Last fall Mr. Johnston, Mr. Coltrane and his associates, Dr. Purks of the Board of Higher Education, and the members of the University administration, met to discuss these enrollments. After the discussions, we reached an agreement on figures that represented the increases in the number of new students we know we shall have for each year of the biennium 1959-1961. The University administration, acting on this agreement reached with the Board of Higher Education and the budget officials, then determined the number of new teachers we should ask for in the "A" budget in accordance with the formula we were provided. Let me reiterate that we asked in the "A" Budget only for the number of new teachers necessary to continue our programs at their present level of quality and to teach the increasing numbers of sudents we know we shall have.

As you know, the Advisory Budget Commission recommended 54 of the 135 additional teachers the University requested under this "A" budget formula. This reduction was based on the Commission's decision to increase the ratio of the number of students per teacher at each of our three institutions.

Each of our Chancellors is prepared to offer you a full explanation of this technical student-teacher ratio problem at his institution should you desire it this afternoon; but for the present moment I should like to restrict my comments to a few general observations.

I have pointed out that every recognized University has the major functions of teaching, research, and service. Almost every faculty member does some teaching and some research, and many perform duties in administrative work and service to the people of the state. When each of our institutions was asked by the Budget officials to provide information from which the ratio of students per teacher could be derived, we provided the number of faculty members in our institutions; we did not identify the extent to which the faculty member was engaged in teaching, research, or service activity. The result, for which we assume our share of responsibility, has made it appear that the University has fewer students for each teacher than is acually the case. It follows, therefore that the Commission's recommendations were based on figures that do not reflect the actual teacher-student ratios in our institutions today.

In order to clarify this problem, the administrative officials of each of our institutions and the members of the Consolidated Office have had conferences during the last three weeks wtih Mr. Johnston, Mr. Coltrane, Mr. Holloman, Mr. Moore, and Mr. Gupton of the Budget Office to go over this problem. Following these discussions, agreement was reached with these gentlemen that the teacher-student ratios at our institutions are in fact considerable higher than those set forth in the Budget book.

A full explanation of this problem has been given Mr. Copeland and Mr. Harris in a conference with them last week.

Then, insofar as our "A" budgets are concerned, it comes down to this: if the University is to continue its present programs of teaching and research at their present levels of quality, and if we are to teach the increasing numbers of students we know we shall have, then the total number of teaching positions requested under the "A" budget must be provided.

If this is not done, the effect of such a decision will be to increase an already heavy work load for our faculty members or to decrease the vitally essential research activities of the University faculties. Let us examine these consequences.

The greatness of our University comes from the quality of its faculty, their teaching of undergraduates, their scholarly research ,and their devoted service. As our Chancellors will tell you, these men and women are already working long and hard hours teaching students, grading papers, counseling with students, directing 82.9% of all the graduate study offered in state-supported institutions of higher learning in North Carolina, reading and studying in their own field of work to keep up with new developments and new discoveries, serving on committees and boards to advise the administration of the University on the policies of the University, and working with our farmers, our lawyers, doctors, business men and teachers and other citizens on problems confronting the people of North Carolina. There is no group in our state that works harder and with greater dedication.

In addition to their teaching, and their service, and work with the people of the state, University faculty members engage in basic and applied research. We have but to read our papers to see dramatic stories of the significance of research in the natural sciences, in mathematics, physics, and chemistry, among others, leading to great progress in atomic powers, in electronics, missile development and jet propulsion; we read of the significance of research in the humanities and social sciences revealing new insights into human relationships; we know that research in the medical and health sciences has given each of us a longer life expectancy and a greater promise of good health while we live. And each of us has experienced the results of research in the biological sciences leading to a better agriculture and a more productive utilization of our land and forests, and research in science and engineering that is responsible for a greater and more efficient industrial production. We know, too, of the importance of research in law, business, and education.

I cannot believe that the citizens of North Carolina are willing to accept the alterative of lowering our standards by increasing the already heavy teaching loads of our faculty members or by reducing research activities such as those I have mentioned, which, I might add, are vitally essential to the success you and I hope to see the Research Triangle achieve. But this lowering of standards will necessarily follow if the personnel and operating funds requested in the "A" budgets are not proided.

"Gosh, No — It's Not Mine"

A Letter

Editor:

The experimental reform of opening the library stacks to all members of the student body has now been in effect for two weeks. As yet the only voices publicly raised about this innovation have endorsed it. Perhaps it would be appropriate to bring before the student body and the university administration another side of this issue. This is the side of opposition to the experiment, of self-interest if you wish, but also of interest in the purpose for maintaining a library which ranks among the larger university research libraries of the country (24th).

The reason for allowing freedom of the stacks, as explained by the library administration and as understood by this writer, is that it will allow the undergraduate students to come into contact with the books, to get the "feel" of them, and thereby to become familiar with and interested in the contents of these books. If the plan is investigated no further, this seems a laudable ideal, though there is no assurance that it will work as anticipated. But those who advocate the change do not, apparently, think beyond this first tactile encounter of student and book. The library administration does not take seriously the possibility that this initial meeting may develop into a deeper attachment between student and book, which would require that the student have the book to adorn his own personal library. In blunter terms, such leniency may lead to theft. While, no doubt, most of the undergraduate students will not abuse this liberty, there will be some who will and it is in order to protect the responsible ones from the irresponsible that this letter is written in favor of the former, less libertarian, method of closed stacks. Heretofore those who are responsible have been able to obtain the books they needed with scarcely any more difficulty than now under the new system; but those who are not responsible found it less simple to remove books permanently from the library.

The head librarian prefers to use the euphemism, "borrowing", to describe the extended use of a book taken from the library without record of the fact and without authorization, for private use by an individual who may or may not return the book at his own leisure, months or years after the original "borrowing." Our librarian maintains that more than half of these books are eventually returned. Even without considering whether this is so or not, one might ask, who uses these "borrowed" books in the meantime?

The library administration also maintains that, regardless of the opening of the stacks, lossage of books, as reported in the library's latest annual report, decreased by 50% when compared to the report of the previous year. The administration uses this figure to demonstrate that fewer books are being lost now that the stacks are open than were lost before the innovation. Such a self-evidetly absurd argument cannot be credited by this observer and it is incomprehensible that the librarian himself can believe that this argument has any validity in the present discussion, though perhaps he thinks that the student body as a whole will believe it. The fallaciousness of the argument lies in the fact that the annual report covered a period which ended in June of 1958, nine months before the stacks were opened.

But once the library administration is made aware of the possibility that some books might be permanently lost, it comforts itself with the statement that it really "does not matter how many books are lost" because of a new miracle process which reproduces books, even valuable or out-of-print volumes. This method, known to its inventors as "Xerography," is somewhat expensive, costing approximately twice the purchase price of a new book.

There has been a good deal of flap recently on campus, in this paper, at faculty meetings, and at administration conferences, about the university budget for the next biennium as proposed by the governor's budget committee. The proposed appropriation, it is asserted, is not sufficient to support the expansion of the library even enough to keep pace with the growth of the student body, much less to enhance the position of the library, and the university to which it is attached, relative to the same facilities at other schools. If the legislators in Raleigh heard such a patently irresponsible statement as the most responsible official in the library made to this writer about his lack of interest in how many books were lost, these legislators might be less enthusiastic about making the anticipated increases in expenditure for the university over the governor's budget. This is a poor state; appropriations are hard to obtain from a already heavily taxed citizenry; the careless statement by one official should not be allowed to jeopardize the chances of obtaining a favorable appropriation from the representatives of these interested taxpayers.

There are, no doubt, many who view skeptically the suggestion here made that the freedom of the stacks may be abused. Let instances be cited: In the course of just two weeks this writer, in his activities as a library employee and a graduate student studying in the stacks, has observed a number of abuses. During the previous three semesters there have been two instances of theft of personal property occurring which have been reported to the administration; during the past two weeks there have been two such thefts inside the stacks. It has been an axiom in library management that smoking must not be allowed in library stacks, for reasons of safety from fire and from damage to the books caused by air containing smoke; there has been smoking done by undergraduates in the stacks who have been apprehended and expelled for it. This writer observed recently a group of whispering, giggling undergraduate women making chaos out of two shelves of books by putting them back onto the shelves upside down and out of numerical order. A book is locatable only by its number; if it is not on the shelf in order it might as well be lost for it is unavailable for circulation. Noise has increased several decibels within the stacks since their opening, as can be attested to by anyone who used the stacks before their opening to the public.

But despite the inappropriateness of some of these incidents, the most dangerous in the long run, to the present student generation, and most especially to future ones, is the likehood that the books which students will look for and be required to read and which will be necessary for serious advanced research will simply not be available, having been stolen by those who acquired a "feel" for books in our open stacks.

For a closing thought it might be put before the consideration of responsible student opinion, both undergraduate and graduate, the consequences that are likely to ensue by allowing this free access to the stacks to those people who last fall exercised their natural, human instincts to the extent of snatching telephones from the walls of the library booths and urinating in those telephone cubicles.

more flexible policy toward women's dorm regulations and modifications of regulations which do not involve the honor or campus codes."

"We will earnestly promote a system of collective late minutes in order to eliminate unnecessary campuses for one or two late minute violations in dorms and sorority houses."

The UP also promised to promote a lowering of dorm fines, "which at the present time are in some cases too high."

"We stand against the combining of the courts and feel that the result of this combining would be both impractical and unfair," the UP said.

"One important plank," the statement said, "involves the system of the legislature districts. The views of all Carolina students must be fairly represented in Student Legislature. For this very reason, the redistricting of the legislature seats is essential in order to present an accurate picture of the students' interest in that particular governing body."

UP referred specifically to a small group of students "who elected 10 delegates from Town Men's IV."

"Everyone agrees that there are many things which can be done to improve the dormitory system. Through increased support of the IDC we would strongly advocate and work towards an enlargement of the dormitory social program, expansion of the dorm visiting agreement program, the addition of social and physical facilities in dormitories and increased dormitory services, such as janitors and more and better vending machines."

On the issues concerning the Daily Tar Heel, the UP pledged to investigate a means of removing the elections of the Daily Tar Heel editor from "Partisan politics."

DEADLINE

Men interested in serving as orientation counselors this fall must turn in their applications by March 25th.

The applications are available at the Graham Memorial Information Desk, Monogram Club, reserve reading room in the Library, Lenoir Hall, dormitories and fraternity houses. Counselor manuals may be obtained from the reserve reading room of the Library or the Information Desk in Graham Memorial.

On April 2th a quiz will be given on the material covered by the manual.

"Harold and I find that we are in substantial agreement in general point of view and most major issues. However, we have agreed that in a situation where our opinions differ, I will write an editorial and he another so that both points of view are represented," Shumate said.

O'Tuel pointed out that he intends to handle the business and administrative ends of the paper, since, he added, "This is the area in which I have had the most experience."

O'Tuel explained further that Shumate would handle the reportorial staff and news coverage, and that they would each write editorials in the areas in which they were most knowledgeable.

O'Tuel concluded by asserting that "a better and more representative Daily Tar Heel" would be the product of the specialization in tasks and cooperation in administration that they planned to implement.

Journalists Visit J-School

The School of Journalism was recently visited the same day by a French professor of journalism and by the executive director of Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity.

Bernard Voyenne, professor of journalism at the Centre de Formation des Journalistes de Paris, made the School of Journalism his first stop in a month's tour of the United States under the Education Exchange Service of the State Department.

Professor Voyenne, who has translated several articles by Dean Norval Neil Luxon for use in his classes in Paris, asked the State Department to arrange for visits to two Schools of Journalism, Chapel Hill and the University of Wisconsin.

Professor Raymond Mannevy, President of the Centre in Paris, was a member of the working group of which Dean Luxon was chairman at the 1956 UNESCO meeting on professional training in journalism.

While in Chapel Hill, Professor Voyenne observed five journalism classes, discussed research with the research staff members of the School of Journalism, attended the Sigma Delta Chi initiation ceremony, luncheon, and dinner, and was a guest in the home of Dean and Mrs. Luxon.

Victor E. Bluedorn, executive director of Sigma Delta Chi which has chapters in 66 colleges and universities and professional chapters in 50 cities, was on campus to install the undergraduate chapter of Sigma Delta Chi.

Initiation was conducted by five journalism staff members who were initiated into the fraternity at Iowa, Montana State, Michigan, Ohio State, and Wisconsin. Fourteen ungraduates, three newspaper editors, and three journalism staff members were initiated.

'Are You The Ugliest Man On Campus?'

"Who will be UMOC?" Will you be UMOC?"

This question is being asked by members of Alpha Phi Omega.

UMOC, the Ugly Man on Campus will be chosen by April 18 from contestants representing dormitories, fraternities and virtually any other campus organization that chooses to sponsor a contestant.

The contest will be held from April 13, Monday till April 18, Saturday. Polls will be maintained from 9 till 4 p.m. at the "Y" court, Pine Room and Scuttlebutt. Any student may vote for his choice for "UMOC" as many times as he chooses on the basis of penny a vote.

The contest, held annually at many universities, is sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity. A plaque designed by L. G. Balfour and Co. will be presented to the winner of the contest by the president of APO at a meeting of the winner's sponsoring organization.

"Any male student registered can enter the contest. It is not necessary but recommended that they be sponsored by an organization," said Randal Ethridge, chairman of the UMOC committee.

Each organization wishing to sponsor a candidate must submit three 5 by 7 inch prints of his picture. Ethridge indicates that these may be obtained for approximately $2.50 from the Photo Lab. "for the whole works."

The applications must be turned in by 4p. m. April 9. They may be turned in or mailed to the Alpha Phi Omega office, Basement of Smith Dormitory. The office is open from 1 'till 4 daily.

Baseball Set To Open Here Against Dartmouth Monday

By RUSTY HAMMOND

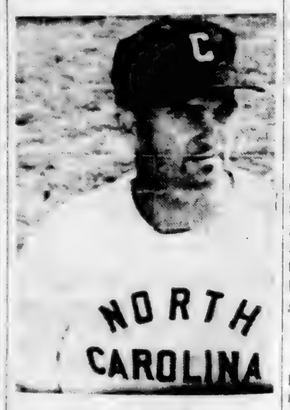
Experience and depth should be the strongest points in the favor of this season's Carolina baseball Tar Heels.

The Heels, who finished in a tie for first place in the ACC last year and were beaten by Clemson in a play-off game, return all but three of last year's starters.

The missing men are third baseman Al Pons, shortstop Roger Honeycutt and second baseman Carson Oldham, who formed the guts of last year's infield. Pons led the team in RBI's and Oldham paced the club in batting.

Outfield Back

Coach Walt Rabb has the same starting outfield back which last year showed power, speed, and agility. Tommy Saintsing Gerald Griffin and Captain John Burgwyn are all back, but may be pushed by soph Russ Hollers or Bruce Crump. Crump was converted from catcher due to a bad arm.



WALT RABB
. . . Baseball boss

The biggest rebuilding job Rabb faces is in the infield, with three of the starting four missing. It's not as bad as it sounds however, for there are experienced reserves ready to fill the shoes of the departed veterans. Vaughn Bryson, a starter last year, returns at first base. Larry Craver has the inside track toward the second base job. Harold Workman has moved from third to short, and Rabb said he "feels like he can do the job."

Jerry Nestor has the first shot at third base, but may be pushed by two fine sophomores—Ferg Norton and Jim Camp.

Pitching Strong

The pitching staff looks strong with reliable Wayne Young, all-ACC last year, and Ben Harding two proven starters back. Johnny Johnson, a cool and collected reliefer, returns in that capacity. Dave Floyd, another relief man, is back for another stint at fireman chores.

Best of the sophomore crop looks like two big right-handers, John Stott and Bob Deaton. Rabb said the biggest hinderance to his pitchers so far this season has been the weather. It has been sunny, but not warm enough to let them really throw hard.

Rabb commented that he has "hard working boys and our morale is good." When asked about the type of ball his boys will play, he said it would be much like last year's squad. Last season the Tar Heels were the league's darkhorse, the surprising team that won games by one run on stolen bases and squeeze plays.

Dartmouth Here Monday

The first opposition is stiff in the person of two northern teams, Dartmouth and Connecticut. Both teams were in the NCAA District 1 playoffs last year.

Dartmouth is here Monday and they are coached by former major leaguer Tony Lupian. Connecticut visits Chapel Hill Tuesday, they are coached by Christy Christian, vice-president of the coaches association. sunny Florida for three days of baseball at Tallahassee in the Florida State Invitational. They will face Florida State, Florida and Illinois in the three days.

Clemson Team To Beat

Taking a long look around the conference, Rabb felt sure that Clemson must be established as the team to beat. He cited other strong clubs as Wake Forest and Maryland, plus his Tar Heels.

When asked about student support, Rabb commented, "We have good student support here. This is a baseball state and our students like baseball." Last year Emerson Stadium was packed almost every game.

University Volleyball

Once again the University Volleyball members have hung up their tatered and beaten shoes and returned to the smoke filled gloom of their offices. The results of spring session are something that each member can be proud of regardless of his team.

There was a three way tie for for first place between the Red, White and Blue teams. In fourth place was the Grey team followed by the Green team and last was the Yellow team.

Splash Club Show Monday

The Splash Club is now preparing for their Water Ballet, "Night Mist," to be presented Monday night at 8:00 in the indoor pool. The organization is made up of girls selected in the fall through tryouts. These sixteen girls have been attending weekly practice sessions, and have recently begun preparation for their annual presentation.

The numbers for the show were written and directed by members of the Club, and will be performed to the music of familiar songs around the theme, "Night Mist," Monday night. The Splash Club, headed by Chairman Carolyn Donnelly and Faculty Advisor Mary Frances Kellam, consists of the following members:

British Concede

LONDON — — The British flung aside their patriotic pride Thursday and conceded Brian London's chances against world heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson are negligible.

A top London bookie, Douglas Stuart, made Patterson the 10-1 favorite to whip the home-grown London in their title fight at Las Vegas April 21.

Those odds, offered by a shrewd businessman who normally could expect a flood of home money for the local boy, prove that even the British regard London as a "no-hoper."

Netters In Rebuilding Year

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"The success of the team will depend on the development of the sophomores and juniors." That is the feeling of tennis coach Don Skakle as he awaits the start of the varsity season on Saturday.

Skakle, who has replaced Vladimir Cernik as the Carolina net coach, will unveil his varsity crew tomorrow in a practice match against the Chapel Hill Men's Tennis Team before settling down to collegiate opposition next Tuesday and Wednesday with matches against Illinois.

A year ago the Carolina net team was the Atlantic Coast Conference champion as it completely dominated play in the ACC by losing only one out of fifty-three individual matches. Overall the '58 Tar Heel netters posted a 10-2 record.

Squad Losses

Gone from this powerful crew are Bob Bortner, the conference singles champion, Steve Bank, who teamed with Bortner to take the doubles crown, Malcolm Clark, the number four man, and number six man Dick Makepeace. Makepeace actually had another year of eligibility but gave it up on leaving school.

"We're not going to be as strong this year," the coach stated, "but it's a building team. I think we will be quite well balanced in the first six even though we have no outstanding player. As the season goes on I imagine that two or three could really develop."

The two starters back from last ycar's squad are senior Geoff Black and junior Ben Keys. Added to this twosome are Marshall Happer and Walter Lockett who saw limited action during the season.

Sophomore Picture

Sophomores Bruce Sylvia and Dee Heather have the inside track in the running for the other two open spots in the first six, but as Skakle puts it, "the other positions are wide open."

For Skakle, a veteran tennis player and pro, serving as both varsity and freshman mentor at Carolina is his first major college coaching job. Despite being a rookie to the Tar Heel courts as a coach, he was quite familiar with them as a player.

Skakle performed on Carolina tennis team under John Kenfield between 1945 and 1950 when Vic Sexias headed the Tar Heel net squads. Since that time he has been the pro at the Greensboro Country Club and for the past several years in business at Hatteras.

The Schedule

March—21, Chapel Hill (home); 24, Illinois (home); 25, Illinois (home; 27, Rollins (away); 28, Rollins (away).

April—3, Maryland (home); 4, Virginia (home); 6; South Carolina (away); 10, Davidson (home); 13, Clemson (home); 16, N. C. State (home); 23, Davidson (away); 29, Duke (home).

May—1, Georgetown (away); 2, George Washington (away); 4, Wake Forest (away); 6-8, ACC Tournament (Raleigh).

LACROSSE TEAM

All those interested in playing lacrosse this spring are asked to come to a meeting in Room 304 of Woollen Gym this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Plans for the formation of a squad will be discussed at this time.

Jones Withdraws From Race For Editorship

Monday Deadline Set For Nominating Petitions

The deadline for nominating petitions for any student wishing to run for an office in the April 7 elections must be turned into the Elections Board by Monday.

Hank Patterson, Elections Board Chairman, said that all nominations for an office must be in writing and presented to the board by 7 p.m. Monday in the student government office in Graham Memorial. The office will remain open until that time.

There will be a compulsory meeting of all candidates on the same day at 7:15 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The purpose of the meeting is to acquaint the candidates with the general election law regulations.

Patterson said no candidate should spend any money until he has consulted the General Election Law.

Any student who is unable to vote at the proper polling place because of being in the infirmary, absent from Chapel Hill or any other reason approved by the Elections Board may obtain an absentee ballot.

A written request for an absentee ballot must be made to Patterson prior to 5 p.m. April 3, except when a student must leave campus on short notice.

The ballot must be returned in a signed sealed enveloped to the Elections Board before the polls close April 7.

Patterson announced that the following positions are open for nomination: President, vice president, secretary and treasurer of the student body; president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman of the senior class; three senior seats on the Student Council; three seats on the Men's Honor Council; three seats on the Women's Honor Council.

Chairman of the Women's Residence Council, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, president of the Women's Athletic Association, editor-in-chief of The Daily Tar Heel, editor-in-chief of the Yackety Yack, head cheerleader.

The following seats are open in the Legislature: one 1-year seat and one 6-month seat in Dorm Men's I, one 1-year seat in Dorm Men's II, two 1-year seats and two 6-month seats in Dorm Men's III, two 1-year seats in Dorm Men's IV, one 1-year seat in Dorm Men's V, two 1-year seats in Dorm Men's VI.

One 1-year seat in Dorm Women's I, one 1-year seat in Dorm Women's II, one 1-year seat and one 6-month seat in Town Men's I, two 1-year seats in Town Men's II, three 1-year seats and one 6-month seat in Town Men's III, six 1-year seats and one 6-month seat in Town Men's IV and two 1-year seats in Town Women's I.

5 Fraternities Draw Penalties For Burnings

Five UNC fraternities have been penalized for their participation in the hearse and piano burning incidents that occurred Feb. 15.

The punishments were handed down this week by the Interfraternity Council Court. Tom Rand, a member of the court, said Friday that a number of fraternities had been investigated, but only five were brought to trial.

The names of the fraternities penalized were not released, according to IFC policy.

One fraternity was put on social probation for burning a piano in big fraternity court early Sunday morning, Feb. 15. The probation means a denial of the fraternity's visiting agreement privilege and of organized parties for six weeks.

Two fraternities were fined $100 and $125 and give official reprimands for their part in burning a hearse Sunday afternoon. Also for the hearse burning, two other fraternities were given offcial reprimands.

All five fraternities were found guilty of conduct unbecoming a Carolina fraternity.

The 4 Greek organizations that participated in the hearse burning were given different sentences depending on the degree of guilt and participation, Rand said.

For 1960 Student Government

Solons Get Budget Bill

A bill asking approval of the 1960 student government budget was presented to Student Legislature Thursday night by Charlie Gray (UP), student body treasurer.

Concerning his bill, Gray said Friday, "The Budget Committee has done an outstanding job in reviewing the request and merit of each organization and we feel that their requests have been dealt with in an appropriate manner."

The committee tried to grant each organization adequate appropriations at the same time leaving the Legislature an ample unappropriated balance, according to Gray.

He concluded, "I hope the budget will be accepted without much trouble."

The budget will be considered by the solons next week.

Also under new business, a resolution was introduced by Jim Crownover (SP) to declare student government policy in the area of enforcement of the drinking rule.

If sanctioned, the Legislature would go on record as recommending to the Drinking Rules Committee that (1) ungentlemanly conduct due to excessive drinking is a violation of the Campus Code, (2) the Orientation Committee be directed to thoroughly emphasize the above in presenting the Campus Code and Drinking Rule, (3) initial presentation of such be publicized through dorm meetings, Daily Tar Heel and chapter and pledge meetings and (4) continued emphasis be given the problem throughout the year.

Ann Harvey (UP) introduced a bill to change the method of selection of Honor Council jurors from interviewing to automatic placement by application.

During discussion Thursday night of the written report of the Ways and Means Committee concerning Dave Jones' (SP) resolution to have Lenoir Hall student workers paid in cash, efforts by Jones to have corrections made in the written report were overruled by Speaker Ralph Cummings.

Jones took the floor to insert in the record certain minor changes and to explain more fully what had taken place in the committee meeting the day before.

A motion to overrule the chair and give Jones the right to speak was voted down by the body.

Cast For 'Oh, Hellas!' Production Announced

Jane Newsom will star as Lysistrata in the May 1 and 2 Sound and Fury productin of "Oh, Hella!"

The names of other members of the 1959 Sound and Fury cast were announced Friday. It was also announced that students may still try out for vancancies on the chorus and the dance group. One member of the cast, Gen. Lardass Prominus, has not been filled.

Tryouts and practice will continue Monday from 7 to 9 p.m. for coeds and 9 to 11 p.m. for men.

Miss Newsom will be joined in the "Oh, Hellas!" production by these other members of the cast: Al Miller as Lykon, Sandy Reggenie as Arthritis, Bill Monell as Demetrius, Nancy Aubrey as Calonika, Jane Durham as Myrrhina, Mickey Reid as Lampito, Wally Graham as Kinesias and Paul Burroughs as Philinus.

The Athenian women will include Jo Carpenter, Mary Margaret Brown and Missy Gelzer.

Portraying Athenian men will be Tony Lampron, Roy Weaver and Curtis Russell. The messenger will be Dave Barringer.

Members of the chorus selected thus far are Mary Todd Baker, Joan Brooks, Peppy Currie, Judy Redhead, Cynthia Grant, Susie Cordon, Louise Crumbley, Joe Holbrook, Daniel Jelline, Lloyd Infinger, William Morse, Angeline Papazisis, Betsy Clopper and Pat Stanton.

The dancing parts have not been selected.

The May 1 and 2 performances are being coordinated by producer Al Salley. Script writers were Lew Hardee and Carl Bridgers.

Students who have not returned scripts which they borrowed have been asked to take them to Graham Memorial.

Young Comments On Sports

Davis Young, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, Friday called for "more sweat and liniment" in the newspaper's sports reporting.

Young said the newspaper does a good job of covering the events themselves, "but the interviews with coaches and players, the intimate background glimpses are missing."

"Feature articles," said the candidates, "are the lifeblood of sports reporing. Fans want the 'inside dope' and we will do our best to give it to them."

Young also stated his views on "big-time athletcis." He noted that it is almost as easy to criticize Coach Jim Tatum as it is to criticize the ROTC.

"Tatum by his own admission is 'a country boy.' And we have had entirely too many inept 'city slickers' criticizing Tatum in The Daily Tar Heel. The truth of the matter is that Tatum is a smart 'country boy.'

"He knows perfectly well that the rules have been changed since his great days at Maryland. He is following all the recruiting rules scrupulously and should be commended for it. If it is possible to have 'victory with honor,' and I believe it is possible, then the UNC athletic department is a model for the entire nation."

The editorial candidate also expressed his appreciation for the endorsement of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

Throws His Support To Shumate, O'Tuel

DAVE JONES

Dave Jones yesterday withdrew as a candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel and threw his complete support to the candidacy of Harold O.Tuel and Ron Shumate.

Jones explained that his failure to get the Bi-Partisan Selection Board endorsement was a factor, but that his other responsibilities as a student legislator and University Club President must be discharged as competently as possible.

Jones added, "Since there are now two qualified candidates in the race, I feel it senseless that I should give them competition rather than support."

"I'm sorry that the Bi-Partisan Board chose to do what it did, but I still believe that I have all the capabilities and energy necessary to be a good editor, and I hope that whoever gets to be editor will carry through with some of the ideas I presented so far in my campaign," Jones explained.

"I want to thank all those who have assisted me thus far in the campaign and all those who had decided to vote for me. I urge you to support Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel, and I offer them my complete support." Jones concluded.

"I was surprised to see Dave resign from the race," announced Ron Shumate, "but I would like to thank him for the support he is giving Harold and myself. It is only with this type of support both now and if and when we are elected that we can turn out a better Daily Tar Heel."

Harold O'Tuel, when reached for comment, said, "I was sorry to see that Dave didn't receive the endorsement of the Bi-Partisan Board. I have always felt him a qualified person and one that would be extremely hard to lick in the election. I want to thank him for his support, and I hope he will never have cause to regret his decision."

IDC Prexy Will Head Campaign

Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate, candidates for the co-editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, announced Rudy Edwards as their campaign manager. Edwards is president of the Inter-Dormitory Council and a Former Student Party Floor leader.

Assisting Edwards will be Dick Robinson, Attorney General of the student body Symposium Chairman and a Morehead scholar; Lucy Posgate, president of McIver Dormitory, a member of the Women's Residence Council, and a member of the University Party.

Edwards declared that the "entrance of O'Tuel and Shumate in the race for editor of the Daily Tar Heel gives the voters a chance to vote for mature leadership that had been previously lacking."

He further stated that O'Tuel and Shumate have shown their ability to "work under pressure and have refused to wilt in the face of adverse circumstances. Both are juniors and exemplify the deliberate, couragious and mature type of person that is needed for an editor of the Daily Tar Heel."

He said that O'Tuel and Shumate "are unquestionably the most qualified candidates" for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

"The task of publishing a daily college newspaper has almost grown too big for one person to handle," Edwards asserted.

"When two people assume the office of Daily Tar Heel editor and divide the responsibilities between them, it allows for more efficient administrative, editorial and managerial policy to be enforced."

Edwards explained that in the case of co-editors it is imperative that a good understanding exist between the two editors, and that "this is true" in the case of O'Tuel and Shumate.

"They have already discussed at length and agreed as to how the duties of their offices are to be divided," Edwards said. "Harmony and a good working agreement between the two candidates for co-editors has already been established. Each understands fully what his job is; and each is capable of executing the responsibilities of his office."

Robinson asserted that few people on the University campus "have evinced a more sincere interest in effective and conscientious student government than Harold O'Tuel, and everyone has had adequate opportunity to read the excellent work of Ron Shumate, who is currently a valuable member of the Daily Tar Heel staff."

He further stated that the combination "of the talents of these two individuals will result in an editorship of the highest quality. Their objective and informed approach to important issues will serve the best interests of all areas of campus life."

Miss Harvey said that she feels that "having two people as editor of the Daily Tar Heel would prevent the ideas, views and character of any one person from being evident on all pages of the Daily Tar Heel."

Petite Musicale Here To Star Brother Trio

The Pasquier Trio of Paris will present a concert on the Petite Musicale series here Tuesday.

The three brothers—Jean, violinist; Pierre, violist, and Etienne, cellist—will perform at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. (The concert was originally scheduled for Gerrard Hall.)

The musicians are able to make the trip to the United States only every two or three years because of their heavy schedule in Europe.

The family trio began their musical education at the School of Music at Tours and later continued their studies at the Conservatory in Paris from which they were graduated with honors.

The Pasquier Trio made its debuts at the Salle des Agriculteurs in Paris in 1927. International recognition followed and they were established with an unequalled reputation as a string trio.

Russell Link, chairman of Petite Musicale, noted, "The success of the Pasquier Trio is not surprising since it is composed of three brothers who have united their work and art since youth. They form a unique ensemble on the world scene . . . for more than 30 years the composition of this group has been unchanged, a record neither equalled nor surpassed."

He said the public is invited to attend the concert free of admission charge.

The program will include works by Beethoven, Schonberg and Dolenyoni.

The repertoire of the Pasquier Trio ranges from the classics to contemporary compositions. Many of the works were especially written for the group by such modern masters as Hindemith, Villa-Lobs, Milhaud, Martinu and Rouseel.

Yack Editor Interviews To Continue

The BiPartisan Selections Board will meet Monday afternoon to interview candidates for the Yackety Yack editorship.

The board is holding this session because it decided not to endorse either of the two candidates who were interviewed Friday afternoon.

Appearing before the board Friday were Mike Smith and Jerry Adams.

The board deliberated two hours before deciding not to give its endorsement to either person.

Any other student interest in running for the editorship has been asked to contact Harold O'Tuel or John Minter as soon as possible.

Class Presidents Urge Budget Request Support

Presidents of the freshmen, sophomore and junior classes issued a statement Friday concerning the University's budget requests for the next biennium.

Speaking for their respective classes, Jey Deifell, freshman; Davis Young, sophomore, and Wade Smith, junior, urged students to take an active interest in the budget fight now going on in Raleigh.

"We feelt hat unless restorations are made in the 'A' and 'B' budgets, this University cannot continue to hold its position as one of the ranking institutions of higher learning in the South," they said.

The presidents stated that they are urging students of their classes to write to the legislators from their home districts.

They gave the following three point plan to aid the University officials "to win this crucial point:" 1. conserted personnal interest from students, 2. effective lobbying, and 3. loyal support of student government.

"We hope that students in our classes will back us on this point and make contact with their lawmakers in Raleigh. Only through constant pressure can our financial goals be achieved," the presidents reported.

They also pledged their support to President William C. Friday and Chancellor William B. Aycock. "We are ready to do all within our power to aid them."

Any student needing information on the budget may contact either Deifell, Young or Smith.

Orientation Counselors Wanted

Students interested in becoming foreign student orientation counselors are asked to contact Marcy Klingel Foreign Student Orientation chairman, or the campus orientation office in Graham Memorial.

Plans are now underway for an extensive foreign student orientation program next fall under the auspices of the general Orientation Committee.

The main objectives of the foreign student program will be to give the incoming foreign students informal contacts with American and foreign students already at UNC and to aid them in their first few days in Chapel Hill.

There will be two phase of the program. The formal phase will consist of meetings and social affairs and the informal phase will include personal contact through correspondence between the arriving student and his designated counselor. Also the counselor will meet the foreign student upon his arrival in Chapel Hill.

The committee hopes to have one counselor for each incoming foreign student.

Eisenhower, Macmillan Confer On Berlin Issue

GETTYSBURG, Pa. — (AP) — President Eisenhower and Britain's Prime Minister Harold Macmillan met atop a woody mountain summit yesterday to search for an allied strategy that would shield West Berlin from Russia's threats.

Assisted by four advisers each, they began a sweeping review of the outlook for Berlin, the German nation and international disarmament—problems they hope to discuss with Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev at a possible summit conference this summer.

Eisenhower and Macmillan flew in a helicopter to the President's secluded mountain lodge at Camp David to begin their extraordinary four-day conference. The 35-minute flight was made in bright, spring-like weather.

Eisenhower chose the rustic site to give the two Western leaders maximum privacy as they sought to reconcile somewhat conflicting views on what concessions should be offered the Soviets in a new round of East-West talks.

Some 100 rifle-carrying Marines guarded the 134-acre camp where the two men met, 26 miles from the Press Headquarters set up at Gettysburg.

Eisenhower and Macmillan sat down to outline their personal views after having a 37-minute talk with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles about the Berlin crisis.

The meeting with Dulles took place in Walter Reed Army Hospital, Washington, where Dulles has been under treatment for cancer. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd, who accompanied Macmillan to Camp David, took part in this session.

The ailing Dulles, garbed in a maroon dressing robe, was understood to have stressed the need to avoid any proposals which would bolster the Allied foothold in Berlin to the cost of freezing the present East-West division of Germany.

The State Department in reporting on the talk said nothing about the views Dulles expressed. A statement made it clear, however, that Dulles put forward some of the ideas he has developed about the German problem since he was hospitalized last month.

"The 57-minute visit provided a welcome opportunity for four good friends to meet and talk informally," the statement said.

"The conversation included some preliminary discussion of the great problems raised by Soviet threats to the Allied position in Berlin which the President and the Prime Minister will be dealing with over the weekend at Camp David."

As the Anglo-American talks got under way, informants in Paris reported that France's President Charles De Gaulle has sent a secret message to Eisenhower on the Berlin problem.

Eisenhower was reported already

Solicitations To Begin

The senior class Alumni Committee will conduct its solicitations of all spring practice teachers Monday through Wednesday.

This year the Alumni Association plans a special rate for seniors who join the association this spring. A fee of $1 gains membership and each member is intitled to 20 issues of the Alumni Review, including 10 football supplements.

The Alumni Review contains news about the alumni and monthly reports on the UNC scene.

In additin to the Alumni Review, the association dispatches letters and notices of meetings and class reunions. The special $1 rate is a saving of $4.

Members of the senior Alumni Committee are Lucy Forsyth, Susan Saunders, Hamp Lefler, Bill King and Jack Secrest.

What Orientation Counselors Do

How They Meet Carolina

By JOHN FRYE

(Editor's note: Through April 2, men are being asked to apply for orientation counselors in the fall. The following article has been written by a member of the Orientation Committee describing what some of the work by counselors will include.)

"It is 10:15, time to go for the library tour. Where is that Smith character? He should have met us this morning at 10 o'clock by the Old Well. By the way, have all of you studied your pamphlets on the Honor System? You know your quiz on it will be given this afternoon.

"Now before lunch we will take a short tour of the campus. Here is the new addition to Phillips Hall, the math and physics building which will house the new three of the oldest buildings: electronic computer. Here are Old East, Old West, and Gerrard Hall. It's noon now so we had better go to Lenoir Hall for lunch with all of the other counselors It certainly was nice of Mr. Prillaman to give us free meals during the entire week of orientation.

"Well, now that everyone is here at last, we will have our short quiz on the Honor System. Then I will discuss UNC's unique system of student government until time to go to the Tin Can for the activities session. The activities session will give all of you an opportunity to learn something about the various extra curricular activities on campus such as the Di and the Phi. There will be games to play and prizes for the winners.

"Five-thirty - Man has this day gone by and it is already time for the picnic on Emerson Field. I hope all of you will be among the first in line so you won't have to wait so long. Then tonight we have the free flicks. This day surely has been crowded with big events, but it is not any different from any of the other days of Orientation Week.

"Remember Chancellor Aycock's welcoming address and then the big dance with the girls from WC on Saturday evening? Then we really had a field day - and those open houses at the women's dorms? - WOW! I have enjoyed and gained so much from this week that I wouldn't dare miss the chance to be a counselor again next year.

"The only things I had to do last spring to become a counselor were to study the counselor's manual for a quiz on campus life, and to be interviewed by the Orientation Committee. Then we had three counselor's training sessions and David Parker, Orientation chairman, instructed us on some of the many things we might encounter during Orientation Week.

"Even with the enjoyment I had from the entire Orientation Program, I believe that the best feeling I had was t know that I had helped a group of new students make a successful start in the 'Carolina Way of Life.'"

Forged Book Checkouts Raise Library Problem

"There has been a rash of students checking books out of the Library in some one else's name," Larry Taylor, chairman of the Library Committee, said recently.

He explained that in the "past couple of weeks" a greater number of students have been checking books out of the Undergraduate Library with some other person's name or a false name.

Taylor stated that this was an honor council offense and urged all students to use their own names in checking out books.

The Budget

A lot has been said about the budget of the University and of the state, and a lot more needs to be said. America in general is faced with an education crisis that is not dependent upon but is heightened by the Russian challenge to the freedom of all people in the world.

It is difficult to assess in dollars and cents the value of education in the world, but it is clear that the development of brainpower is the most important resource development project that can be undertaken in this rapidly moving world of today. It is important that a democracy which is more dependent on intelligent leadership than any other form of government do its utmost to develop its educational resources to its highest level.

It is probably insufficient to say that if all the resources of the United States were poured into education the product would be great, for a concrete evaluation of the educational system is needed before real progress can be made.

Yet, it is important to make clear that the chances for improving education are much improved if professors don't go to industry and teachers on lower levels to stenographic or sales work. It is clear that the more books a library has, the more chance a student will have to be more knowledgeable.

The issue that the General Assembly faces is whether their commitment to education is basic enough for them to take back to the voters new taxes which are not something that are now or ever have been popular. The issue is whether they are capable of leading the people of this state to greatness by their leadership in the field of education, or whether they will become more concerned about the effect of new taxation on their popularity.

It is true that this state spends a higher percentage of its total budget on education than do many other states in the nation, but if this is still not enough, then the state must dig deeper into its resources in order to supply sufficient funds.

The picture here at the University is clear. The road to mediocrity lies with the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations, and if they are going to be the working model of the state's budget with only minor additions, then the fate of the University will not be a pretty one.

There was a professor from State College sitting next to the editor at the meeting of the Joint Appropriations Committee Wednesday who said that he and many of his colleagues would probably leave if the budget was not changed. He pointed out that it was already a sacrifice for him to teach in this locale. If the state is going to keep men like this professor and many, many others, then it will have to change its budgetary thinking.

The General Assembly has the future of the state in its hands. One can hope that they will deal wisely with it.

Consolidated University Needs

William C. Friday

PART II

"B" BUDGETS

I should like now to turn to our "B" budget requets. As you know, it is in this budget that we placed our requests for additional salary funds for our faculty and staff, our request for increased library support, for additional personnel to improve our present programs, for equipment, and finally our requests for new educational programs and new activities and services.

The salary requests will be discussed by Vice President Carmichael following statements I should now like to ask each of our Chancellors to make in behalf of their institutions.

FACULTY SALARIES

The University administration has taken the position that increased appropriations for the improvement of faculty salaries is the most urgent item in our "B" budget. We maintain quality in our faculty by keeping the able and productive people we have or those we are in the process of developing, and by attracting new competence and ability to our faculties.

The 1957 session of the General Assembly saved the University from what could have been a very severe depletion of its faculty. The salary funds provided, along with the right to the administration to use discretion in the allocation of these funds, enabled the University to keep many of its fine people.

Our present difficulty arises from the severity of the competition we face, and this competition will increase each year for several years to come as enrollments increase in institutions of higher learning all across our country. I want to ask Vice President Carmichael to present some facts to you on the problems we face in maintaining a faculty and staff now numbering more than 3,300 persons.

CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS

The University along with all other state-supported institutions of higher learning participated in the development of the long-rang buliding program proposed by the Board of Higher Education. The case for this ten-year program was ably stated to you by Major McLendon last Wednesday.

In preparing our requests for Capital Improvements we followed these prescribed categories: first, were the requests for renovations, reconstruction and minor alterations to make our existing facilities more usable; in the second category we listed the major additions to our existing facilities, and in our third category we set forth our requests for the construction of new facilities.

We appreciate the recommendations made by the Budget Commission in each of these categories for buildings and facilities for the coming biennium. Today we ask partcularly for your approval of the projects set forth in our biennial list which the Commission either disapproved or for which they did not recommend the full amount of money estimated by us and in some instances by the Department of Administration as necessary to construct these facilities.

MEMORIAL HOSPITAL — AN AREA OF CONCERN

Among these specific projects which are set forth in the printed materials we have submited to you are such requests as the replacement of the horticulture greenhouses, a new access road from Western Boulevard, and the addition to the animal disease diagnostic laboratory at State College; additions to several classroom buildings and certain facilities at Woman's College; and at Chapel Hill the restoration of requests to complete the construction of additions to several buildings, the renovation of certain old classroom buildings, and the construction of new classroom and language buildings at the square footage originally proposed.

We appreciate the recommendations of the Commission for new construction at each of our campuses. I should like to refer specifically to the requests made for a Public Health Building and for a Student Union at Chapel Hill. Our original request for a Public Health Building was based on the possibility of securing a rather substantial Federal grant to supplement the state appropriation to construct this facility. The amount recommended by the Commission will not enable us to obtain the full amount of the Federal grant originally approved for this project and this means that we shall not be able to obtain the classrom space, laboratory and research areas so greatly needed in this program. We urge a restoration of the state appropriation to the full amount requested.

The Student Union requested for the University at Chapel Hill is vitally needed. Our experience with the facilities provided by the state at Woman's College and State College clearly demonstrates the need and importance of a student union to the total educational experience of our students. We strongly urge your approval of this request as a great forward step in student welfare at the University.

Finally, we obviously and certainly support the Advisory Budget Commission in its recommendation of a bond issue to finance the capital improvement program for state institutions and agencies.

SUMMARY

I should like to close our presentation with these observations. It has been our purpose in these statements to communicate the fact that these months of budget discussion and preparation have been spent determining the requests we should make to you to maintain and strengthen our three-fold University, known throughout the world for the excellence of its teaching, its research, and its service.

As I have gone about the state during recent months, I have found the people deeply concerned about education and what we should be doing in our public schools, our colleges, and the University. I believe that they are willing to do what will be necessary, including the provision of increased support, to strengthen public education, for they know we must move forward at all levels if we are to advance the general welfare and well-being of our pepole. I say this because I believe our people are convinced of the vital importance and urgency of providing the best educational opportunity within their means and resources to provide.

I would say to those of us who have attended private institutions that we must do more as individuals to encourage their growth and development, for their progress also is essential to the development of North Carolina.

You and I are the beneficiaries of the great courage and leadership of Governor Aycock, of Joyner, McIver, Poe, the Grahams, Alderman, Polk, and many others in education in North Carolina. Theirs was the vision that education is the underpinning of progress in our state. It is equally true today; North Carolina's future does surely rest on what we do now to strengthen our public schools, our community colleges, our four-year colleges, and the Consolidated University.

You, as the representatives of all the people, must decide what the future will hold for public education. We have great faith that you will respond to the challenge and that North Carolina, through the education and enlightenment of its young people, will continue to make her significant contribution of leadership in the South and to the peace and security of our nation and the world in which we live.

THE BELL TOWER — THE UNIVERSITY'S EXTERIOR

A Letter

Editor:

Perhaps too many letters have been written to this newspaper concerning apathy and the failure of the average student to accept a feeling of responsibility toward his education and his educational system. Certainly too many letters and articles have been printed and ignored by the student body. But is this situation not worthy of careful consideration by every student here? Is it not mandatory at this point in history that we evaluate and re-evaluate the institution of our society and our relation as students with them—especially the ones that shape the minds and opinions of our leaders, that train us (if we are to be trained) to run our nation (if we are to continue to run this nation of ours.

All too many students here take the overly-passive view of themselves as merely inhabitants of the college community, the objects of education rather than the most integral part of the educational system. They regard themselves as individuals in the process of "becoming" rather than "being." Through such rationalization, these students put off conideration of issues basic to the future of our nation, and in so doing not only limit their present education but place themselves in danger of forfeiting the future for which they are supposedly preparing themselves.

But what can one do? Down-with-apathy letters to the editor seem to be of negligible value. Anyone have any suggestions?

IFC Rush Report

The IFC

PART II

7. Impossibility of Silence. Assuming there will be silence, we feel that it is ridiculous not to be able to speak to freshmen for a semester. This would create a class discrimination that would not be out of harmony with the friendly atmosphere on this campus. Deferred rush without silence would be impossible. The time consumed by rushing for a semester rather than one week would be disastrous gradewise.

In summary, this committee feels that deferred rush is impractical and undesirable. The possible benefits of deferred rush are greatly outweighted by the damage that would be done to fraternities.

Since rush affects fraternities more acutely than anyone else, it is this committee's recommendation that fraternities make their own decisions concerning rush, not an outside group. We feel that fraternities are a benefit and a positive good on this campus. Our system is not perfect, but deferred rush is not the answer. The IFC is evolving yearly as a stronger body, and the decision should rest there, as that body best knows the fraternity situation. High minded idealism is all right in its place, but not at the expence of the fraternity system. (These reasons have been reviewed and approved by the IFC.)

This spring, Tennessee William's "Sweet Bird of Youth" will wing its way from a nesting place of winter bitterness and frustrations of the heart and alight on Broadway for who knows how long?

It will bring its message in three acts to commutters who stay in the city for the evening, to out-of-state tourists, to drama lovers, drama critics, and to city theater goers, all who have purchased tickets to see "the new Williams play."

This month's Esquire has printed in full the author's working script, which gives those readers who will not see the play a chance to know it and which gives those readers who will later see the play an opportunity to note William's unusual production notes with which he helps the director set the mood.

"Sweet Bird of Youth" is the story of two people—an aging movie star who knows she is finished, and a twenty-nine-year-old man who has spent the springtime of his life dreaming, waiting, and knocking on doors which will not be opened to him. He wanted to be a great actor ever since his high school play won honorable mention in the state festival . . . only, now as he looks back in hazy pride, the play won second prize. . . or was it first?

The play opens in a hotel bedroom in the Royal Palms Hotel in the southern town of Saint Cloud. It is Easter Sunday, and the man and the movie actress are in bed. Chance Wayne, the man, is awake, but his companion is sleeping soundly, muttering and wheezing in her sleep. "She had a rough night," he tells, Fly, the bellman.

While the woman sleeps, Chance has an early visitor who warns him to "get out of Saint Cloud;" the visitor is the town's surgeon who operated on Chance's girlfriend, Heavenly Finley; the operation was necessitated by "the foul contamination which Chance planted in her body," and Heavenly's father, Boss Finley, has threatened to castrate Chance if he doesn't get out of town by dark. But Chance has returned with the aging film star, Princess Pazmezoglu, to prove to Heavenly that he has finally made it in the right doors. He gets the Princess to sign a fake contract stating that he will star in a picture for her studio, and equipped with contract, the Princess's traveler's choques, and the Princess's cadillac with trumpet horns, he goes out into the morning to impress Heavenly. The Princess makes only one demand on him before he leaves and that is to "make her forget" by pretending once again they are young lovers and have nothing to be ashamed of.

As the play progresses, we are introduced to Heavenly's father who is the political boss of the area and reminds us very much of Big Daddy in "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof." He is upset today because he has an important political rally at the hotel Royal Palms tonight and because he has heard that Chance Wayne, contaminator of his pure daughter, is back in town.

He calls his daughter, Heavenly, to him and she comes dripping in from the beach where she has been lying like a dead body washed from the sea. She tells her daddy about the vision she had in church just this morning: the blessed Virgin had replaced all her "life-giving organs" which had been cut out the year before after a meeting with Chance Wayne in California. Heavenly is a faded beauty now who lives in a dream world of lost love and seashore visions .We keep remembering Blanche DuBois in "A Streetcar" whose symbolic name is synonymous with Heavenly's and whose celestial whiteness and youth have been violated.

Boss Finley decides to take his daughter to the rally with him and have her sit on the stage dressed in white "like a real virgin" and look proudly out into the crowd and deny all those vicious rumors about her "operation." Boss Finley is campaigning for action against "contamination of the white southern blood by racial mixture." Last week, his henchmen performed a delicate operation on a young Negro who had made a pass at a white girl. Boss Finley plans to have the same operation performed on Wayne. "He had my daughter cut and now he's gonna be cut."

The evening finally comes and the drama bubbles to a boiling point as Chance, Boss Finley, Heavenly, the Princess, and a menagerie of related characters—Finley's mistress, an agitator, a bartender, an assistant hotel manager—are drawn together in the Royal Palm Hotel.

The rally is a fiasco, the agitator yells out in the middle of Boss Finley's "Vision of Good" speech: "Tell us about your daughter's operation!" and Heavenly collapses.

Chance returns beaten by the sights he has seen at the Rally, and by too much whisky and marihuana. He and the Princess plan to leave Saint Cloud that night. But the old movie queen scrapes together enough dignity in her past glories to tell him first: "You've gone past something you couldn't afford to go past; your time, your youth. You've passed it and it's all you've had and you've had it. Of course you were crowned with laurel in the beginning, your gold hair was wreathed with laurel, but the gold is thinning and the laurel is withered . . ."

The tragice point of self- realization comes for Chance when the Princess hurries him in leaving the room.

"I'm not part of your luggage," he says.

"What else can you be?" she answers.

"Nothing."

Here, Mr. Williams inserts a note that this "nothing" is not to be said with self-pity, but with self-awakening.

Chance knows what he is. He is an almost middle-aged lothario with thinning hair who has cashed in on all his stock—YOUTH. He no longer has that pass key which admitted him into "some of the best rooms of the best people." And, now, his pink cheeks and hard muscles are disappearing into a blur of dissolution. He is a piece of luggage, and the bird of youth has flown the coop.

Not a play to be read on late afternoons with orange sun making squares on the floor—especially if you are a person who is young and use this as your only weapon; and most certainly if you are a person who is not young and have dreamed away your golden days.

to have replied to De Gaulle's message. The Paris sources said the French leader sent his letter earlier in the week.

The White House Press Secretary, James Hagerty, was at Camp David and unavailable for comment on the report. The camp is in Maryland, south of here.

De Gaulle is know to favor a tough Allied stand in dealing with Russia's demand that Western troops pull out of Berlin in order that it can become a "free city."

Macmillan is reported by some informats to favor negotiating a deal with Russia which would preserve Allied rights in Berlin by giving the Western sector an international status.

This is understood to be one of the Anglo-American differences that are to be threshed out around the conference table in Eisenhower's Camp David Lodge. Top U. S. officials are highly skeptical of such an approach unless it is part of a broad understanding with the Soviets which will advance German unity.

Acting Secretary of State Christian A. Herter was Eisenhower's main adviser as the conferences opened in the spacious living room of the four-bedroom aspen lodge. Macmillan's chief aid was Selwyn Lloyd.

The four men, plus their own aides, planned to remain inside the camp until the talks shift to Washington for a windup session Monday. The top four are sleeping at the main lodge while the others shared some of the less luxurious cabins nearby.

One of the main splits between Eisenhower and Macmillan was over the role to be assigned East-West Foreign Ministers at a pre-summit parley.

Kappa Alphas Invade Nag's Head Beach

By PETER NESS

Nag's Head beach was invaded this weekend by no less than 45 KA's. The group, consisting of both pledges and actives, took the Shades, a campus combo, along with them.

Friday afternoon was spent in a softball game between the pledges and the actives. A "Shipwreck" costume party was held Friday night.

Tonight their annual pledge dance will be held at the American Legion Pavillion, to the cool sounds of the Shades.

Med School Hosts Two Day Seminar

A two-day seminar on Physical Therapy and Current Programs contributing to North Carolina's health opened Friday at the UNC School of Medicine.

The seminar is being sponsored by the Section of Physical Therapy of the UNC Medical School. It is being attended by approximately 50 physical therapists from throughout the state.

Margaret L. Moore, chief physical therapists of the UNC Medical School and N. C. Memorial Hospital, was among Friday's speakers. Her subject was "Present Status and Future Plans for UNC Program in Physical Therapy."

"The objectives of our work here are to prepare competent physical therapists, to assist in administering departments of physical therapy and to work toward the advancement of the profession through clinical or laboratory research, writing and reporting in this field," Miss Moore said. "One of our objectives is to develop graduate programs of both a formal and informal nature in order to prepare physical therapists for added responsibilities and opportunities in administration, public health, education in physical therapy and participation in research."

Other speakers for the Friday session were Mabel M. Parker, Margaret L. Moore, Rachel L. Nunley and Mildred L. Wood, all of the UNC Section of Physical Therapy; Helen Kaiser, Duke University, Durham; Evelyn McNeil, Watts Hospital, Durham; Anne Parrish, State Board of Health, Raleigh and Sue Hirt, Medical College of Virginia, Richmond.

Barbara C. White, University of Florida; E. Sue Flowers, UNC Section of Physical Therapy; Virginia Whitfield, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Kathryn E. Phillips, Warm Springs, Ga.; Ray M. Litaker, Greenville, S. C.; Jacqueline Maiden, Charleston, S. C.; and Elise Rutledge, UNC Section of Physical Therapy.

The participants in Saturday's session will be Dr. William P. Richardson, assistant dean in charge of continuation education, UNC School of Medicine; Dr. Charles M. Cameron, associate professor, UNC School of Public Health; Dr. Carl W. Gottschald, assistant professor, UNC School of Medicine; Jack McGee, the National Foundation, Raleigh and Bernard Passer, Society for Crippled Children and Adults, Chapel Hill.

40 Cadets In AFROTC At MacDill

Approximately 40 cadets from the Air Force Officer Training Corps at UNC left Wednesday for MacDill Air Force Base at Tampa, Florida. The cadets were there for two days of Air Force Base orientation.

The cadets were flown from Raleigh-Durham Airport to MacDill in a C-119 Flying Boxcar, courtesy of the Air Force. They returned Friday

The criteria used in selecting the cadets for the trip was their academic standing and interest in the AFROTC program. The purpose of the trip is to familiarize the future officers with the functions of an Air Force Base.

While at MacDill they were oriented in the operations of the Strategic Air Command and inspect the various aircraft, especially the B-47 and the KC-97, used to maintain SAC readiness.

14th Annual Blue-White Game At 2 In Kenan Today

Three Stars Miss Game; Offensive Show Sure

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The curtain will go up on Carolina football-1959 style-today in Kenan Stadium at 2 when Jim Tatum's boys choose up sides and fight it out in the annual Blue-White game.

Offensive fireworks are expected to fly all afternoon as two quarterbacks that love to throw, a number of breakaway backs, and a brand new offense feature the show.

Clement and Farris

Quarterbacking the experienced Blue squad will be junior Skip Clement. Soph Ray Farris will direct the White team. Veteran Jack Cummings will not see action as he is recovering from jaundice and restricted from contact work.

The Blue backs show both speed and power. Headlining the speed department are halfbacks Sonny Folckomer, Wade Smith, Moe Smith and Milan Wall. Folckomer and Wade Smith are the expected starters. Big Don Klochak will furnish the power at fullback.

The White halfbacks are led by Lenny Beck and Nelson Lowe, the starters, and sophs Gene Shuford and Gil Carson . . They have two fine fullbacks in starter Joe Davies and veteran Ed Lipski.

Swing End Offense

The new offense is Tatum's "swing end" affair in which the lonesome end moves from one side of the line to the other on different plays. The new offense will be run from an unbalanced line.

Tatum's "swinging end" will have to do without the two swingingest ends, all-American Al Goldstein and starter John Schroeder. Other men out with injuries are soph quarterback Ward Marslander, fullback George Knox, halfback Larry Frederick, fullback Lee Jackson, and center Jim Davis.

Blue Line Experienced

The Blue line features the most experience. The ends are Jim Rice and Rabe Walton. Walton has been converted to the end position from quarterback. Tackles Don Stallings and Moose Butler, guards Fred Mueller and Bob Shupin and center Rip Hawkins round out the Blue line. Shupin was moved to guard from fullback.

The White line shows a lot of hustling newcomers. Charley Rodgers and Charley Davis are the ends, the tackles are Bill Crabtree and Danny Bardy, Frank Riggs and Jim Hokanson at guards, and the center is Jim LeCompte.

Other than the starters these players are expected to play a lot for the Blue: end Mike Greenday, guards Paul Russell and Jack Tillery, and fullback Bob Elliott.

White players other than the starters expected to see a lot of action are: tackles Dan Sofranko, guard Ralph Steele, and fullback Ed Lipski.

Seven Missing

Missing from the team are seniors who will graduate this spring. Among them are: ends Mac Turlington and Don Kemper, tackles Phil Blazer and Don Redding, guard Fred Swearingen and center Ronnie Koes, and halfback Emil DeCantis. All of these players were in the starting line-up when the season opened last fall.

The kick-off is at 2 sharp and a scrimmage will follow for those players who didn't see action in the game. Admission is a buck and all proceeds go to the UNC Monogram Club.

BLUE-WHITE THREATS—Rising soph Ray Farris (left) will quarterback the White team and Wade Smith will be one of the starting Blue backs in today's annual Carolina inter-squad battle.

The game is slated for kick-off at 2 in Kenan Stadium. WUNC-TV, the University television station, will televise the game.

Outing Club List Grows

The newly formed UNC Outing Club now has raised its membership to a total of 19 members. At present these members are in the process of planning a spring regatta and a fishing contest.

The regatta is being planned for Buggs Island. State and Wake Forest have expressed a desire in participating in this event. So far on the schedule they have water skiing and canoeing competition. Other plans are incomplete.

The fishing contest, sponsored by the Outing Club, will begin on March 27 and last until May 1. The two divisions are Open, consisting of faculty and university members and the Student division. Trophies will be awarded in bass and brim divisions.

Track Team Preps For Opener Monday

By BING SOMERS

The UNC track team, having abandoned the Tin Can and reached far back into their lockers for long spikes, is preparing for the 1959 outdoor season which officially opens Monday with a meet against N. C. State at Raleigh.

With legs just getting accustomed to the sudden change from boards to cinders, and with wild March winds whipping around Fetzer Field, this week's practices have tapered off just slightly from the usual furious routine.

With State just two days away, here is how the team shapes up in the three main categories.

Running: Three of the finest runners in Carolina's history face their final outdoor campaigns this spring. They are Dave Scurlock, Wayne Bishop, and John Sylvester. Scurlock, the well-oiled machine of a runner who so easily won last week's Indoor Games half, will once again run the 440 and 880 and should lose in neither.

Bishop, outdoor and indoor two mile king, will also try the mile this year, but the two mile is where he really shines and he should bob under 9 minutes for the first time.

Sylvester, a hard-working, smooth-running underrated senior who returns after a year's absence, spells big trouble for ACC quarter milers and is a good bet to run 48 flat or under.

Junior Cowles Llipfert will probably make like a magician and pop up in everything from a spot on the relay team to the two mile. Sophomores Bob Foxworth and Bing Somers are in the same situation. John Fox and Benjy Seagle are strictly quarter-milers; Alex Coffin, strictly a two-miler.

Sprintwise, the Tar Heels have a horde—halfback Danny Droze, Tony Arey, Bob Eubanks, Tom White, and Wally Graham—none of which can really burn up the track. Two top hurdlers are Lyndon DeBorde, who is fine man on the highs, and Charlie Sowers, who may also try the 220.

Jumping: Two top high jumpers are Wally Graham and Bob Sherrill, both of whom are steadily around 6 feet, rarely higher. The Tar Heels have probably the strongest group of broad jumpers in the conference. Outdoor champion Ray Stanley is followed by Bob Eubanks, Ward Sims, and Ed Brawley. All are good.

The lone pole vaulter is dapper Ward Sims who should reach 13 feet, without too much trouble.

The weights: Number one UNC shot putter is big Don Kemper who can throw around 48 feet if he only will. He is backed by Jerry Phaup and Tom White. In the discus, Fraser Smith works hard, has tremendous determination to make good, and does. He could be best in ACC this year. Versatile Ray Stanley also throws discus and teams up with bulky John O'Neal as big men in the javelin.

Netters In Practice Match

The varsity tennis team opens its season this afternoon at 3 o'clock on the home courts when it meets the Chapel Hill Men's Tennis Team in a practice match.

Coach Don Skakle will probably use his veteran players in the match despite the fact that it is simply a practice affair. After today's match the netters begin next week on college competition. Tuesday and Wed-Tesday the Carolina courtman will face Illinois. Last year the Illini got beaten by the Tar Heels 5-4.

The question mark in the lineup is letterman Ben Keys. Keys, number five man on the team last year, has been in the hospital but is expected to be ready for Illinois if he does not play today.

The five players who are expected to carry the Heels into the match are Geoff Black, Marshall Happer, Walter Lockett, and sophomores Bruce Sylvia and Dee Heather.

After the two matches with Illinois the team will travel to Florida for a pair of matches against Rollins College before opening its defense of the ACC crown against Maryland here on April 3.

FROSH BASEBALL

The position for the manager of the freshman baseball team is still vacant. Those persons interested in this position should contact Coach Pat Eary.

MURALS

The next Intramural Managers Meeting will be on April 6. Also entries for tennis, horseshoes, water polo and golf will be due April 1.

Soccer Schedule

At 4:00 Cobb vs Peacocks.

On Monday, March 23, the softball fields and badminton courts may be reserved for practice by calling the Intramural Office 9424. This day has been set aside as a day for practice for the teams. All managers are reminded that their entry sheets should be filled out completely before playing the first game. For a player to be eligible his name must be on the roster.

Some teams and fraternities have not entered teams in badminton and softball. Those who wish to do so may make a late entrance by calling the Intramural Office immediately.

College Of Arts, Sciences Names 173 To Dean's List

A total of 173 juniors and seniors have been placed on the dean's list for the College of Arts and Sciences, according to Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson.

The dean's list is comprised of students taking a minimum of 15 semester hours who averaged B or higher in subjects for the 1958-59 fall term.

Of the 173 dean's list students, 125 are North Carolinians. Fifteen students made all A's during the fall semester.

The names and hometowns of the dean's list students are listed below. The asterisk denotes those students who made all A's.

Two UNC Students Win Fellowship Third Time

Two of the seven UNC students who have received graduate fellowships from the National Science Foundation for 1959-60 are three-time receipients of the coveted grants.

Mrs. Sally Melvin Horner of New Bern and Clarence E. Cook of Jefferson City, Tenn., received renewals of their original 1957 grants for the second year. Both are working for the Ph.D. degree in the Department of Chemistry.

Two other UNC winners are repeaters, holding NSF fellowships this year. They are Richard P. Bland, working for a Ph.D. in statistics; and Robert L. Hubbard, working for a Ph.D. in physics. Bland is from Farmersville, Tex. and Arapahoe, Okla.

Among the first-time winners are Robert W. Brehme, a graduate student in physics working for his doctorate; and Timothy A. Smith who is working for his Ph.D. in psychology. Smith is from Milwaukee, Wis. and Brehme formerly lived in Washington, D. C.

The seventh UNC recipient, Lawrence L. Lohr Jr. of Raleigh, has chose Harvard University to begin his graduate studies in chemistry. He will receive his bachelor's degree from UNC in June.

NSF graduate fellowships carry a stipend of $1,800 for the first year, $2,000 for intermediate years, and $2,200 for the last year of graduate study. Additional allowances for dependents, tuition and travel expenses are given.

Ancel C. Mewborn of Snow Hill, who was awarded an NSF postdoctoral fellowship, has accepted instead an instructorship at Yale University. He is completing his Ph.D. degree in mathematics this year and is a part-time instructor at UNC.

Radio Club Will Transmit Greetings

An Easter message to a relative or friend will be sent anywhere free of charge, courtesy of the UNC Radio Club.

The club has set up a message service for students especially for the Easter holidays. These messages will be sent to any place in the United States, a U. S. possession or to any military base.

Students may have messages sent by putting these messages in special boxes in the Y Buildnig and in Graham Memorial.

In addition to the message, students have been asked to include this other information: the name and address of the person to whom the message is being sent, the signature and name and address of the sender.

We Goofed

Due to proofreading, Lucy Posgate was listed as a member of the University Party in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel. Miss Posgate is a member of the Student Party.

Ann Harvey is a member of the University Party and is also a member of the staff of Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel. She was quoted in a paragraph further down in the article.

Duke University Vice President Cites Teacher Salary Level As Harming Scientist Supply

CHAPEL HILL — (AP) — In our efforts to meet the pressing demand for scientists, we should not overlook the humanities or the necessity for undergirding these with a conception of the meaning of life, Dr. Herbert J. Herring, vice president of Duke University, said here Saturday night.

In an address at the annual spring awards dinner of the N. C. Association of Certified Public Accountants, Dr. Herring cited the problems of increasing school and college enrollments and the lag in teacher salary levels behind those of the country's labor force.

He emphasized the need for scientists, saying: "The pressing need for highly trained scientists, mathematicians, and engineers is constantly repeated . . . we need the strength of scientific and technical advancement in order to save ourselves," but he also pointed out that "It is unrealistic to assume that the hungry people of the world will permit the well-fed people to be peaceful" and "Scientific advancements which will help to solve the problems of hunger and other human needs throughout the world offer, I am convinced, an avenue toward eventual peace."

Continuing, Dr. Herring said: "As abundant as the evidence is for strong emphasis on scientific and technical training, this training alone connot solve the problems of the race. Without de-emphasizing the point I have just made, it seems abundantly clear that heavy emphasis must be placed on the humanities and social studies, on whatever learning helps a person to become more human."

Candidates Meet Mon. With Elections Board

A compulsory meeting of all candidates for office in the April 7 campuswide elections will be held Monday at 7:15 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board, said Saturday the general election law regulations will be explained at that time.

Candidates absent from te compulsory meeting may be excused only for confinement in the Infirmary or other reason approved by the Elections Board.

Students have a maximum of 48 hours within which to present their excuses for missing the meeting to Patterson. If the candidate is excused, he will be required to pay a fine of $5.

Patterson said Monday is also the deadline for petitions to be submitted to the Elections Board from any student wishing to run for office. All petitions with the required 25 student endorsers must be turned in to the student government office by 7 p.m. Monday, he said.

Patterson also reminded students that absentee ballots may be requested before 5 p.m. April 3. The Elections Board will give out the ballots on request.

Charlie Gray Lists Methods For Meeting Responsibilities

"A responsible president of the student body should see that all other student organizations also realize and meet their responsibility to the campus," said Charlie Gray, UP candidate for student body president, in a statement Saturday.

Gray went on to say there are many campus organizations whose operations should be strengthened so to serve better the students they represent.

Listing some of the plans he has to incerase student government and other organizations' responsibility, Gray said he would:

"1) Work with the new Daily Tar Heel editor to insure the campus a sounder and more representative daily newspaper.

"2) Broaden the Budget Committee to make sure the students' money is spent wisely.

"3) Work with the Carolina Forum to assure the campus of noted speakers in varied fields, keeping in mind the interest of our graduate students

"4) Work with the IFC to solve the problems of fraternities.

"5) Help broaden and strengthen the YMCA and YWCA so they can offer a more adequate program of religious service to the campus.

"6) Broaden the activities of the IDC to help relieve the existing dormitory problems.

"7) Push for a more extensive dormitory adviser program.

"8) Work and broaden our existing contracts with the town merchants in an attempt to improve student-town relations."

Gray said he would also utilize student legislators to the fullest extent and would urge other students to attend Legislature sessions because "only a few students realize what student government is really like."

The UP candidate criticized members of the Legislature who "have done a poor job in keeping in contact with people in their district."

Another of Gray's plans to "increase student interest and confidence" in a representative student government is to write a weekly column in The Daily Tar Heel discussing certain campus problems.

Gray said he will work with these and other plans in an effort "to bring student government back to the student and in some way decrease student apathy."

He further commented that the student body president should lead the campus in a progressive manner and, at the same time, meet responsibilities to over 7,000 students.

"Included in this responsibility is an attempt to represent the desires of the campus and not to dictate one's pet beliefs. Student government must work with the students and not against them," Gray said.

Candidate Smith Gives Views On Sororities, Fraternities

Norman B. Smith, Student Party nominee for president of the student body, expressed his opinion on fraternities and sororities Saturday.

Noting that the foremost question facing the Greek letter organizations is that of deferred rush, Smith first explained that student government, especially the president of the student body, has no power to institute deferred rush.

"Deferred rush can come only for joint action by the faculty and administration and agreement among the fraternity houses," he explained.

"It appears to me that there is a strong possibility of deferred rush being required in the very near future," he said, "and the requirement will, of course, come from the former source of authority."

"I happen to agree that deferred rush does appear to be the proper course on academic and sociological grounds," he continued, "but, as before stated, my feelings mean little as to whether or not it will come."

Smith said he felt that activity on the part of student government to thoroughly study the economic situation which deferred rush would impose on the fraternities is lacking.

"Study, I am sure, would result in proposed mechanics for instituting and maintaining a system of deferred rush which would ease financial stress and make it unnecessary for the first fraternity to have to leave campus," he said.

"The study," he continued, "should be done by working closely with the Interfraternity Council, if not entirely within that organization."

Smith said he has done some preliminary work on the matter, and, "one of my first acts as president of the student body would be to get such a study underway."

He said deferred rush would not affect sororities to any appreciable extent, since a very small majority of their initiates are freshmen.

"The last thing I want to see is the first Greek letter organization have to leave this campus," said Smith. "The fraternities and sororities are a recognized part of the campus, and to find evidence of their future role at Carolina, all one need do is consult the Univer-

SP Meet To Adopt Platform

Candidates desiring Student Party endorsement for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel will appear before the party tomorrow night.

SP will meet at 8 p.m. in Roland Parker I an II.

Seeking the endorsement of the party as editor candidates will be Davis Young, as editor, and Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate, as co-editors.

At the meeting, party members also will adopt a platform.

There will be an announcement of those selected by the Advisory Board to fill the vacancies on the SP slate of candidates for offices in the coming elections.

Campaign procedures will be discussed as well.

The IFC Court

The University Party is currently circulating a rumor that a group of radical, left wing, Student Party members is thinking of doing away with the IFC Court. If there is such a group, the editor has not heard of it, and the editor is definitely not a part of it.

However, this is not to suggest that the IFC Court couldn't stand improvement, and from the reports of the trial that the Court gave The Daily Tar Heel, it is fairly clear that it could.

There is one basic flaw with the Court — the conception that groups should be punished for individual offenses. The Court handled the facts in the hearse burning case adequately and came up with what was probably the only verdict possible, what it failed to do was single out the individuals responsible, instead it punished several groups. The fact that these groups were fraternities was incidental to the bad principle of punishing groups for individual offenses.

The whole concept of democracy is tied into the concept of the individual, his development and his freedom. Democracy is a government for the individual and is not a group centered concept. Hence, a legal system within a democracy has for its primary task the development of individual responsibility and initiative, and this is to be accomplished by giving the individual more freedom and making him accept the responsibility for his actions that goes with that freedom. The idea of bringing group pressure to bear on breeding a disciplined conformity is foreign from the theory if not the practice of a democratic society. Whereas this means may be effective in bringing about some control of such incidents as the hearse burning, it is not an effective lesson in individual responsibility, and if there is anything this educational community is trying to cultivate, it is just that.

A second minor point of disagreement is the secrecy concerning the identities of the fraternities. They are not individuals, and hence have no need of protection from the cruel world of the campus. They should, if they are held accountable for misdeeds by the IFC Court, be held accountable by the campus.

In The Mud

There was a candidate who ran for office. He ran and he ran, but as he ran, he was confronted with calumnies. And the more he ran the more calumnies were thrown at him. And no matter how hard he tried to explain and clarify these slanderous saying, he was not able to stop the onslaught of the calumnies on his head. And finally, he was buried under them and he lost the election. And after the election was all over and he was extricating himself from the mud, he looked around and realized that these calumnies were his own.

Quality Cannot Be Sacrificed

William B. Aycock

We, who are charged with the responsibility of maintaining a University in fact as well as in name, welcome this opportunity to appear before you and to urge that you approve the budget recommendations submitted by the Consolidated University. We believe that our requests for additional personnel, teaching equipment and supplies, books and journals, and for salary increases are essential. True, if our requests are rejected, we shall continue to have the visible symbols of a University. We are deeply concerned for what may happen to those things which are not readily discernible, but which nevertheless provide the fundamental qualities of a University. Unlike erosion of the Outer Banks, erosion of the quality of a university is difficult to detect. Both the Outer Banks and the quality of the University are vital and both should be preserved, maintained and improved.

Our requests for additional personnel are, with a few exceptions, correlated with anticipated increases in enrollment. In a few instances, requests have been made for personnel to continue positions which were temporarily supported from outside grants and to augment undermanned departments. Our immediate objective is to maintain the quality in teaching, research, and service which we have already achieved.

In a university, the teaching function involves students from college freshmen to post-doctoral fellows. The classroom teaching load of a faculty member no more represents the hours he works than does the few minutes an attorney spends arguing his case before the highest tribunal represents the time devoted to his client's cause. Consideration must be given to the time spent in study and planning which precedes the presentation and to the many activities which come after. A lifetime of diligence and labor by the midnight oil go, as we all know, into the achievement of one hour of a surgeon, an attorney, an author, a businessman, a minister, a faculty member and others too many to enumerate.

Apart from the classroom teaching function, many faculty members, who also serve as department heads or directors, spend much time in developing educational policy and in administration. A large portion of a university faculty spends time in independent research—either individually or as a member of a research team—which may or may not have a direct connection with preparation for teaching assigned classes. Moreover, members of the faculty respond gladly to frequent calls to render public service to the State and to the Nation. It is quite difficult to translate the efforts of the human mind into statistical data. Although we have tried to do so in support of our requests for additional personnel, it is well to recall that when Lord Thurlow once undertook to put the Rule in Shelley's Case in a nutshell, Lord McNaghtenob served: "it is one thing to put a case like Shelley's in a nutshell and another thing to keep it there." So it is with a university. Traditionally, faculty members have been expected to continue to develop their own minds and they have been trusted to carry on their teaching, research and service functions around the clock and not by the clock. They have been faithful to their trust and we have a better University and a better State because of it.

Last fall there was an increase of four hundred and seventy-five students at Chapel Hill. Further growth for each year of the forthcoming biennium appears certain. The matter of rising enrollments is no longer one of projections and predictions. Already, larger numbers of academically qualified boys and girls are knocking at our doors. It is ur desire to let them in. We believe the interest of the State will not be served by limiting enrollment in the University except when such restriction is necessary as a means of insuring a good education. But without the necessary personnel to provide for larger numbers we are faced with an unhappy choice. Shall we limit enrollments or sacrifice quality? If a choice must be made, enrollment will soon have to be frozen in all areas. Initially, the logical area in which to freeze enrollment would be the area in which the greatest monetary saving is possible.

Apart from some of the professional schools in the Division of Health Affairs, where enrollments are already stablized, the Graduate School would be the place to save money. It costs many times more to educate a graduate student than to educate an undergraduate. Curtailing growth in the Graduate School would have serious consequences especially at a time when the demand for college teachers so far exceeds the supply. A large number of the graduate and graduate professional students now enrolled at Chapel Hill will go into college teaching. For half a century, we have been training prospective faculty members for teaching careers in the colleges and universities of North Carolina and in other colleges and universities throughout the Southland and even across the nation. Graduate faculties and graduate students are essential intellectual resources for economic development, for scientific invention, for man's struggle to understand himself; indeed, for national survival itself. Last semester there were more than fourteen hundred students in the Graduate School at Chapel Hill, an increase of twenty per cent over the previous fall.

This increase did not result entirely from a rise in the population and from a demand for college and university teachers. It was the product also of the deepening and widening of the accelerated search for human knowelge, which is creating new fields of study, new areas of investigation, and more exacting standards of achievement. Despite our increases in the graduate school, the needs of North Carolina have not been met. Yet, here is where the most dollars could be saved. You will, we believe, agree with us that this is not the time to put quality on the scaffold and mere quantity on the throne.

It is also necessary to emphasize a critical situation that exists in the nonpersonnel lines of the University's budgets. More students inevitably lead to the increased use of academic supplies and materials, of academic equipment and to an increased expenditure for repairs. These items in the budget, even without the larger student body, were inadequate. Two things account for this. These budgets have not, over the years, kept pace with the uneven but persistent rise in prices.

Also, they have never fully reflected the growing complexity of education and the fact that the educational effort, especially in the sciences but generally throughout the University, now require much more in the way of expensive equipment and greater quantities of other things with which the students work. Although we are informed that the purchases made by the State in general have tended to level off, we find little comfort when we examine the realities of our own situation. Our invices, especially for scientific supplies, clearly indicate a continuation of the long run upward trend in prices. A comparison of this year with last shows, in scientific supplies, increases ranging from 14 percent to 39 percent. Technical and scientific equipment during the same period went up 7 percent on average. Thus, we must reaffirm the validity of our requests as applied to our situation for teaching supplies and equipment.

Although some of the programs in the Division of Health Affairs were established long ago, most of them were started during the present decade. Already, many national health leaders regard the work of this Division in the University as distinguished.

Currently over fifteen hundred students are studying to take their places in a variety of professions and services in the field of health. These students are of many types: regular medical students, interns and residents in medicine, graduate students and fellows in various medical subjects, medical technologists, physical therapists, X-ray technicians: regular dental students, graduate students in several dental specialties, dental hygienists, dental assistants; regular pharmacy students, graduate pharmacy students; students in public health administration, public health nursing, sanitary engineering, parasitology, biostatistics, health education, maternal and child health, nutrition, mental health and epidemiology; regular University nursing students, special nursing students who are upgrading hospital diplomas, graduate nursing students; and in almost all fields there are short courses and institutes for health practitioners in North Carolina to keep them abreast of scientific advances in their fields.

It is appropriate to call to your attention the distribution to North Carolina of recent graduates of our Health Affairs programs.

1. School of Medicine: Only three graduating classes, 1954 through 1956, should be considered because graduates subsequent to that time have not completed military obligations and required hospital training. There are one hundred and fifty-eight doctors now practicing in sixty-eight localities in forty-eight counties who were regular medical students or interns or residents during this three-year period.

2. School of Pharmacy: Graduates during the period 1949-1958 include four hundred and forty pharmacists now practicing in one hundred and forty localities in seventy-six counties.

3. School of Public Health: Of the trainees during the period 1949-1958, three hundred and three public health officials are now serving in seventy-seven counties. This is a significant contribution to North Carolina by a regional school which in 1957-58 received only 17.5 percent of its overall operating budget from State Appropriations.

4. School of Nursing: The first class graduated in 1955. Sixty-eight nurses out of the one hundred and sixteen who have graduated are now in active practice in nineteen different counties.

5. School of Dentistry: The first graduating class was in 1954. One hundred and fifty-three graduates of this School are now practicing in seventy-two localities in fifty-three counties.

The North Carolina Memorial Hospital and the Psychiatric Center are quite different from a hospital in your home community. Not only do they serve patients who are referred by community hospitals because of the complex nature of their medical problems, but also these units are the teaching and research laboratories for members. There is not an easy way to separate the research, teaching, and patient care functions of a University Hospital. In appraising our requests for appropriations for the Hospital, it is well to keep in mind that seventy per cent of the service rendered by Memorial Hospital is to staff patients who are unable to pay the full cost of their care. It is important to observe that the increased needs for the Hospital, due to rising costs in hospital care, are recommended to come in part by increased charges to patients who are able to pay. The same is true in the Psychiatric Center which not only serves as a teaching laboratory for regular medical and nursing students but also as the teaching and research headquarters for North Carolina's outstanding mental hospital system. The costs of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital and the Psychiatric Center should not be measured in terms of costs of other health institutions, which provide only a fraction of the services rendered by these institutions, any more than a University should be compared to an institution which performs only a fraction of those functions performed by the University.

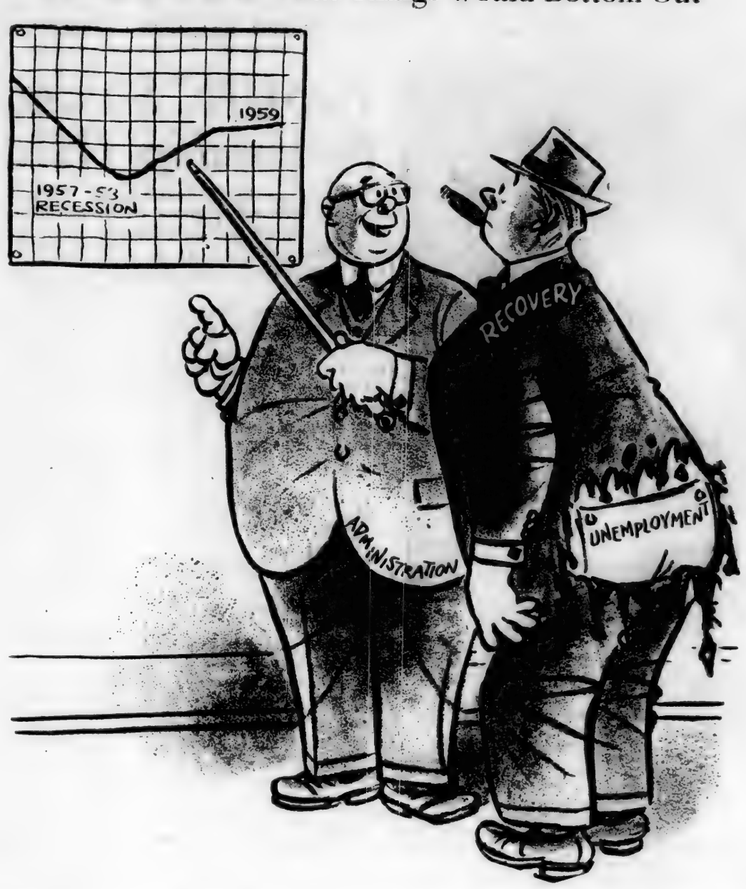
A department or school in a university gains eminence slowly. The loss of two or three key faculty members in a department or school will reduce an outstanding unit to a mediocre one in a moment of time. Such losses, multiplied a few times, inevitably mean that a university which has gained great stature through a slow, painstaking, evolutionary process will lose much of its quality overnight. Once lost, it cannot be regained suddenly, even with unlimited sums of money.

A decadent team, whether on the athletic field, in the classroom, or in the laboratory cannot be rebuilt into a winning team easily or quickly. Our libraries were starved during the difficult years of the depression. We know that it has been a struggle, costly in time and money, to regain some of the lost ground. A key faculty member cannot be replaced by a comparable person without increasing costs in excess of what it would have taken to keep him in the first place. A substantial investment in faculty salaries now is one of the greatest economies that can be made for the people of this State.

In conclusion, permit me to say a word for education in general. Woodrow Wilson concluded that "without popular education, nothing which rests on popular action can long endure." "Democracy," according to Winston Churchill, "is the worst form of government—except those other forms that have been tried from time to time." Thus it could be said that investing in education is the poorest investment our State can make—except those other investments which it makes from time to time.

On reflection, we realize that education is the chosen way for democracy to translate freedom into creative growth. In the troubled world of today education is essential to our survival; ultimately, it is our hope for winning peace for mankind; and finally, it is the means by which we aspire to develop our civilization to its highest reaches.

This is not time to choose between quality and quantity—either for the retarded or for the most gifted at any level in our system of education - from the first grade in our public schools to the Graduate School at the University. The only conceivable choice is both.



Views & Previews

Anthony Wolff

In their March 16th issue, the editors of LIFE (they are all honorable men) undertook to bolster the public image of President Eisenhower by publishing some of the President's personal correspondence. The stated purpose of this venture is to "reveal how Eisenhower brings a personal touch to public affairs," and this publishing snow-job is recommended to us as a special event because "most Presidents of the U. S. have found little time to devote to the art of letter writing. Dwight D. Eisenhower is a remarkable exception."

Now, no careful reader will be stupid enough to claim any sort of objectivity for the publications of the Luce organization. Politically, they are Republican house organs, and it didn't take the valuable documentation of this fact in a recent article in The New Republic to make the point.

Often, however, the people at Time, Inc. are fairly subtle in their slanting of the truth. In the case in question here, though, the chicanery is all too plain; the distance between the truth and the fiction is too great, and the strain of perpetrating this particular fraud becomes embarassingly obvious.

The truth is, of course, that every president has in the course of his doing his job been involved in correspondence of all sorts, and in the course of four years or eight there may accumulate volumes of letters of various kinds. Whether or not President Eisenhower is an especially prolific correspondent will be the burden of the future to discover, and it ill behooves Life Magazine to so prejudice the issue prematurely.

So Eisenhower is perhaps no rare creature just because he can be president and pen pal at the same time. Is there, then, some noteworthy brilliance, either of style or of content, which makes the President's private correspondence worthy of note? Despite the pretentiousness of the introductory material suppled by the folks at Life, the answer is no. Take away the introductory material, let the letters stand by themselves, and it is hard to escape the conclusion that Ike is literate — no more, although no less. In an age when few college students can make the same claim, this may seem like a considerable achievement; in truth, however, the letters published in Life are of no greater literary excellence than the notes some of us send home for funds. At their literary best, Ike's letters reflect less effort on the part of any competent writer than the President is reported by Life to invest in them. So much for style.

In content, Ike's letters are something less than profound. In fact, if this is the greatest depth and insight to which the President can attain, then we have cause to fear for the Ship of State. For instance: Life pompously claims that "the common delusion that the President reads only Westerns and mysteries in his spare time is exploded by this comment on philosophers."

The comment: ". . . Through the years I have done a bit of reading about some of the thinkers like Plato, Kant and Nietzsche, not to mention such proponents of more particularized ideas, such as Tom Paine, Thoreau and Machiavelli. But I confess ignorance of even the existence of the pseudo-philosophical Frenchman who developed the doctrine of existentialism."

The President admits only to having read "about" a few great philosophers. Are we to believe, then, that he has never heard of Sartre, to whom he alludes with typical sophomore disdain for what he evidently does not undersand? Probably. And we must then conclude that the President of the United States is philosophically defunct, which we have suspected right along. Needless to say, the frequent remarks about the President's juvenile reading habits are not refuted by the President's letter. Rather, they achieve something more solid than the delusional status ascribed to them by Life; for if Life Magazine sets out to disprove an anti-Eisenhower rumor, and can do no better than this, then the rumor gains support.

It is frighteningly ironic that the same man writes another letter in which he is solicitous about "the predominant influence of spiritual values in our lives." The irony all but disappears, however, as it becomes clear in the same letter that Eisenhower's concern is mainly for the propoganda value of such a spiritual concern; and that the spiritual concern itself is for the President equal to religious faith. Thus the President reveals his own lack of any spiritual depth.

Thus, too, he reveals the reason for his disdain for Sartre and the existentialists: for Sartre and the others connected with the existentialist mood, or movement, are profoundly concerned with spiritual problems, and they refuse to accept doctrinairre answers (in his ignorance, the President accuses existentialism of being a doctrine) such as those provided by organized religion. The existentialists correctly recognize that such answers will no longer satisfy human questions, and they have the courage to explore new grounds in philosophy, and the courage to follow wherever their new investigations may lead them.

Sartre, as one of the leading lights in the vague movement known as existentialism, is certainly no "pseudo-philosopher." And there are many who would claim with considerable justification that a good dose of "doctrine" might make a president out of Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Quite apart from considerations of the ethics of Life Magazine and the spiritual poverty of our President, there is also the question of what his attitude, published abroad as well as here, says about America. The answer is obvious when one realizes that in France, and in all of Europe, Sartre is respected as a philosopher of considerable importance. Nor is his recognition restricted to the philosophers, for Sartre is active as a literary critic and a political and social commentator, and when he makes a statement, its effect is felt throughout society. Here, Sartre is ridiculed by the nation's supposed leader as a "pseudo-philosopher" — as "that pseudo-philosophical Frenchman." Such shallowness, which characterizes many aspects of our American society, is nothing to be proud of. It is too bad for us when our President is good cause for deep embarrassment, for shame.

Poetry Reading Slated Tonight

Everything from Shakespeare sonnets to early "beat" poems by Kenneth Patchen — that's what is on tap for tonight's poetry reading at Gerrard Hall, beginning at 8 o'clock.

Under the general theme, "Carnival of Humanity," the members of Petite Dramatique will present poems by Tennessee Williams, Stephen Crane, James Agee, A .E Houseman, T. S. Eliot, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Kenneth Fearing, Pablo Neruda, Shakespeare and Patchen.

Neruda, an exiled Chilean, is one of the world's poets though he has received little recognition in this country. His long poem, "Let the Rail Splitter Awake," will be read by Peter B. Young.

Another highlight will be "a choral reading" of Eliot's "The Hollow Men" by Frank Clymer, John Harris and William Monell.

Bongo drums will be used to accompany the three voices in this reading.

Other members of Petite Dramatique participating in the show include Margaret Starnes and Sally Pullen. The production is under the joint direction of Jack Jackson and Russ Link.

THE HOLLOW MEN — Frank Clymer, John Harris and William Monell rehearse their unison reading of T. S. Eliot's "The Hollow Men" for tonight's show at Gerrard Hall.

Blues Beat Whites 32-21 In 14th Annual Game

Tatum: Twice As Good As We Played Last Year

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"That was twice the calibre of ball we played last spring." With these words Coach Jim Tatum summed up his spring practice and the Blue-White game in particular.

The annual climax to spring practice, this time won by the more experienced Blues 32-21 in an offensive display, featured what the coach described as, "a lot of rugged hitting."

Tatum seemed especially pleased with the progress made by members of the backfield. In this regard he mentioned the extra punch Wade Smith had thanks to a gain in weight, the improved running of Sonny Folckomer, and the development of fullbacks Joe Davies and Bob Elliott.

Although big Don Klochak was contained fairly well with the exception of his 10 yard touchdown burst, the head coach said that he is not most effective on straight-ahead plunges. "Klochak runs better around the end, but we were not going to let him run at any of our halfbacks."

Co-captain Wade Smith, who turned out to be the goat of the game, said after the contest was over that he was, "looking forward to next year." Commenting on the game itself, he stated that despite winning he thought his Blue team was a little sloppy at times.

Smith's boner occurred on the opening play of the second half when he allowed Nelson Lowe's kick-off to roll past him into the end zone where sophomore guard Frank Riggs fell on it for a White touchdown. "That was all my fault," the halfback said, "and I accept the responsibility for it. It was pretty embarrassing."

Blue quarterback Skip Clement echoed the dressing-room opinions of his teammates with the statement that the twenty workouts had been, "a tough spring practice." On the use of the lonesome end he expressed a feeling that it was definitely effective in opening up the defense and will allow the Tar Heels to make the best use of their personnel.

Big Offensive Show; Quarterbacks Shine

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's football Tar Heels unveiled a crushing offensive attack, a whole stable of explosive backs, and a pair of sure-armed quarterbacks here yesterday as the Blues beat the Whites 32-21.

The Smith boys, Moe and Wade, scored three of the Blue touchdowns, with Skip Clement and Big Don Klochack getting one each. Wade Smith scored 2.

The accent was on offense all afternoon, and the Blue's superiority came out in the statistics. The Blues had 28 first downs to the White's 10; 296 rushing yards to 100 for the white, and 151 to 106 in passing yardage.

The big star for the losing Whites was slick soph Ray Farris who completed 7 of 12 passes for 99 yards. Farris scored one White touchdown, with Frank Riggs and Joe Davies getting the other two.

The Blues took the opening kick-off and marched 72 yards in 12 plays for the score. Wade Smith dived in from 1 yard out but the try for two failed.

The Whites took the ensuing kick-off and pulled a march of their own, hitting paydirt 49 yards in 12 plays. It was rising soph fullback Joe Davies who carried the mail into the end zone from four yards out, and Davies carried on 7 of the 12 plays. Nelson Lowe converted to make it 7-6, White.

The first half was almost over before the Blues got another offensive drive going and drove 50 yards in 11 plays, with Clement diving over from the 1. The try for two was no good again and the Blues led 12-7 at halftime.

The Whites kicked off to begin the first half, the ball rolled into the end zone, nobody touched it, and the Whites' Frank Riggs fell on it for a touchdown. Lowe converted again and the Whites led for the last time at 14-12.

The Blues surged back as Moe Smith cracked around right end for eight yards and another score. Bob Shupin kicked the point to make it Blue 19-White 14.

The other Smith, Wade, got his second TD of the day as he hit off left tackle from four yards out and went for the Blues' fourth touchdown. Shupin kicked again and it was 26-14, Blue.

The last Blue score came with 7:37 left in the game as big Don Klochack barreled over from the 10. Klochack's attempted point was blocked.

The Whites got a little revenge as Farris dived over from the 1 with only 1:06 left in the game to make it 32-21, Blue and that was the way it stayed.

Three starters from last year's squad did not see action today on doctor's orders. Quarterback Jack Cummings, and ends John Schroeder and Al Goldstein were all missing yesterday.

Rising junior quarterback Skip Clements was easily the day's individual star as he completed 8 of 13 plays for 81 yards and ran 7 times for 55 yards.

The soph fullbacks, Joe Davies gained 51 yards in 10 carries and Elliott picked up 36 yds. in nine runs .

Don Klochack blasted out 44 yards in 15 attempts. A scrimmage was held after the regulation game for those players that didn't see action.

Baseball Squad Opens With Dartmouth Here Monday At 3

Carolina's baseball Tar Heels open the season here tomorrow afternoon at 3 against Dartmouth's Indians.

Not much is known about the Ivy League school except that they are a traditional college baseball power and were in the NCAA District 1 play-offs last season.

Carolina has experience and depth. Last year the Tar Heels compiled an 11-4 ACC record and a 19-8-1 overall mark. They wound up in a tie for Clemson then lost 4-1 in a play-off game.

The entire starting outfield, plus a host of good pitchers and catchers headline's Walt Rabb's crew. The main losses suffered were in the infield, where three starters graduated.

Rabb is expected to throw his meal ticket, Wayne Young, at the Indians today. Young had a fine 7-3 record and a fantastic 0.9 earned run average last year. Another possible starter is Ben Harding who was the ACC's leading percentage pitcher with a 6-1 mark last season.

The other Tar Heels starters, with last year's batting averages listed in parentheses, are: left field - Tommy Saintsing (.150) or Russ Hollers frosh (.333), center field-Gerald Griffin (.337), right field - John Burgwyn (.253) or Bruce Crump (.203).

First base - Vaughn Bryson (.258), second base - Larry Craver (.222), shortstop - Harold Workman, third base - Jerry Nestor, and catcher - Al Baldwin (.233).

Minter Says Unity Important To Student Government System

Unity is the most important need in student government today, University Party Chairman John Minter said Monday.

This unity is of "segments of students from the neglegent, propagandizing crusades of a faction of our 'student leaders' who have been in operation for the past three years," he said.

Outlining his party's plans for achieving unity, Minter referred to the UP's platform, which includes the following plans and recommendations:

A more flexible policy toward women's dormitory regulations is promised by the UP. The party is urging a system of collective late minutes which would eliminate campuses for one or two minutes violations. The party also wants dorm fines lowered.

The UP is calling for the redistricting of Legislature seats so that an accurate picture of the interest of the campus is reflected in that governing body.

The party has pledged to investigate a means of removing the election of The Daily Tar Heel editor from partisan politics.

Concerning the judicial system, the UP would improve the present courts rather than dissolving some or combining certain of the courts.

The University Party states it will increase support to the IDC so as to work for a bigger and better dorm social program, an expanded dorm visiting agreement program, additional social and physical facilities and increased dorm services.

The UP favors an investigation of the National Student Association, which the party believes may not be representative of the students on campus.

Urging the immediate acquisition of a new student union, the UP will promote even a partail self-liquidation plan if necessary to get the new building here.

On the subject of date tickets, the party says it will work toward the availability of reasonable priced tickets for all athletic events.

Govt. Loans Available For Students

Students interested in obtaining loans from the U. S. Government have been requested to turn in applications by Friday, April 10, to the manager, Student Loan Funds, Steele Hall.

"Special consideration" will be given to students with a superior academic background who express a desire to teach in elementary and secondary schools and students whose academic background indicates a "superior capacity or preparation in science, mathematics, engineering, or a modern foreign language."

Applicants not in priority categories will be considered if funds are still available after loans are approved for the priority applicants.

The loans were made available under the National Defense Education Act.

Senior Class Will Solicit Teachers

For the first time in the history of the University, the senior class alumni committee will solicit senior spring practice teachers before they leave the campus.

Soliciting is being held through Wednesday.

Because of this early soliciting, the Class of '59 hopes to get a high percentage of the class to join the Alumni Association.

Seniors have the advantage of joining at the reduced rate of $1.

Those who will be soliciting the practice teachers include Sue Ballantine, Lucy Forsyth, Charlene Bass, Sara Adams, Martha Turner, Lew White, Barbara Lewis, Susan Saunders, Eunice Simmson, Kay McGavran, Sue Stanford, Jack Secrest, Bill King, Jeff Hare and Hamp Lefler.

Shumate, O'Tuel Win SP Endorsement

By STAN BLACK and STAN FISHER

The Student Party last night endorsed Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel for the co-editorship of The Daily Tar Heel over Davis Young by a vote of 27-5.

Davis Young spoke on his qualifications for the editorship, including his service as Feature Editor and staff member on the paper and his editorship of the Summer School Weekly. Evidence was produced in the form of exhibits of letters endorsing him for that position and editorials and columns written for both the Weekly and The Daily Tar Heel.

Young declared that all rumors of his possibly using the editorship as a springboard to the student body presidency were obviously false, as an editor who fulfilled his job would be incapable from the standpoint of both grades and popularity.

The Student Party will meet tonight at 7 p.m. to consider its platform for the coming election. The meeting will be held in Roland Parker Lounge.

Shumate and O'Tuel, commenting on their candidacy as co-editors, outlined the functions each would fill in operating the Daily Tar Heel.

Shumate quoted his experience gained in the past year in various capacities on the Daily Tar Heel. He would supervise the news and layout parts of the paper while O'Tuel, having served as Publications Board Chairman, would deal more with the business side of the paper.

Speakers in favor of the two candidates for the co-editorship were Rudy Edwards, IDC president, Curtis Gans, current Daily Tar Heel editor, Rusty Hammon, sports editor, Leon Holt, Bill Lineberry, and Norman E. Smith.

Speaking in behalf of Young were Peter Young and Art Shields. Shields read statements from Rick Wolfer and Bill Norton also supporting Young. Wolfer and Norton were unable to attend because of other activities.

Curtis Gans told the party that its only real choice lay in endorsing O'Tuel and Shumate. He defined this choice as one between black and white, right and wrong.

Gans also referred to a letter signed by 28 members of the Daily Tar Heel staff appearing in today's paper endorsing Shumate and O'Tuel as the one good choice for the voters.

Gans charged Young's presentation speech to the Party as being inaccurate in some areas, and lacking incompleteness in others. Accuracy, he said, should be the first concern of a good newspaperman.

Peter Young, speaking in behalf of his brother, denied a charge made by Gans that Young and his supporters were circulating a rumor that "Shumate not only stuttered talking, but stuttered writing."

Young said such a charge was not part of their campaign tactics and completely denied the accusation. Explaining some of Davis Young's lack of completeness and alleged inaccurracy in presenting himself as a candidate to the party, he said the speech had run too long in earlier timing trials and had been drastically cut.

After hearing short speeches from supporters of both sides, the endorsement moved to a secret ballot resulting in the endorsement of Shumate and O'Tuel.

SP Chairman Praises Furtado, Smith, Party

Student Party Chairman John Brooks yesterday issued a statement summing the SP program of the past year and pointing to the role of Norman B. Smith, SP nominee for president of the student body, in making the party program a success.

"The student government has made many significant contributions this year under the SP administration," Brooks began. "Don Furtado established the Committee on State Affairs under the leadership of Norman Smith this past fall for the purpose of supporting the proposed University budget requests from the N. C. Legislature. This committee prepared an excellent presentation of the University's problems in a book let for distribution to the state legislators and arranged for each legislator to be visited during the Christmas holidays.

"Even now the committee is continuing its contacts with Raleigh in an effort to rescue the money needed for UNC to be a quality school.

"Also under the leadership of Norman Smith, the Student Legislature established a committee to investigate the self-liquidation of dormitories policy and to make recommendations on behalf of the student body concerning the problem of contemplated increased room rents for the purpose of building new dormitories."

This committee recommended that a policy of self-liquidating new dorms be followed only to the extent that no further room rent increases were involved. Norman B. Smith presented this proposed policy in a report to the Visiting Committee of the UNC Trustees.

In its annual report the Board of Trustees responded:

"The Committee visited with and interviewed representative student leaders on several occasions. We were both pleased and impressed with their maturity and sincerity of purpose. They evidenced a keen interest in and appreciation of the more crucial problems now confronting the University. We found a strong and well-functioning student government."

The committee's dormitory building policy that is currently being pursued encompasses the recommendation made by the student committee, according to Brooks' statement.

Brooks continued, "Other significant contributions of this year's SP administration have been: (1) extension of the UNC Attorney General's staff to cover campus code violations; (2) the installations of hear-here phone booths in several dorms on an experimental basis; (3) the opening of study rooms; (4) the establishment of a dorm visiting agreement as pledged in last year's SP platform; (5) the opening of a Scuttlebutt in the new dorm area; (6) the placement of a student member on the Merchant's Association Board of Directors.

"(7) the codification of existing student government statutes; (8) the investigation of the needs of women's dorms for study rooms; (9) the revision of composition and policies of the Publications Board; (10) the establishment of an International Student Council; and (11) the formulation of accounting procedures for the Student Audit Office which handles over $1,000,000 annually."

Fuller Says Experience Important To Treasurer

Erwin Fuller, Student Party candidate for treasurer of student government, said Monday the treasurer has a responsible position.

He stated that the treasurer serves as administrator of a student government budget of more than $120,000 and his position is worthy "of sincere interest and dedication."

Fuller emphasized that experience is important and beneficial because the finances are "complex matters set in an intricate and complicated structure."

The treasurer deals with difficult problems which Fuller says cannot be understood in "a period of a few weeks or a few months . . . no matter how qualified and competent that person may be."

"My experience during the past three years with the Audit Board, the Finance Committee of the Student Legislature, the Budget Committee, and other groups concerned with student finances has given me a sound understanding of the problems with which I would be dealing as treasurer and has enabled me to formulate some definite ideas concerning procedures and actions I feel should be initiated and instituted for the betterment of student government and an increased general understanding of the financial structure," Fuller said.

He commented that the foremost achievements possible in this realm would be the clarification and codification of the financial legislation, procedures and informal agreements.

This could be done by working with the Attorney General's staff, the Audit Board and the Legislature's Finance Committee. The accomplishment would promote increased clarity and understanding and uniformity of practice.

Fuller also noted that a treasurer must have a detailed knowledge and understanding of the financial problems and must serve as an executive student body.

"Hence he should possess knowl- officer and a representative of the edge, experience and contact in realms other than solely finances. My work with the Consolidated University Student Council, Committee on State Affairs, Student Council, Campus Chest, Baptist Student Union and the Professional Interfraternity Council has given me experience and insight in various areas which I feel I could effectively employ in relationships with other student leaders, both on and off campus, with the faculty and with the administration as a representative of the University of North Carolina student body," he stated.

Fuller is a business administration student majoring in business economics. He is also a member of Delta Sigma Pi, professional fraternity in business administration and commerce.

Three More Announce Candidacy

Three more candidates have filed with the Elections Board to run for office in the April 7 elections.

These are: Kay Boortz, Wayne B. Venters and Roy H. Park Jr.

Running for chairman of the Women's Residence Council is Miss Boortz, the only person who had filed for that position through Monday afternoon.

Venters is an independent candidate for the Student Council. He did not seek endorsement by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

Park will run as an independent for Legislature from Town Men's II. Park has been previously endorsed by Student Party, but he declined that endorsement and filed as an independent for the Legislature seat.

The names of these three candidates were released Monday by Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board.

YWCA Picks Officers

Sophie Martin will head the YWCA next year. New Y officers were elected last week in coed residences.

The other officers are as follows: Nan Robinson, vice president; Harriette Dwelle, recording secretary; Margaret Ray, executive secretary, and Julie Redhead, program chairman.

Two run-offs will be held tonight at 11 o'clock in coed residences for the offices of treasurer and membership chairman.

Candidates for treasurer are Mary Sue Hannah and Nancy Smathers. Lou Johnson and Linda Rehm are running for membership chairman.

Two Endorsed For Yack Editorship

Two rising seniors have been endorsed for co-editors of the Yackety-Yack.

Bob Austin and Tom Overman received the endorsement of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board Monday.

Austin has worked on the Yack staff as sophomore section editor and as a proof reader. He was business manager of his high school yearbook and newspaper.

At the University he has worked on the Student Traffic Advisory Committee, the Campus Chest and is a member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity.

Although Overman has not worked on the Yack staff, he was editor of his high school yearbook. His other experience in journalism has been: sports reporter for the Raleigh News and Observer and sports editor of his high school newspaper.

LEFT BANK ATMOSPHERE

Art League Sponsors Show

Chapel Hill will assume a Left Bank atmosphere April 24-26 when the University Art League sponsors the Second Annual Sidewalk Art Show.

The major project of the young art group at the University serves the purpose of acquainting campus and local citizens with current area artwork and serves as a sales medium for aspiring artists.

Robert Shannon, chairman for the Sidewalk Show this year, has announced that all art forms will be welcome. Paintings in any media, sculpture, drawings, crafts and other art works will be accepted either for exhibit or possible sale.

A one dollar entry fee is being charged to all non-members of the Art League and there will be a flat 15 per cent commission on all sales handled through the Sidewalk Show. Prices placed on articles for sale will be left up to the individual artist.

Location for the show this year will be the lawn adjacent to Battle-Vance-Pettigrew Dormitory and the University Methodist Church. The Show will be open during the hours between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. April 24 and 25 and will open at noon on April 26.

Works to be entered in the show must be submitted one week prior to the opening date. A reception center for all entries will be announced later. Paintings and drawings are to be either framed or matted or may be placed in portfolios prepared by the artist. No loose, unframed or unmatted pictures will be accepted.

Shannon pointed out that all area artists are welcome to submit works to the Show, which is not restricted to University students. Inquiries should be addressed to him in care of the Art Department, Ackland Hall, or at 3 Clark Court, Chapel Hill.

Although the Art League has been in existence at UNC for only two years, this will be the second spring for the Sidewalk Show. Membership in the group is largely among UNC students but the first Sidewalk Show contained works from both students and Chapel Hill residents, as well as some pieces representing artists outside the community.

UNC REPRESENTATIVE—Miss Eleanor Jane Smith, a junior from Atlanta, Ga., has been selected to represent the University of North Carolina at the 1959 Azalea Festival in Wilmington on April 2-5. This is one of many honors coming to Miss Smith, who was chosen this year's queen for Yackety Yack, the student yearbook. Miss Smith was chosen as Azalea representative by the heads of the six major women's organizations on the campus, who considered a number of campus beauty queens. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben T. Smith of 3635 Paces Ferry Road, N.W. in Atlanta.

Paris Trio Performs Tonight At 8 In Hill

The Pasquier Trio of Paris will appear here today in a concert open to the public.

The program will be given at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall and is being sponsored by Petite Musicale.

The string trio is composed of three brothers—Jean, violinist; Pierre, violist, and Etienne, cellis. The Pasquier Trio since its debut in 1927 has gained an international reputation.

The family group was educated at the School of Music at Tours and at the Conservatory in Paris.

The group has for 30 years performed in the United States and abroad. They are able to make the trip to the U.S. only every two or three years because of their pressing schedule in Europe.

The repertoire of the Pasbuier Trio ranges from the classics to contemporary compositions, many of which were written especially for the group.

The Pasquier Trio has frequently collaborated with the world's famous keyboard artists including Vladimir Horowitz, Robert Casadessus, Arthur Balsam and Marguerite Long to perform the piano quartet literature.

The unity of their playing and their temperamental adjustment to each other results in the three brothers working together as one with such success that their technique has been heralded by many critics.

Univac1105 Operations Lectures Slated April

By AL CLAYTOR

Do you want to learn how to use the new Univac 1105 computer?

The Research Computation Center will present a series of six lectures for that purpose.

The lectures, April 6-17, will aim at presenting techniques for using the new computer to faculty members and students.

The computer is scheduled to be operating in the new Phillips Hall addition Aug. 1.

The non-professional computer user, with no more than the training offered in the lectures, may solve a wide variety of problems in his own particular area.

At the completion of the first five lectures, attendees should be able to prepare most arithmetically-oriented problems. He will also have introduced briefly a large-scale data processing language for the 1105 "Aimaco."

The final lecture will be devoted to a discussion of the statistical routines now available for the equipment for the processing of data.

Information will be given on the structure of the core of the Univac 1105, the Era-1103A computer, and the use and purpose of the "USE" compiler.

The first lecture series will be followed with a second series of lectures to be given for those who want to become more familiar with the actual structure of the machine.

Lectures are scheduled to be held from 3 to 5 p.m., on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, April 6, 8, 10, 13, 15, and 17—April 6 and 8 in Carroll Hall, Room 106, and April 10, 13, 15 and 17 in Gerrard Hall. Lectures will be given by Prof. John W. Carr II, director of the Research Computation Center, and members of the staff.

Persons planning to attend have been asked to notify Mrs. Nancy Kost, telephone 7-4701.

Max Gardner Award Won By State Prof

A professor at North Carolina State College is the recipient of the 1959 O. Max Gardner Award.

Prof. Gertrude M. Cox, director of the Consolidated University's Institute of Statistics Headquarters at State College, was presented the award at a dinner Sunday night at Woman's College in Greensboro.

The annual award is made to a member of the faculties of the Consolidated University, who, in the judgment of the board of trustees, has made the greatest contribution to the welfare of the human race during the academic year.

The award carries with it a gift of cash from the income of $25,000 which the late Gov. O. Max Gardner placed in trust.

A UNC faculty member, Dr. Warner Wells, received the award in 1957.

Spring Recess Begins Thurs. University Operations Cut

The combined Easter holiday and spring recess for the University will begin at 1 p.m. Thursday, March 26.

Easter Monday will be included in the brief vacation from classes. Students will return to classes Tuesday morning, March 31.

The spring semester classes, which opened on Jan. 29, will continue through May 19. After one reading day, semester final examinations will be given May 21-28. Commencement activities will begin on May 30, ending with graduation exercises on June 1.

Wilson Library will observe the following hours during the spring recess: Thursday, 7:45 a.m. - 5 p.m.; Friday, 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m. - 1 p.m.; Sunday, closed; Monday, 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.

The Library will resume regular hours beginning March 31.

Graham Memorial Student Union will follow its usual schedule on Thursday and next Tuesday. However, Friday through Monday of the spring recess Graham Memorial will be open 4-11 p.m.

The Billiard Room at Graham Memorial will be closed all day Thursday through Sunday. It will open at 4 p.m. on Easter Monday and close at 11 p.m. Regular hours will begin Tuesday.

The barber show in the basement of Graham Memorial will observe regular hours Thursday through Saturday but be closed Sunday and Monday. The outer entrance, east side of building, will be open until 4 p.m.

Thursday morning will be the last edition of The Daily Tar Heel before the recess. The paper will resume publication on Wednesday morning, April 1.

CAMPUS SEEN

Politicians Limited

A maximum length of space is being placed on statements to The Daily Tar Heel from the two campus parties and candidates for election April 7. No statements from now through elections may run over 12 inches.

Daily Tar Heel Editor Curtis Gans said this is being done because of the limited space in the newspaper for other campus stories.

A Meeting Needed

The Daily Tar Heel received the following letter:

Editor:

Early next month, elections will be held for the offices of the student body. We, as responsible students, should cast our votes for those candidates we feel are the best qualified for these offices.

But the majority of us know no more about the candidates than their names; therefore, how could we honestly cast a vote in favor of any candidate? I myself consider it best not to vote if there is not some definite reason for doing so.

Of course, we can form opinions concerning candidates from what we read in The Daily Tar Heel. And in most, if not all cases, these opinions will be good. But you and I know both know that no intelligent opinion about any candidate can be based on what he says in the Tar Heel about what he plans to do if elected.

Thus, I suggest that some better means is needed by which the student body at large can become better acquainted with the various candidates. And I go even further to suggest such a means: each candidate should be required to give a campaign speech at such time set aside for campaign speeches. This could take place in Memorial Hall any time preceding the elections.

Then, when election day rolls around, most of the students will be able to mark x's beside the names of the candidates who they sincerely feel are the most capable of acting in the best interest of the students and the University.

I only ask that careful consideration be given my suggestion.

LAWFORD EDWARDS

Whereas the editors does not agree with the idea that one should not vote, and the editor does feel that if any person wants information about a candidate, the candidate is usually available and does make an effort to see the people on the candidate, the idea of a public meeting is still a good one.

A few weeks ago the chairman of the current affairs committee said that he was planning such a debate. The editor hopes that he follows through on his plans.

It's Spring

The editor's pen, filled to the brim with vitriol usually, will relax for a day's moratorium in honor of the coming of spring.

There is something about this emergence from winter into the bright, blossomy, bloom of Spring that has a certain revivifying effect on the student. It makes one feel almost as if he'll live through the rest of the semester.

Harper's Bizarre

There was something symbolic about the way he laid his pencil aside. He looked about him, seeing figures still huddled over blue-books. He thought of the semester past — the drizzly January rain which overflowed into February; the bitter February cold; the newly green world which he saw only through the window screen with wistful eye.

He had vowed to himself at mid-winter that this spring would be different. And it had been. The rain had found him working late in the lab . . . the sound of its spiattering on the window his only companion. The cold couldn't find its way into his room . . . he'd often stood for a moment, blowing the panes frosty . . . just a moment, then back to the books. The wind . . . he hadn't noticed that much — not even the Lion of March could shake the stout library walls. And the spring, which he'd seen only through screened windows . . . he had even forced himself to be impassive about that. When he wrote home, he would barely mention that he was studying. He could resist bragging, for he knew that the final grades would do that for him.

Now all that was left were final grades.

And the pencil, yes . . . there, beside his paper, symbolized by a tiny green Scripto, lay his entire semester's work. The whole of his effort, sacrifice, ambition. With the laying aside of the almost weightless pencil, the infinite oppressive weight of school was lifed from his shoulders.

He carried his blue-book to the instructor's office.

"Through already?" the instrucor asked.

"Yes sir."

"How many more to go?"

"None. This was my last one."

"Well, you did very well in this course, you know. I hope your other grades will be as good."

"I hope so too. And," he smiled, "I think they will be. Well, thank you. Have a good summer.

Outside the building he stood for a moment taking a deep, deep breath. "It's good to be alive, for a change," he thought. "Time for a beer before supper."

He walked across campus. At the street he paused, "Damn, I left my pencil. Well, I won't need it now, anyway."

As he was crossing the street, he was struck by a car. At the hospital he was pronounced dead. It was May 27.

THE SOUND AND THE FURY. At the Carolina Theatre through Wednesday.

Unlike the novel from which it derives, the movie of THE SOUND AND THE FURY is quite easily epitomized without suffering from the reduction. The major premise of its brief seems to be that the lady is a tramp, and the minor premise that the bastard is a bitch, from which the necessary conclusion is drawn that only an s.o.b. can save the day. Translated back into terms of the movie's plot, Candace Compson (Margaret Leighton) is a tramp who deserts her bastard daughter Quentin (Joanne Woodward), who in turn tends toward her mother's tradition but with an added strain of willful bitchery thrown in. All of this necessitated the reciprocal bitchiness of a different sort of bastard, Jason Compson (Yul Brynner), in order to set the Compson clan back on its feet.

The problem which the film poses is not primarily that of its relation to the novel whose title it uses. The film should stand on its own merits, such as they are. It should suffice, therefore, to say here that not only does the film lose the weight of the prose-poetic novel — to a greater extent than is necessarily involved in the change of medium, it should be added; but the film also makes free with the facts of Mr. Faulkner's fiction, and a good deal of confusion, plus an improbable and syrupy happy ending, are the inevitable result.

In fact, the unhappy impression is that the film is saved from being a poor parody of Faulkner manly through the effors of its actors. Margaret Leighton, as Candace Compton, delivers a restrained performance in a role which is written for teats, almost despite the bathos of the role, she manages to project a wide range of human feelings.

Miss Leighton is, of course, an established actress. Joanne Woodward has yet to reach her growth, though she has been rising fast for several years now. In the future, looking back, this film may prove to mark a climax in her development. She has played essentially the same role before (THE LONG HOT SUMMER and THE THREE FACES OF EVE come to mind immediately) and seemed to have developed mannered stereotype which would serve equally well for any movie with a Southern locale. Now, in THE SOUND AND THE FURY, the character is particularized, and only occasionally in the early scenes does Miss Woodward's portrayal of Quentin Compson fall back into the easy stereotype. In many other scenes, throughout the picture, she is better than she has ever been before, which is to say that she is very fine indeed.

Two performances in minor roles go far to sustain the quality of the acting. Ethel Waters is back, for one thing, and the mention of her presence in te cast should suffice. She grows only older, her hair whiter, but she loses none of her power, none of the quiet authority and genuine humor which have been her contribution to the performing arts since long before there were many Negroes playing anything but Uncle Tom roles.

Jack Warden makes a unique contribution as the idiot mute, Benjy. Without a word to speak, he is eloquent. It is unfortunate that the script destroys the role for the sake of melodrama when it has Benjy attempt to strangle Quentin, but such is the rule rather than the exception in Hollywood.

Most of the other roles are well done, with the glaring exception of Jason, played by Yul Brynner. There was a certain fascination in the hairless Brynner, but now that he has stimulated a new growth (or adopted a wig) he must fall back on his talents. To do this for Mr. Brynner means that he must fall back on nothing, for, deprived of his magnificent bald plate, his total stock in trade consists of a finely formed stone face and two eyes which are ever fixed in a glassy stare. Even so handsomely mounted as they are in Mr. Brynner, such feaures soon become tiresome, and the man becomes a pretentious, posturing ornament.

Still, even Brynner cannot do much to dim the brilliance of the four leading lights in this film, and he shows up, as competent, at least, in relation to the rest of the film.

THE FAULKNER READER: A Modern Library Giant. 682 pp. New York: Random House. $2.95.

Even the best film version of a novel is not equal to its source, and THE SOUND AND THE FURY is far from the best; and yet, perhaps, the poor imitation may have the happy consequence of sending readers in search of the original. As Mr. Faulkner is something less than lucid in his novels, the movie may serve the added purpose of providing the neophyte with some useful — if only somewhat correct — preconcepions.

Fortunately, Random House has just come out with a Modern Library Giant which contains the text of the novel. Also included are selections from some of his other novels (including "The Bear"), three novellas, nine stories, and the famous Nobel Prize address.

THE WORLD OF WILLIAM FAULKNER. By Ward L. Miner. Evergreen (paperback). $1.45.

Those at the other extreme, Faulkner students who know everything there is to know about the novels and a good deal about the man, and who like everything they know, may be interested in this very special piece of criticism. Actually, this is pseudo-criticism, for its import is mainly of curiosity value: Mr. Miner sets out to draw all possible parallels between Faulkner's actual home town and country and the similar setting of his art works. Such an entrance into criticism is extremely suspect, for even if every one of Faulkners' characters were to be found on the tax rolls of the real town of Oxford, Mississippi, we would still have no more of "the world of William Faulkner" than the rich cosmos which he paints in his art.

Letters On A Variety Of Topics

Representative Clyde H. Harriss,
Chairman
House Appropriations Committee
The Capitol
Raleigh, North Carolina
Dear Representative Harriss:

On Wednesday, March 18, Mr. William C. Friday, President of the Consolidated University, appeared before the Joint Appropriations Committee to present the budget request for the Consolidated University. This presentation was made after careful analysis and consideration of the many pressing needs of the Consolidated University and is a summation of these needs by the most qualified educational minds of this State.

Though it may be presumptuous on my part, it is my belief that you and the members of your committee would wish to know the thoughts of the individuals concerned with this presentation—the students themselves. On behalf of the students of the University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, I wish to express my sincere hope that the Legislature of our State will realize the vital needs of its only University and will, therefore, grant the considered request of the Consolidated University.

Every citizen of our State realizes that we are not a wealthy state except in human resources. It is in this great resource that the future of North Carolina must lie, and this resource can be developed only if we assume that education shall be of the highest priority in our concerns.

Since I represent only the students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, I must necessarily express only their sentiments. It is our common knowledge that the proposal of the Advisory Budget Commission is woefully inadequate, and that, if we hope to have an institution which can truly educate and produce the leaders of this State, these inadequacies must be met. It would be possible for me to express our concern over the need for increased faculty salaries, increased library appropriations, the much needed student center, etc., but I am confident that President Friday has already presented these obvious needs. I will only say that the students of this University, along with the people of our State, look prayerfully to this Legislature to alleviate our great educational needs.

Editor:

For the past few days, several articles have been presented in the Daily Tar Heel concerning dorm officers, their qualification and activities. This is the last in the series of articles to be presented about dorm presidents and IDC representatives. The articles were written in order to interest dorm residents in their officers and to encourage the election of good competent dorm leaders.

The dorm president and IDC representatives present their dorms in the IDC per se. The IDC is the policy making body for all the dormitories. It considers such things as the intramural program, vending machines, dormitory rules, court operation and procedure, etc. It is important that your dorm be represented by officers who will conscientiously represent you and your interest. Many questions which affect you, the dorm presidents, are discussed and decided in these meetings. Nominate and elect officers who will do this actively and prudently for your dormitory. It can make a difference in your living condition.

The ideas presented in these articles about dorm presidents and IDC representatives are suggestive than exhausitive ones. There is no limit to what dorm officers can do for their dormitory, if they will devote their time and energy to the job. For the best dorm government ever, give these offices and candidates for the offices your deepest consideration. Nominate and vote discriminately!

Rudy Edwards

Dear Mr. Lawson:

It is the priviledge of every student at this University to judge the value of writing in The Daily Tar Heel on its own merit without regard to whose attitudes it represents. If Bill Bailey's letter were as irrational and as vaguely ideal as you claim, why do you suppose that the readers might accept it as reflecting "the attitudes of the University in general?" To attribute attitudes to this University is to deny that the students can think for themselves without relying on group standards which may not be the solution to the problems each individual faces as a member of society. To question Bill Bailey's motives in writing his letter is to deny the vital importance of minority opinion in a democracy and to avoid the basic issue of whether military force can possibly solve the problems of humanity. Let us face the practical side of the question.

Military forces are an instrument of national policy designed to preserve the lives and the ways of life of our people against external threats. The use of these same forces in modern times probably would annihilate the human race and certainly would wreck civilization. Our armed forces are not an adequate deterrent even to limited aggression because use of them would initiate a suicidal total war. It is time for each of us to give this problem deep consideration and to strive for a solution which will enable the greatest constructive forces of mankind to be used for the welfare of all. Essential to this is the unrestricted exchange of ideas which must be upheld by a free press.

Bob Costello

Editor:

The review of the Carolina Quarterly in the Tar Heel was excellent. It was both more intelligent and more skillfully written than anything I found in the Quarterly itself.

John L. Hook

Editor:

Will you allow an outsider to horn in on a discussion between Bill Bailey and Jim Merrell?

I can understand Mr. Bailey's irritation and anger because the United States has gone militaristic in a big way but it is not the fault of the individual student who, more often than not, is serving under duress as are millions of others who are drafted and compelled to serve a cause inimical to their own interests. And I have no doubt that all but a gullible few are as angry as Mr. Bailey. A few, of course, honestly believe they are serving their country and the cause of "freedom" (read oil, minerals, markets, etc.)

The build-up of this vast military machine has been concommitant with the investment of American corporations in foreign countries. Senator Maybank made the statement some years ago to the effect that American corporations had 35 billions invested outside the USA and the taxpayers had to spend more than that amount every year to police and protect those investments.

If Mr. Bailey will make a graph of our foreign investments annually for the past quarter century and another of the fantastic growth of our military machine he will find the lines to be approximately parallel.

There are not many countries outside Russia, China and their allies that are not occupied by our military forces. For the most part and in one way or another we dominate the economy of those countries. And whoever dominates the economy of a country dominates its politics. They tolerate us only because we assuage their anger with bribes. But they hate us none-the-less. And it is not because they do not understand our foreign policy; it is because they do.

But there is another reason for the growth of our military machine which we must maintain at a cost of 40 billion a year. The truth is that what is euphenistically called free enterprise can no longer stand on its own legs. The cold war must be kept going to keep American inaustry going. That 40 billion is a subsidy for General Motors and the other industrial giants; and there would be economic collapse if we agreed with Russia to call off the cold war and disarm. We can't do it because our economy won't stand it. Hence our reluctance to discuss the matter.

I suggest Mr. Bailey take another look, not at the unfortunate student who wears an ROTC uniform, but at the sinister frankenstein that has come to dominate the life of this as well as most other countries of the world.

The boys who live in Avery Dorm were robbed!

Thursday night, Ralph Waldo Cummings and the members of the University Party, with the notable exception of David Grigg, working as a coalition robbed the residents of Dorm Men's VI by denying their elected representative the right to stand before the Student Legislature and explain to it some of the events that went on in a committee meeting and of some of the facts pertinent to a bill tabled by that committee that have since been brought out in hearings before the North Carolina State Senate's committee on the Budget.

It all goes back to a resolution introduced a week ago by the ELECTED representative of the boys in Avery Dorm calling for the payment in cash of the sudent workers in Lenoir Hall and the Pine Room.

Hobart Steele, who is chairman of the Student Dining Hall Committee, Ben Johnson, the Student Supervisor of Lenoir Hall, and Jerry Watrick, a "typical red blooded American boy" student employe appeared before the Ways and Means committee to present their views on this bill. The author was here to introduce them and help them over any rough spots.

The Dining Hall's committee's investigations into current policy at Lenoir had revealed that the Colored, non-sudent help on the temporary pay roll was receiving approximately 52 cents an hour plus a 75 cent or 40 cent meal each shift they worked. If the student help was paid cash they would get the same deal plus income tax withholdings and social security deductions.

A poll of student workers was conducted by Johnson at the direction of the administration. Most of the workers polled believed that they were voting whether to accept 75 cents in tickets or 52 cents in cash. They did know about the meal. The expected happened. The boys voted 90% per cent to keep the present system.

Johnson, speaking for the administration, asked for a moratorium until after April 10th. He claimed that by that time a more comprehensive questionaire could be circulated among the workers, inquiries as to changes in policy could be made to Raleigh and to the student aid office here.

Since there was some confusion, and a need to do a more thorough job of study on the question, the Ways and Means committee, and correctly so, tabled the bill until April 15th.

In writing up a report on the meeting, Rep. Janie Walters of the committee, reported only on the people who were present and on the final action taken. This is proper and customary.

However, since the meeting Wednesday afternoon, a number of pertinent facts and an opinion on the subject have been published in The Daily Tar Heel and The News And Observer. The author of the resolution felt that these facts and opinions were pertinent to the issue at hand and rose to have them inserted in the record.

He felt that the comment by one of the State Senators, showing his (the Senator's) astonishment at the size of the profit made annually by Lenoir Hall and the Pine Room, (some 20,000 dollars) deserved to be heard by the members of the body. He felt that the emergence of a new issue, whether or not all self help employees shouldn't be paid at least 75 cents an hour in cash, should also be brought out.

He felt that as a member of the Student Legislature that he had a right to be heard. He felt that these back ground items should be made a part of the record to help the new legislature coming in on April 16th evaluate the problem more effectively and make a decision that would have far reaching implications for the entire body of self help students.

Apparently there are those who do not. They are those who would rob the ELECTED representative of the boys in Avery Dorm of his right to speak.

CONVENTION SPEAKER — Approximately 200 Catholic college students from North Carolina and Virginia will hear an address by the Very Rev. Michael P. Walsh, president of Boston College, in Chapel Hill on April. His talk, part of a regional convention of the Newman Clubs, will concern "The Catholic Church and Evolution" and will be open to the public. It will be given in Carroll Hall on the University of North Carolina campus. Father Walsh, a noted Jesuit biologist, has done extensive research in cytology and genetics.

KEY STORY

Ackland Has Famous Lock Collection

From the time that the first key-operated locking device was invented, the key has served man, not only as an important practical object, but as one of his most meaningful and universal symbols. Consequently, craftsmen throughout history have expended every effort to make the key an object of beauty as well as of utility.

Representative results of these efforts through the ages are among the interesting objects on view at an exhibition called "Style & Security," which opens a three-week showing on Tuesday, March 24, in the William Hayes Ackland Memorial Art Center at the University of North Carolina. The exhibit will be open free to the public. "Style & Security" is presented by The Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company and circulated by the American Federation of Arts. It is composed of two parts, an Historical Section and a Contemporary Design Section. The Historical Section includes over two hundred keys, locks, escutcheons, and other objects from the famous Yale Lock Collection; the Contemporary Design Section is composed of representative pieces of door ornamentation created by leading artists and designers who were commissioned for this purpose by Yale & Towne. These artists and designers include: Jacques Lipchitz, Fernand Leger, Theodore J. Roszak, Ibram Lassaw, Philip C. Johnson, Mirko, Isamu Noguchi, Paolo De Poli, Andrea Sapadini, Paolo Venini, Van Day Truex, and Glen Holland.

Part of the exhibition's Historical Section is devoted to tracing the evolution of keys and to showing the key as a symbolic object. The oldest key in "Style & Security" is a wooden object resembling a toothbrush which operates an "Egyptian type" lock, reportedly used by the Persian Emperor Darius III at Abydos in Asia Minor in 336 B.C. Locks and keys of this kind were in use at least as early as 2000 B.C. A number of metal Roman keys dating back to at least 100 B.C. are also part of the exhibition.

Symbolically, the key has represented the spiritual or temporal power of Christian saints, pagan gods, medieval kings, and rulers of vast empires. Spiritually, it has represented the power to open the doors between life and death and between this world and the world beyond. Oriental gods have always been portrayed holding keys. Typical of these portrayals are the many cylinder seals from the third pre-Christian millenium which show the Babylonian sun god with a large, serrated key in his hands: the token of his power, as bringer of light, to open the "doors of day." Such later equivalents of this Babylonian god as Apollo and Mithras were also shown equipped with Keys. Members of the Mithras cult customarily buried a key with their dead. This explains that fact that many Roman keys made between 100 B.C. and 400 A.D., the years when the cult flourished, have been found in areas of Europe which were then Roman provinces. A number of these keys are exhibited in "Style & Security."

The key has also been the attribute of gods who conveyed souls after death to the world beyond. Among these were the Egyptian deities Bes and Anubis as well as Pluto and Persephone who, in classical mythology, guarded the heavy doors of Hades.

Another figure from classical mythology, who was always portrayed holding a key, was Janus, double-faced pagan god, who, as keeper of all doors and roadways and guardian of households, held power with key and staff over portals and roads. It is in this way that the vocational designation, "janitor," derives from the name Janus. The name of the first month, "January," also derives from the name Janus because the first hour of the day, the first day of the month, and the first month of the year were sacred to this deity.

Keys are also used frequently as symbols in The Bible. Judges (III, 23-25) speaks of shut doors which could be opened from the outside with a key. Isaiah (XXXII, 22) provides another example—"And the key of the House of David will I lay upon his shoulders . . .".

Christianity preserved the key as a spiritual symbol. Christ handed the keys to the Apostle Peter as a visible token of Peter's assumption of authority and responsibility. "I hand to you the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven" (Matthew XVI, 19). Peter's key became the symbol of the Papacy and countless medieval paintings carry its image.

The key has also been widely used as a symbol of temporal power. In ancient Roman marriage ceremonies, the bride received it as a visible sign of her right to possession of household goods

GUN LOCK — Model Marion Mooney is holding an ingenious early American gun lock which fired a percussion cap whenever an intruder turned a knob of the locked door. The gun lock is in "Style & Security," an exhibition of keys, locks, and door ornamentation which will open a three week showing in the William Hayes Ackland Memorial Art Center at the University of North Carolina on Tuesday, March 24.

HOW TO BE A THUMPING BIG SUCCESS ON CAMPUS

While up in the attic last week hiding from the tax man, I came across a letter, yellow with age, that dear old Dad had sent me when I was a freshman. I reproduce it below in the hope that it may light your way as it did mine.

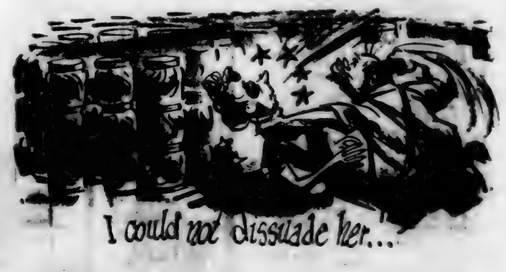
"Dear Son, (Dad always called me Son. This was short for Sonnenberg, which used to be my first name. I traded it last year with a man named Max. He threw in two outfielders and a left-handed pitcher . . . But I digress.)

"Dear Son, (Dad wrote)

"I suppose you are finding college very big and bewildering, and maybe a little frightening too. Well, it need not be that way if you will follow a few simple rules.

"First of all, if you have any problems, take them to your teachers. They want to help you. That's what they are there for. Perhaps they seem a little aloof, but that is only because they are so busy. You will find your teachers warm as toast and friendly as pups if you will call on them at an hour when they are not overly busy. Four a.m., for instance.

"Second, learn to budget your time. What with classes, activities, studying, and social life all competing for your time, it is easy to fall into sloppy habits. Set up a rigid schedule and stick to it. Remember, there are only 24 hours a day. Three of these hours must be spent in class. For every hour in class you must, of course, spend two hours studying. So there go six more hours. Then, as we all know, for every hour studying, you must spend two hours sleeping. This accounts for twelve more hours. Then there are meals—three hours each for breakfast and lunch, four hours for dinner. Never forget, Sonnenberg, you must chew each mouthful twelve hundred times. You show me a backward student, and I'll show you a man who bolts his food.



"But college is more than just sleeping, eating, and studying. There are also many interesting activities which you must not miss. You'll want to give at least three hours a day to the campus newspaper, and, of course, another three hours each to the dramatic and music clubs. And let's say a total of eight hours daily to the stamp club, the debating club, and the foreign affairs club. Then, of course, nine or ten hours for fencing and bird-walking, and another ten or twelve for ceramics and three-card monte.

"Finally we come to the most important part of each day—what I call 'The Quiet Time.' This is a period in which you renew yourself—just relax and think great thoughts and smoke Marlboro Cigarettes. Why Marlboro? Because they are the natural complement to the active life. They have better 'makin's'; the filter filters; the flavor is rich and mellow and a treat to the tired, a boon to the spent, a safe harbor to the storm-tossed. That's why.

"Well, Sonnenberg, I guess that's about all. Your kindly old mother sends her love. She has just finished putting up rather a large batch of pickles—in fact, 350,000 jars. I told her that with you away at school, we would not need so many, but kindly old Mother is such a creature of habit that, though I hit her quite hard several times, I could not dissuade her.

Keep 'em flying,
Dad."

Here's more advice to freshmen—and upperclassmen too. If non-filter cigarettes are your pleasure, double your pleasure with Philip Morris, made by the makers of Marlboro.

Tar Heels Come From Behind To Beat Dartmouth 2-1 In Baseball Season Opener

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's baseball Tar Heels got the season started on the right foot here yesterday as they stormed from behind to beat the Dartmouth Indians 2-1.

The winning run for the Tar Heels came in the bottom of the ninth when, after the bases were loaded, Carroll Bolick romped home on Harold Workman's fielder's choice to the shortstop.

The Indians drew first blood and it looked for a while as if they might be able to make their one-run advantage stick. Dartmouth scored their only run in the second inning when they raked Carolina starter Wayne Young for three straight singles, with Andy Mehalik scoring the counter.

Indian starter Art Quirk was mowing the Tar Heels down like a scythe until he was removed in the sixth. Quirk had struck out seven and allowed no hits at the time.

Carolina hopped on reliefer Stan Drazen for their first hit, an infield single by second baseman Larry Craver in the sixth.

Drazen managed to hold the Heels at bay until the seventh, when pinch hitter Tommy Camp, a soph, blasted a doubel to deep center field to score John Burgwyn ahead of him and tie it up 1-1.

Johnny Johnson, who had come on in relief of Wayne Young, pitched no-hit ball the last four innings for the Tar Heels. Johnson allowed only one walk while striking out one.

The Heels began their rally in the ninth when catcher Carrol Bolick walked and right fielder John Burgwyn singled him to third. Not trusting to pitch to Camp again, Drazen walked him intentionally to load the sacks with nobody out. Then shortstop Harold Workman hit a blazing grounder to the Dartmouth shortstop, his throw at the plate was not in time, and Bolick crossed the plate with the winning run.

Johnson picked up the win in relief for Carolina, while Drazen was tagged with the loss, also in relief.

It was a pitcher's game, even though both squads used two moundsmen. Carolina got but four hits and Dartmounth could manage only five. The longest hit of the game, a triple, was struck by Dartmouth's Wale Sosnoski in the initial inning but he was thrown out at home.

Carolina meets Connecticut in the season's second game here today at 3. The expected Tar Heel starter is Captain Ben Harding, who last year led the ACC in percentage with a 6-1 record.

TUESDAY'S BADMINTON

The following people must be at Women's Gym Tuesday night at 7:00 to finish the play-off in the singles and doubles Badminton Tournaments: Carolyn Vaught, Jackie Womble, Mary Montgomery, Betty Root, Marie Bateman, Flo Dodd, Beverly Andrews, Liz Cauley, Jean McNeely, Catherine Bolton, Jimise Skillman, Mai Vu, and the winner of the Eason-Rehm match.

Netters Open With Illinois Here Today

The Carolina tennis team gets underway for real this afternoon at 3 o'clock when it meets Illinois in the first of a two-match series.

For the visitors from Urbana today's match marks the start of the season while the Tar Heel netters already have a 6-1 practice-match victory over the Chapel Hill Men's Team on their record.

Carolina coach Don Skakle, speaking about the win over Chapel Hill said, "I'm pleased with all the players, and I think we'll make a good showing against Illinois."

Against the Illini today Carolina will lineup with Geoff Black in the number one position and Marshall Happer second. The other four singles matches will be played by Ben Keys, Bruce Sylvia, Walker Lockett, and Tommy Ricks. The doubles teams are scheduled to be composed of Sylvia and Happer, Black and Lockett, and Ricks and Dee Heather.

Although defeated by Carolina 5-4 here last year, Illinois has four lettermen returning compared to the Tar Heels, two. This foursome is led by last season's number one man Al Holtman and includes Bob Breckenridge, Joe Epkins, and George Gilmore. The other two Illini starters will be Bob Lausford and Don Mesch.

Chapel Hill Summary

Singles — 1. Black (C) defeated Jordan 7-5, 6-4. 2. Happer (C) defeated Clark 9-7, 6-4. 3. Sylvia (C) defeated Silver 6-2, 6-2. 4. Lockett (C) defeated Sharpless 7-5,6-3. 5. Ricks (C) defeated McGinty 2-6, 6-2, 7-5. 6. Heather (C) defeated Cowden 6-4, 2-6, 6-1.

Doubles — 1. Sylvia and Happer (C) defeated Sharpless and Silver 6-3, 6-1. 2. Black and Lockett (C) defeated McGinty and Cowden 6-2, 6-3. 3 Jordan and Jordan (CH) defeated Causey and Durham 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

Bradley Signs Texas Contract

AUSTIN, Tex — (AP) — The University of Texas made a bid for big-time basketball prestige Monday, hiring veteran Harold Bradley of Duke as coach.

Bradley will be signed to a three-year contract at an undisclosed salary, said Dr. O. B. Williams, chairman of the university's Athletic Council. He is expected to report here some time early in April.

University officials hoped that Bradley could transplant his winning ways from the high-ranking Atlantic Coast Conference to the Southwest Conference. Bradley succeeds Marshall Hughes, who quit as Texas basketball coach after failing to produce a winning team in three years of coaching.

Carolina And N. C. State Are Final ACC Statistics Leaders

GREENSBORO, N. C. — (AP) — N. C. State and Carolina, who finished one-two in the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball race this season, also walked off with a majority of the team efficiency honors.

Carolina led team scoring, averaging 71.9 points a game, and posted the best final field goal shooting average, 42.9 per cent. N. C. State topped the league in rebounding with 49.7 recoveries a game and also had the best average margin over the opposition, 7.0 points per contest. The Wolfpack also was second in defense against scoring.

Final ACC Service Bureau figures for the 1958-59 season show that Maryland, though beaten 13 times, had the conference's best defensive record, allowing an average of only 56.3 points a game. This was only .6 of a point under the ACC defense record.

Wake Forest, which was second to Carolina in field goal shooting at 40.8 per cent, finished No. 1 in free throw accuracy at 71.2 per cent. Virginia was close behind in scoring average at 70.6 points a game and free throw shooting at 71.0 per cent.

Clemson had the best record for personal avoidance, averaging only 16.9 infractions a game. The decline of team scoring was noted for the second straight year in the ACC. Team offensive averages are 3.3 points a game under last season, and defensive averages are 1.4 points lower than a year ago. ACC teams averaged 65 point a game to 65.5 for their foes this season, as compared to respective offense and defense marks of 68.3 and 66.9 last season. Compared to 1957 figures, team scoring is off 8.9 points a game and defense 6.1 points.

Individual performance crowns for 1959 went to John Richter of N. C. State, Carroll Youngkin of Duke and Dickie Olom of Wake Forest. Richter led scoring average at 17 points a game and rebounding with 14.2 recoveries a game. Youngkin had the best field goal shooting average, 51.1 per cent, and Odom had the No. 1 free throw shooting avearge, 79.6 per cent. Youngkin and Paul Adkinds of Virginia tied for second in scoring with identical averages of 16 points a game. Howard Hurt of Duke 15.7 and York Larese of North Carolina 15.1 were next.

AEC Denies Bottling Information

WASHINGTON — UP — The Atomic Energy Commission denied vigorously yesterday that it has bottled up any information on radioactive fallout.

AEC Chairman John A. McCone called also for a "government-wide review" of information policy on the sometimes deadly aftermath of nuclear explosions. He suggested a meeting of all agencies concerned be held late in May.

McCone appeared before the Senate-House Committee on Atomic Energy after several Democratic senators charged that the public has been denied facts to which it is entitled on radiation hazards.

Testimony by McCone and other AEC and Defense Department witnesses failed to convince one of the critics, Committee Chairman Clinton Anderson (D-NM), that data on radioactivity in the Atmosphere has not been unnecessarily suppressed.

But some committee members, including Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R-Iowa), contended there is danger of public hysteria if the firdings of scientists are made public before all thef acts are in and the experts have agreed on their meaning.

Rep. Chet Holifield (R-Calif), chairman of a subcommittee which soon will start hearings on the radiation problem, said scientists' findings should be weighed scientifically without regard for agreement merely for the sake of agreement.

A key point in the controversy is the disclosure by Anderson a few days ago that some conclusions about radioactivity were suppressed for a time after AEC and Pentagon scientists came up with differing estimates.

LOBBYING

Students interested in lobbying General Assembly members on behalf of UNC budget requests have a chance to go to Raleigh for that purpose today.

The Committee on State Affairs is planning such a trip to Raleigh at 4 p.m. today and will return by 7:30 p.m.

Norman B. Smith, chairman of the committee, said anyone wishing to go should meet in Roland Parker I in Graham Memorial at 4 p.m.

11 Candidates Will Speak At Campus Political Rally

Eleven candidates for the top positions in student government will appear in a campus wide political rally Friday, April 3, at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Present for discussion and debate will be Student Party and University Party candidates for president, vice president, secretary and treasurer of the student body and candidates for editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

Sponsoring the rally is the Current Affairs Committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

The rally will include statements of policy and platforms by each candidate and party chairmen. Afterward, the floor will be open for discussion and debate.

The candidates who will be present include: Charlie Gray, Norman B. Smith, Jim Crownover, David Grigg, Ann Lucas, Sue Wood, Bob Binghan, Erwin Fuller, Davis Young and Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel.

Jerry Stokes, chairman of the sponsoring Current Affairs Committee, said Tuesday. "The committee feels that there is a definite need and considerable feeling for a political rally in which the opposing candidates and party chairmen can appear together and express their policies and platforms in such a way that their stands can be compared and contrasted."

Stokes said the rally is being held in hopes that the discussion will "eliminate much of the ambiguity which is so apt to creep in Tar Heel statements and short room to room dorm campaigning."

Moderator of the rally will be Don Matthews of the Political Science Department.

O'Tuel And Shumate Plan More Coverage

"The Daily Tar Heel must cover a greater measure of the campus," co-editor candidates Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate asserted yesterday.

They went on to add that there is a great need for coverage of events of smaller groups, "such as minor sports, small organization meetings, faculty speeches and symposiums, fraternity, and sorority events."

"This can be accomplished only through a larger staff," O'Tuel and Shumate declared.

"At present The Daily Tar Heel possesses several fine reporters, but their participation is not on a daily basis," the co-editor candidates explained.

"What is necessary is to try to get a full time staff nucleus of eight or nine top-notch regular reporters, give them areas of coverage, and use the persons who come in regularly for spot assignments," O'Tuel pointed out.

Shumate added that special inducements would be made for students to work on the paper, and that personal contacts would be made with the School of Journalism in order to get the journalism students to make use of the facilities of The Daily Tar Heel.

"We will try to make use and extend the stringer system established by the present editor. By next year we hope to include fraternities, sororities, campus organizations, dormitories, and faculty groups," Shumate added.

Attorney General Dick Robinson, fraternity campaign co-ordinator of Shumate and O'Tuel stated yesterday, "Most important Ron and Harold will speak for the entire campus."

He went on to add that under the O'Tuel-Shumate administration, if elected, they will present the news "in the finest tradition of journalistic honesty."

He added that in the plans of O'Tuel and Shumate only "the editorial page is reserved for a more personal, subjective voicing of the editors' opinions."

"Even with regard to this very important page, however, both Harold and Ron have displayed a most significant interest in well-informed commentary and factual justification for their assertions," Robinson explained.

Dorm Officers Draw Attention From Edwards

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, Tuesday urged dorm residents to find candidates on April 7 for dorm offices who are interested and "willing to work for you."

Edwards cited some of the accomplishments of the past year as examples of what dorm officers can do.

These include compilation of quiz files, sponsoring bridge and ping pong tournaments, installing pencil sharpeners.

He further stressed that the dorm officers must take the initiative in building dorm spirit by encouraging participation of the residents in activities such as erecting Homecoming displays and 'Beat Dook' floats.

Campus Tour On Schedule For Officers

Twenty-five foreign military officers will be here today to tour the University campus and visit the ROTC units.

The officers are students in special courses in warfare at Ft. Bragg. They will be here one day only.

Capt. William E. Moore and Cadet Bogdan Zlotnicki of AFROTC will be in charge of the delegation.

Dr. Cecil Johnson, deal of the General College, will address the officers in a coffee meeting in Lenoir Hall at 9 a.m. after their arrival. The campus tour will be 10-11 a.m.

The officers will visit an air science class at 11 o'colck after which they will lunch at Lenoir Hall. Then they will inspect the NROTC at the Naval Armory at 12:15 p.m.

Returning to the AFROTC headquarters at 2 p.m., they will have a coffee break served by the Angel Flight in the cadet lounge.

They will leave Chapel Hill at 2:30 to return to Ft. Bragg.

Lab Coming For Triangle From AEC

RALEIGH — UP — An announcement from the Atomic Energy Commission that it will help support a laboratory in the Research Triangle was greeted by Gov. Hodges Tuesday as "Wonderful news of immediate significance and thrilling future potential."

"This laboratory will explore in an area that is just in its infancy—the use of isotopes in industry," Hodges said. "Not only will it serve industry, but also will help to attract industry to North Carolina and the Southeast."

Announcement that the AEC will sponsor the Isotopes Research Laboratory was made at a luncheon attended by the Governor and other notable. Dr. Paul C. Aebersold, director of AEC's office of isotopes development, made the announcement. He said a contract between AEC and the newly-formed Research Triangle Institute calls for AEC support of the isotopes lab totalling $160,000 the first year, including $76,000 for equipment.

President George R. Herbert of the Research Institute also announced the appointment of Dr. Ralph Ely Jr. of Pittsburgh as director of the new isotopes lab, effective May 1. Dr. Ely, now vice president and technical director of Nuclear Science and Engineering Corp., will have an initial staff that includes four senior scientists and several technicians.

The new lab ultimately will occupy a building located in the Research Triangle Park. Meanwhile, rented space is being sought.

The Lab is to be one of several throughout the United States sponsored by the AEC and will serve the Southeastern region.

ILLEGAL CARS

Students who brought unregistered cars back to school for the trip home for holidays must get permission to keep them on campus.

Permission may be obtained from the dean of student affairs office at 206 South Building, according to Bob Covington, chairman of the Traffic Advisory Commission.

Iraq Leaves Baghdad Pact; Editors Told 'Forget Nasser'

Withdrawal Expected Since July

By STAN CARTER

BAGHDAD, IRAQ — UP — Iraq withdrew yesterday from the Baghdad Pact, which both Nikita Khrushchev and Gamal Abdel Nasser denounce.

At the same time Premier Abdel Karim Kassem told Iraqi editors to "forget Nasser" and call off their attacks on the President of the United Arab Republic.

"Do not waste time replying to criticism from abroad which doesn't bother us at all," Kassem said.

The Baghdad Pact until last July linked Iraq to Britain, Pakistan, Iran and Turkey—and indirectly to the United States. It was signed in 1955 as a defense against the spread of Communism to the middle east.

Iraq's withdrawal had been expected since Kassem's forces overthrew the monarchy eight months ago.

Soviet Russia long has bitterly attacked the alliance as a threat to peace in the Middle East. Nasser attacked it from the first as an intrusion by non-Arabs in the Middle East and a wedge in Arab unity.

Recently Kassem has found himself in a cross-fire between Nasser and the communists.

Iraqi officials charged that Nasser's U. A. R. was behind the army revolt in northern Iraq two weeks ago. Moscow contended Nasser sought to force Iraq into the U.A.R. Nasser charged the Kassem was coddling foreign communist agents seeking to undermine Arab solidarity.

Kassem told the editors today he would not answer Nasser's attacks on him.

The editors have been playing up deunciations of the U.A.R. President since the mosul revolt. Some papers have called Nasser a dwarf Hitler in the pay of imperialists.

The editors of Baghdad newspapers are predominantly leftist since crowds sacked allegedly pro-Nasser papers two weeks ago.

Kassem said the Iraqi Press should not lower itself to the standard of the Egyptian Press, as he described it. He showed a stack of clippings from Cairo and Beirut papers attacking him, and said:

"Attacks have no effect on us. I personally don't bother about it. What they say does not harm us. It does not prevent us from following the course we set after the revolution.

"Please educate the people, and do not waste time replying to criticism from abroad. Don't say anything about Nasser. Forget him."

Young Campaign Staff Joined By Jan Cobbs

Davis Young, Daily Tar Heel editorial candidate, announced Tuesday that Jan Cobbs, president of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, has joined his campaign staff.

In accepting a position on Young's staff, Miss Cobbs issued the following statement: "It is interesting to note that Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate have a letter appearing in today's issue of The Daily Tar Heel signed by 28 members of the paper's saff.

"In examining this letter, it is clear that not all of the elements of the paper, and not all of the staff have signed.

"O'Tuel and Shumate have said that one fo the main problems is that a larger staff is needed. Then a letter with 28 names turns up in the paper. Somehow it appears that they have many signatures on that letter from people who rarely work with the paper.

"Note should also be taken of the play that O'Tuel and Shumate have received in the paper. When Young was given the endorsement of the University Party, a two column headline was attached to the story.

"When on Monday night O'Tuel and Shumate were endorsed by the Student Party, Tuesday's paper had a five column headline. Isn't Young's UP endorsement equally significant. Obviously Young is being placed at a great disadvantage by such tactics.

"It should also be noted that Young is the only candidate who has appeared before all three endorsing groups, the SP, UP and Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

"He has received two of those the UP and that of the Bi-Partisan Selections Board. He has also served this year as an SP class president.

"His campaign has impressed many people so far. His promises to keep out of partisan politics seem to me only logical. I am happy to join his campaign staff."

Young added, "There are only a handful of women students on campus who command the respect that Jan Cobbs does.

"We are most happy to have her with us on this campaign. Shumate and O'Tuel are most formidable opponents. We will fight a hard clean campaign up to and including election day, as I am sure they will."

Orientation Deadline Extended To April 2

The deadline for turning in applications for orientation counselors has been extended to Thursday, April 2, at 7 p.m.

On that date and time a test will be given to applicants on factual information about the campus and questions new students might have. The testing will be done in 268 Venable.

Orientation Chairman David Parker has urged students who have application blanks to return these as soon as possible. The application forms may be obtained and returned to the Library Reserve Room, YMCA office, Graham Memorial Information Desk and Orientation office in the basement of Graham Memorial.

Parker said he wanted as many students as possible to apply for orientation counselors because he considered the counselor the most important phase of orientation.

After the tests are held April 2, interviews with counselor candidates will be held April 13 through 21. The students selected as counselors will attend three training sessions during the last week in April and first week in May.

The counselors will return to UNC for orientation Sept. 11.

Study manuals for the April 2 test are available in the Library, YMCA office and GM Information Desk.

Nursing School Announces Dean's List

Dr. Elizabeth L. Kemble, dean of the UNC School of Nursing, has announced the Dean's List for the fall semester. The Dean's List contains the names of those students who made all A's or B's and who carried at least 15 semester hours of work.

Freshmen: Doris Marie Bankert, Hampstead, Md.; Sabra Ann Brew, Wilmington, N. C.; Carol Ann Daniels, Charlotte; Beverly Ann Desmond, Kinston; Andrea Lucille Gorcica, Wallington, N. J. and Roberta Virginia Timmons, Chapel Hill.

Juniors: In the junior year, a nursing course taken by certain students is not completed by the end of the fall session. For this reason the names of only a few junior students appear on the Dean's List. They are: Margaret Lillian Evans, Chapel Hill; Sue Ann Muirhead, Salisbury and Carol Louise Yeager, Chapel Hill.

Seniors. The present senior students at the School of Nursing carry only fourteen semester hours during the fall semester. The following senior students have an A or high B average: Jane Bolton Mulvey, Greensboro; Martha Ann Poindexter, Canton and Jo Ann Sowers, High Point.

Ann Marie Hamberger, a graduate nurse who is enrolled in the General Nursing Program leading to a B. S. in Nursing, also made the Dean's List. Miss Hamberger is from Lock Haven, Pennsylvania.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled in Graham Memorial today include:

Carolina Women's Council, 7-9 p.m., Grail; State Affairs Committee, 4-4:30 p.m., Roland Parker I; Senior Alumni Committee, 3:30-4:30 p.m., Roland Parker II; Ways and Means Committee, 1:30-3 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room, and Bridge, 7-9 p.m., Rendezvous Room.

Officers, Penalties Before IDC

Tonight's Interdormitory Council meeting will center on election of officers and a vote on the proposed changes in IDC court penalties.

Nominees for the various IDC offices are as follows: Otto Funderburk, president; Jim Scott, vice president: Dave Alexander, secretary; Phil Edwards and Mike Childs, treasurer; Jerry Morgan, chairman of the court, and Jerry Chichester, clerk of the court. The floor will be open for additional nominations.

The court penalties to be voted on include: limitation of fines at not less than $2 nor more than $10, removal from all dormitories for at least one semester, removal from all dormitories indefinitely, and suspension from school.

In all cases tried and convicted by the court a letter will be sent the offender's parents saying that he has been tried and is being disciplined in some way, according to Rudy Edwards, IDC president.

The council will meet at 7 o'clock tonight in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East.

SP Favors 'Feasible' Deferred Rush Plan

By JOSIE MORRIS

The Student Party formally adopted their 1959 spring platform at a meeting last night in Graham Memorial.

The platform, consisting of eleven planks, reaffirms a strong and earnest support for full and complete co-operation by student government with the IFC and fraternities in working out a feasible and constructive plan for alleviating the problems involved in a system of deferred formal rush.

The other ten planks are:

1. To support USNSA as an open forum for student opinion and training for student government leaders.

2. To study and recommend governmental structural changes leading to more consistent and efficient Student Government.

3. Procurement of two ten-minute parking spaces in each academic building parking lot for the use of students holding consulations with instructors.

4. Continued and ceaseless action for the procurement of a new student union, adequate to the needs of a growing university.

5. Action modernizing the Co-ed Social Rules by clearly removing the stigma of a morals offense from Social Rules violations.

6. Action to make dormitories more liveable and individualized.

7. A thorough examination of dormitories, sororities, fraternities and Victory Village for possible fire hazards and elemination of such hazards where they occur.

8. Action toward securing a minimum of at least one cut per class hour in the liberal cut system.

9. Action to improve relations with the town of Chapel Hill.

10. The Student Party shall endeavor to create university atmosphere conductive to the colonization of new fraternities and sororities.

Phi Mu Alpha Elects

Richard Fetzer was elected president of Phi Mu Alpha sinfonia fraternity last week. Other officers of the honorary fraternity include: John Gardiner, vice president; Jay Lambeth, corresponding secretary; Robert Wilkinson, treasurer, and James Cooke, alumni secretary.

Talks Today On Football 'Date' Tickets

Two UNC students will meet with athletic director Chuck Erickson today to discuss the dates of football games in the fall for which reduced "date" tickets will be sold.

Student body President Don Furtado and Carolina Athletic Association President Wayne Bishop will meet with Erickson today at 2:30 p.m. to discuss such problems as the difficulty presented when some teams refuse to sign contracts for games at which reduced price tickets will be sold.

Other problems which will come up include the hesitation of the athletic office to sell date tickets for sell-out games because of the loss of $2.25 per seat and the mild protests from alumni and other who want to attend the game but are denied seats in the best sections which are sold as date tickets.

Student Art Show April 5-8

Get To Work--'n Finish Up

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Put the final touches on that painting.

Give that statue the last gonig over.

And get ready for the Student Art Show.

The art show wil be sponsored by the Campus Life Committee of the Presbyterian Student Center April 5-8.

Aimed at furthering an understanding of the nature and function of art, the show will be in conjunction with a program of lectures and discussions.

Student artists may enter four types of work for exhibition: oil, black and white, photography and sculpture. Only students of the University will be allowed to enter and have been urged to begin on their works.

Judges for the art show will be Gregory Ivy, chairman of the Art Department at Woman's College in Greensboro and Joe Cox, N. C. State School of Design.

All entries must be submitted to the Presbyterian Church office, second floor of the Y, between March 31 and April 3. A screening committee will select art work for exhibit.

Prints entered in the photography division must be at least 8 by 11 and have a non-glossy finish.

The art show will be formally opened to the public at 8 p.m. April 5 and will remain open each afternoon through April 8 from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Presbyterian Student Center, off Rosemary St.

The lecture and discussion programs dealing with the art and the works on display will be April 6 and 7.

"Seeing Ourselves Thruogh Arts" will be the first program on the show on April 5.

The second progarm will be April 6 at 7:30 p.m. Joe Cox, a judge of the show, and Foster Fitz-Simons of the Department of Dramatic Art will discuss "Must Art Have a Moral Frame of Reference?"

The next night, a Greenwich Village buffet will be served to those attending the program. The buffet will begin at 6 p.m. and will be followed by announcements of show winners and a talk, "Must Art Communicate," by Gregory Ivy.

Winners in the form divisions will be announced at the second of these programs.

Additional information may be obtained from Diana Harmon and Mark Wilson, co-chairmen of the show, or Mrs. Eleanor Brawley, assistant to the minister to students of the church.

Election Board Okays Candidate Bill Norton

Bill Norton, SP candidate for the Student Legislature from Dorm Men's II, was declared by the Elections Board to be eligible to run on the basis of his presentation of a letter signed by his dean.

The board also gave Roy Goodman, Ed Cox and Charles Carroll 48 hours from its meeting to present similar letters or be declared ineligible. The deadline will be 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Program Called Democracy Symbol

Dean Weaver Praises Grail Sports Program

The Grail Mural Sports Jamboree is a symbol of democracy here on the UNC campus, stated Dean Fred Weaver at the steak dinner Monday night.

This was the second annual Grail Mural steak dinner which climaxed the second annual Grail Mural Sports Jamboree. Dean Weaver was the guest speaker at the dinner. Dean Weaver made his speech to the winners of the Jamboree and also presented their trophies to them.

He state that the trophies symbolized fair play rather than athletic achievement. He also added that through his experiences and wide travels he had found that democracy is promoted best through athletics.

Paul Woodard, chairman of the Grail Mural committee, presided over the dinner and welcomed the group as the cream of Intramural Athletes.

Trophies were presented and pictures were taken of the overall winners, SAE and Avery, along with the trophies to the winners of the relays and the individual winners. Mickey Nelson received the trophy for Avery Dorm while Walt Brown received the trophy for SAE as the overall winners.

Thirty-six trophies were presented at the dinner. Twenty-six were individual trophies, eight were for the relays and the other two were for the overall winners.

Easter Schedule For Planetarium

In keeping with Morehead Planetarium policy, "Easter, the Awakening" will be given during the Easter holidays, beginning Friday and ending Monday.

On each of the evenings the tenth annual tribute will be given at 8:30 o'clock. There will be matinees on Good Friday at 11 a.m., 1, 3 and 4 p.m., and on Saturday at 11 a.m, 3 and 4 p.m. On Easter Sunday the program will be offered at 2, 3 and 4 p.m. On Easter Monday it will be presented at 11 a.m., 1 and 3 p.m.

SPRING SWING

A street dance here Friday, April 3, and special bargains at local stores are part of the third annual Spring Swing planned for April 3 and 4.

Sponsoring the Spring Swing is the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association.

The Doug Clark Combo will furnish music the night of April 3 on the main East Franklin Street block.

Merchants participating in the Spring Swing will have special buys during the two days in April.

Baghdad Pact

The Baghdad Pact is no more. It does not come as a surprise, but it is destined to rock the foundations of the balance of power in the free world today.

It comes at a peculiar time, since, at present, there is less unity in the Middle East than in any time during the past two years.

The nationalistic forces, which have played so great a part in keeping the Middle East a hotbed of activity and a tinder box of potential trouble, are divided into several camps, and yet, it is clear that no nation in the area, with the exception of a few minor ones, wants to have binding ties with any one of the major powers.

The spirit of nationalism is not dead, no matter how divided the Arab nations are toward methods of attaining their autonomous aims.

It is with this in mind that one must view the shattering of the Baghdad Pact, but this is not all one must view. With the single exception of the recent Turkey, Iran, Pakistan, and U. S. mutual defense treaty, the trend of the Middle East has been away from the West. In most areas, this move has been neutralistic, however, in some the trend has been toward Russia. In Iraq this trend is a real thing, and it is a thing to be afraid of.

The Baghdad Pact was a treaty which spread across the top of the Middle East and provided a buffer zone from Russian economic and military penetration. With this zone gone, the Middle East is vulnerable.

The present difficulty cannot be traced to present American statesmanship in any real sense. It can be traced to statesmanship last summer which disgraced the name of American statesmanship. It can be traced back three years ago to another area of the Middle East, where American statesmanship hit another low ebb. But present statesmanship, while it offered a remote possibility of preventing the Iraqi deviation, did not in any sense cause it.

The results, as have been shown, are far reaching. A surge of nationalism in other areas is possible. A further gravitation on the part of some of the weaker countries toward the Soviet orbit is also a possibility. The chance for localized conflict is further enhanced. The United States cannot help the situation by substantially reducing the President's request for mutual aid funds.

The battle in the Middle East is economic. It is a battle of mouths more than minds, and, although nothing will quell the surge of nationalism, the direction and focus of that drive are important factors.

The job belongs to the western powers in general and the United States in particular. The members of Congress had better wake up before their sleep becomes perpetual.

Excellence In A Democracy

Lenoir Chambers

(Mr. Chambers is editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot of Norfolk, Va. The following is his speech to the Golden Fleece banquet.)

My first word tonight is one of greeting to these new mariners who are to sail with Jason in the Argo. I hope it will not seem presumption on my part to say that they join a noble ship's company.

The goal of this never-ending voyage has been an ideal of sustained spiritual value. The rewards have been superb. For 56 years the Argonauts of the University of North Carolina who seek with Jason the Golden Fleece have stood for merit and distinction. It is the responsibility of all of us to see that they never represent less.

I welcome these new Argonauts into this company. They would not be here tonight unless, in the opinion of men whom they respect and esteem, they had been judged to possess and exemplify character, strength, capacity and achievement touched with fineness, and distinguished by excellence.

In one way or another they stand for the university man, and though he may express himself in different ways, and reach for different goals, yet he will be marked always by characteristics—whether shown in conspicuous accomplishment or in humble virtue—that all men recognize and honor.

We celebrate excellence here tonight. We celebrate it not in any feeling of arrogance among those who have made tonight's selections and not, I am sure, in any spirit of undue pride among those who have been selected.

They know that they are not the only men of excellence on this campus. They remember that along the hills they have climbed they have had the help and sacrifice of mothers and fathers, of families and friends, of teachers—most assuredly of teachers — as well as of their own solid virtues. Their presence and their promise excites old Argonauts most of all.

Forsan et haec olim meminisse juvabit.

We are celebrating excellence, I remind you, in a democratic society. And of a democratic society the first thing to be said is that it offers opportunity for all. It places heavy emphasis on breadth of base. It spreads out to reach and enlist all. The doors it opens are universal.

This is something we often take for granted. Yet we have only to look about us, only to read the newspapers, to know that American life is one long struggle to guarantee that the breadth of the democratic base shall be in fact as well as in theory as broad as our land and as universal as people. Democracy is least of all something for theorists to apostrophize from afar or for politicians to pay tribute to in public, and sometimes to ignore, to deny in private. Democracy is a living spirit and a practical fact, or it is nothing.

Perhaps it is just as well to remember that few concepts of government have received more belaboring than democracy, like Byron's definition, "an aristocracy of blackguards," or Oscar Wilde's conclusion that "democracy means simply the bludgeoning of the people by the people for the people." But governmental forms rarely do well in the anthologies. Emerson quoted Fisher Ames as saying that "a monarchy is a merchantman which sails well, but will sometimes strikes on a rock and go to the bottom; whilst a republic is a raft which would never sink, but then your feet are always in the water."

Yet concern with the breadth of democracy's base must be matched with the recognition that democracy has the potential of height. The excellence to which we pay tribute tonight is the proof of it.

No minimum wage law is worth the enacting that does not rest on the knowledge that it is the beginning, not the end. So the base of democracy must be understood in its capacity to send talents into the lonely upper space of effort and of trial and of great deeds, where only courage and determination can survive.

Every healthy democracy encourages, nurtures, and insists upon excellence in the highest degree. Excellence is the natural product of universal democracy because it is opportunity realized. Democracy knows no maximums. It sets no limits. You may shoot for the stars.

I go a step further. I tell you that you must put excellence to work.

It does not matter, of course, how you do it. This is a wide, wide world. For all its shrinking, it grows wider and more alluring in many respects. I would not presume to say more to you than this. But because we are Americans, I venture to suggest to you one area where excellence had better make its way; and because we are North Carolinians, or men of the Southern states, or men who from the vantage point of Chapel Hill and this university have known Southern life, I point out to you another.

We live seventeen years after Pearl Harbor, fifteen years after the Normandy landings, and fourteen years after the surrender in Tokyo Bay. We live twelve years after Secretary of State George Catlett Marshall — who a few days ago was lying sorely ill hardly fifty miles from us tonight — proposed in an historic address at Harvard University the plan that carries his name into history. We live ten years after Western nations signed the North Atlantic Organization Treaty; nine years after the Communist high command sent the North Koreans surging across the 38th parallel, and six years after the American government agreed to an armistice there. It is four years since a summit meeting in Geneva; and three years since Egypt seized the Suez Canal, Hungarians rose and fell in agony, and the first man-made satellite rushed into orbit.

After these seventeen years we may think this is a world we never made, but we are of and in it up to our — I will not say up to our necks; there are unpleasant connotations in that word — but paradoxically up to our brains.

We are back now at excellence. It is not necessary that every man of excellence should think he is the antithesis of the Ugly American and therefore must enroll in the foreign service — though, in one way or another, we could use much more excellence in the conduct of our foreign relations.

But it is necessary that every American understand that his concern is not only his farm, village, town or city, not only his county, his state, or even his country. He is of the earth, earthy, in a sense he does not always like to recognize.

The point is not quite that which animated the members of the Oxford Union, in Oxford University, some years ago. In that famous society, you remember, they solemnly debated the proposition: Resolved, That in the opinion of this house Columbus went too far.

But how many Americans were caught by surprise when people of Peru and Venezuela threw stones at, and spat upon, the Vice President of the United States; or, just the other day, when people of Bolivia exploded in anger against Americans because of a loose remark reported in an American news magazine?

How many Americans were shocked when they found out how many non-Communists around the world — non-Communists, I repeat —chuckled to themselves, and sometimes laughed out loud, over the news that a Russian Sputnik, not an American progeny of Jupiter and Juno, first broke the chains of gravitation that binds the globe?

What I am suggesting is only a tiny part of an immense complicated structure of relationships. People of small nations rarely like people of big-power nations as such. There are innumerable people who do not like the manifestations of the Soviet government. But the point is that each minute part of this immense, complicated structure is quite likely to have a direct meaning in a North Carolina village and in all American lives.

I am willing to guess, and even to bet if I can find a way to collect my winnings, that the youngest man in this room will find himself concerned all his life with the ambitions and the ideas and the actions of yellow people in Asia and of black people in Africa.

I plead for a fuller recognition of our — whether we like it or not —of our world responsibilities. We can't get away from them. There is no longer any Fortress America to retreat to, and maybe there never was. We play our part in this world, or the world will break us. We play our part, guided by understanding and wisdom, and maybe we can make a greater contribution to history.

I turn from areas of opportunity for excellence because we are Americans to areas of opportunity because we are North Carolinians or Southerners, or men who, from this seat of learning, have learned something of Southern problems. All these too are Americans.

I should like to quote a few words written in a book just published. It is the work of Avery O. Craven, the Southerner (born over here in Randolph County) who is professor of history at the University of Chicago and is well known and much respected by historians in this university. It is called Civil War in the Making, 1815-1860.

Mr. Craven is viewing the scene at the end of 1860 as the Southern states were dragged down the hill toward secession. "There is no sadder story in all American history," he wrote, "than that of the Southern conservatives in the final crisis. They probably constituted a majority against secession but were too confused and divided to gain control . .

"Under such circumstances, the advantage was with the smaller group of determined, exasperated radicals who had talked loudly of Southern rights and Republican threats, and who were quietly but not openly, planning secession. They arrogantly assumed that they alone stood for the honor, the interests and the rights of the South. They hurled the charges of disloyalty, cowardice and weakness against all who would not join their ranks."

I thought of these words the other day when I read that a Southerner of some reputation dared to call Harry Ashmore of the Arkansas Gazette a renegade.

I am not suggesting — for the record, I repeat that I am suggesting — any issues of secession in the 1950's or any other time ahead. But certain patterns of thinking and certain developments since 1954 emphasize the parallels.

Over much of the South—though less in North Carolina than in most other states — the making of public policy for the handling of the immensely complicated and difficult school problems has lacked the minds and spirits of many of the South's men of excellence. The guidance of affairs has been too often in the hands of the extreme, the politically shrewd and ambitious, the opportunistic, the ruthless. We have missed too often the wiser, the more thoughtful, the more far-seeing, who can look beyond the next election, the people who are now grouped under the designation of moderates. The designation may not always seem glamorous, but the position is solid.

How this seizure of leadership came about is a long story. It can be matched in interesting ways at other points in our history. But the most clearly demonstrable fact is that it does not represent the way of the future. It has broken down too often and in too many areas, and it will break down more.

How these things will come about, or when, or by what ideas, experiments, methods, and policies, I do not know, and I suggest that you look with a skeptical eye on any man who tells you he does know. There is no pat solution. There are too many Souths, and these problems are too complex. One tight device cannot possibly be wise or practical, even if it is constitutional, for all.

That, of course, is a major part of the tragedy of such a state program as the one in Virginia which went by the name of massive resistance — that, and the dead-end of closed schools to which inevitably it led.

It was possible in earlier periods, I believe, for the leadership of the President of the United States —if really exerted — to help make moderation more respectable. If he had appointed, for instance, a national commission to study these problems, composed of men and women from the most trusted and respected in the land, above all suspicion and beyond all ambition except for the common good, they might have helped by their very characters and by the respect in which they were held as well as in their thinking — by their excellence, if you please — to clear the atmosphere of at least some of the old fears and the new bitterness. They might have given new tones to discussion. They might have rallied the best instead of leaving the way open for something less.

Perhaps it is not too late for that now. It is never too late for statesmanship. It is never too late for statesmanship among and by Southern people at all levels and wherever they live. They will have painful adjustments in any major changes, and the remainder of the country should never forget that. They need understanding and they need time.

But primarily the South must come to an understanding of its own destiny.

It cannot solve great regional problems in terms of a past that will never return.

It cannot solve them in terms of extremism.

It cannot solve them by closing the public schools as if education were a matter of no account and the descent of the South still deeper into the pit of educational deficiency could be borne with complacency.

It cannot solve them by excluding from its councils the entire Negro citizenship, as if it did not exist and share responsibilities.

It cannot exclude its own educational leadership.

Staff Letter

We, the members of The Daily Tar Heel staff, feel that we must speak out on the issue of who is going to be the next editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

We must speak out because we have worked with both candidates and are in a position to assess their qualifcations, and we feel that you the voters have a definite choice between the abilities of the two candidates.

In our opinion, there is only one choice capable of assuming the responsibility of such an office as Editor of The Daily Tar Heel, and that choice is Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel.

We feel that their combined Tar Heel and professional experience — whether as Publications Board Chairman, Acting Editor, New Bureau feature writer, Acting News Editor, or in other capacities — enable Harold and Ron to meet the test of what an editor needs to know.

We hope you will weigh these facts in the balance and vote wisely. We ask you to vote for Harold O'Tuel and Ron Shumate for a better Daily Tar Heel.

Dialogue

Frank Crowther

Noel: What time is it?
Hoot: Where?
Noel: Anywhere. What does it matter?
Grog: I could tell you if I had a watch.
Hoot: What could you tell us?
Grog: The time, stupid.
Noel: What could you tell us about it?
Hoot: Why don't you say that it's a point unknown on an infinite circle?

Noel: On an endless circle symbolizing nothing?
Grog: You'd like me to say that, wouldn't you?
Noel: Say what you will. What does it matter?
Hoot: Why not will what you say?
Grog: Do you want me to continue?
Hoot: NO! (to Noel) You shouldn't have asked about that. We don't have any bells to ring anyhow. (to Grog) Please talk of something else. These echos depress me.

Grog: As you wish. I'll finish the story I began yesterday. Do you remember the one about threes? They govern everything, just like our little group. For example, there are three stages in life. And three main hypotheses: monism, dualism and pluralism. The triangle, there's another evidence.

Noel: I like triangles. They're intellectual. And eternal.
Hoot: What makes them intellectual?
Noel: I don't know, really. Somebody told me once.

Grog: And might I add cubes. They're just full of threes.

Noel: Personally, I'm more concerned with fleas.
Hoot: What about trees?
Noel: I didn't say trees, dummy, I said FLEAS.
Grog: PLEASE! (the other two look at him hopefully) For goodness sake, where were we?

Noel: I was being bitten by fleas.
Hoot: In the trees, by fleas in threes.
Silence
Grog: (to Hoot) I'm thorouhgly convinced he's an idiot.

Noel: I knew an idiot once.
Hoot: You must have had a great deal in common.

Noel: Oh, we did. Common sense.
Grog: It must have been.
Noel: (Haughtily) I find you both rather stale, lacking froth and this conversation is proving un-profitable.

Hoot: He has a point, there. All is vanity and comes to naught. In the end we're all host to the worm.

Grog: That's not fair! We agreed that today I would be the saviour. And, anyhow, how do you know? Have you ever come to your own end?

Hoot: (Reflectingly) I never thought of it that way.

Noel: Every man his own saviour, I always say.
Hoot: (to Grog) Do you believe in the essential nobility of the nature of man?

Grog: I don't know anything about man. I only know about myself.

Noel: He make a fine saviour, doesn't he? Watch him change his tune.

Hoot: Tell us of yourself, then, if nothing more.
Grog: Would that there be a meeting of the ego and the id while the super ego took notes.

Noel: If it's riddles you want, any of us can tell the story.

Grog: Are there no secrets, then. Very well, all I see is Stygian gloom, youth's wilted flower, brutal deeds, perished dreams rusting the thread of life, false philosophy, the sweet liquor of truthless ideals, the last illusion of hope gone sterile, and I wait for my turn to sleep in the eternal night. Be there a director. I can but mourn for his blindness.

Silence
Noel: That was all very cute, but if you can't be cheerful you'll have to forfeit the title for the rest of the day

Hoot: Quot homines, tot sententiae, but I must say that I cannot listen to this Weltschmerz.

Noel: Yes, if you continue to act like this, we'll put you back in the book with your Russian friend, Ivan.

Grog: I didn't come from that book, I came from the sea.
Hoot: What makes you so sure?
Grog: I saw my reflection in Guernica and that's how I felt.

Noel: Now he's seeing ghosts. Where did you find your ethical nihilism, in the factory?
Hoot: Must we ALWAYS talk in riddles?
Grog: We're not talking in riddles. We are the riddle. Didn't you know that?

Noel: (Snickering) Do we always come in threes?
Grog: I've had all I can take of you two. Today, I'm really going to leave.

Hoot: Leave? You always speak of leaving. Where could you possibly go? Have you forgotten that we're at sea? What do you think you are, a fish?

Grog: Naturally. I've already said so.
Noel: (to Hoot) Is he?
Hoot: You never know about these things.
Grog: Must I show you my documents?
Noel: Careful, they may be forged.
Hoot: That's the trouble, everything may be a forgery. It's just a matter of time before we wake up.

Grog: That's right! It's merely a matter of time before the dream ends!

Noel: What time is it?

South's Air Traffic Keeping Nation Pace

By JOAN BROCK

The expansion of airline traffic in the South is keeping pace with that in the nation, accordng to a recent study compiled by J. C. D. Blaine, professor of transportation at UNC.

With respect to airline passenger and air cargo traffic, the increase has been greater in the South than in the United States.

Blaine's study is based on data for airline passenger, mail and cargo traffic enplaned at airline stations in the South during the period 1949 through 1957, and includes projections of trend values to 1960.

For study purposes, Dr. Blaine used thirteen states including Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

Enplaned airline traffic is defined as that traffic which is placed on board planes at airline stations, as distinguished from originating traffic which originates at airline stations.

An analysis of the data revealed that the South constitutes an important source of enplaned airline traffic of the United States, averaging 25 per cent of the passenger traffic; 22 per cent air mail; and 14 per cent of the air cargo.

More than 50 per cent of each type of regional airline traffic is enplaned at airline stations located within three states—Texas, Florida and Georgia.

Noted as the leading state for all types of airline traffic enplaned in the South, Texas was the only regional state which enplaned over a million passengers over two million passengers.

Florida ranks second and Georgia third as major contributors of regional airline traffic.

Other conclusions from the study indicate that over 75 per cent of the regional states, individually, accounted for less than 10 per cent of each type of airline traffic enplaned in the South.

Since 1954, 10 states contributed less than 10 per cent of each type of regional airline traffic. Louisiana, Tennessee and North Carolina were the only states that individually accounted for five per cent but less than 10 per cent of the airline passenger traffic of the South for every year of the nine-year period.

The study further indicates that a moderate degree of concentration for each type of enplaned airline traffic exists in a majority of the regional states. However, there is evidence of decreasing concentration of airline traffic in the South as seven states experienced decreases in the percentages of airline passenger traffic, enplaned at single airline stations, within their respective boundaries.

In the case of airline passenger traffic, only one regional state had experienced a decrease prior to a preceding year before 1957. As for air mail and air cargo traffic, the annual percentage decreases were quite frequent.

U. S. Funds Aid Rural Asia

Community development programs aided by American technical assistance funds have begun to transform rural life in Pakistan and India, Prof. John J. Honigmann of UNC reported at a session of the Association of Asian Studies.

The changes made so far are unequal, Dr. Honigmann commented in his speech before a specialist section of the Association, which is holding its annual meeting in Washington, D. C., this week.

"More prosperous farmers are best able to avail themselves of help to increase output and earnings. Smaller cultivators who urgently need economic improvement have fewer resources for taking advantage of new technical knowledge," he noted.

Dr. Honigmann also pointed out that the agricultural sector of the village economy is receiving more attention than village craftsmen or landless laborers.

He mentioned several reasons for noting what is happening in the rural districts of Pakistan and India. In those countries, he said, directed culture change is organized on a voluntary basis in contrast to China where rural development follows the methods of Soviet Russia. The approach adopted in South Asia is derived from America and the West.

"Only time will tell which approach will succeed better in stimulating new needs and promoting prosperity, production and health. It is not unlikely that the outcome of this experiment between two patterns of directed culture change will influence political developments in other technically underdeveloped countries," the speaker noted.

Relying on his first-hand observations in Pakistan and on reports studied, Dr. Honigmann stated that the men directing community development are often city reared and, therefore, out of touch with village life. This, he said, sometimes leads to unrealistic planning.

Workman's Homer In 8th Gives Heels 8-7 Win Over Connecticut

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Shortstop Harold Workman socked a home run to right center field in the eighth inning to give Carolina's Tar Heels an 8-7 victory over Connecticut here yesterday.

Workman's blow came with nobody on and unlocked a 7-7 tie brought on by a Connecticut run in the top of the eighth.

The win pushed Carolina's record to 2-0. Yesterday they whipped Dartmouth 2-1.

John Stott, who came on the eighth in relief of Ben Harding and Ben Hammett, got credit for the win. Stott came on after the UConns had tied the count at 7-7. He forced pinch-hitter Tom Kopp to pop out to the catcher with men on second and third and two out.

In addition to his game-winning home run, Workman also provided his mates with a run by a sacrifice fly in the fourth and another run when he singled and scored on an error by the right fielder in the sixth.

Sophomore Carroll Bolick, starting his first game as catcher, had 2 for 3 and scored twice. Bolick hit a long triple down the left field line in the fourth.

The game was in direct contrast to yesterday's pitchers' duel as Connecticut banged out 8 hits while the Tar Heels gathered 9.

The game see-sawed back and forth all afternoon, the lead changing hands four times. Carolina led 2-0 and 2-1 before the UConns really teed off on starter Harding in the fifth, getting five runs before the dust had cleared. Carolina regained the lead at 7-6 in the sixth, Connecticut tied it 7-7 in the top of the eighth, then Workman's blow put the Heels in front to stay in the home half of the eighth.

Two Wrestlers Go To Nationals

Carolina's two top wrestlers, Captain Perrin Henderson and John Matney, will participate in the NCAA Championships at the University of Iowa beginning Thursday.

Henderson, runner-up for the 137-pound ACC title, rolled up a 9-1 record during the season. He defeated two conference champions in the process and his only loss occured in the season-ending ACC meet.

Matney, who was hampered early in the year as the result of a horseback-riding accident, came on to be the Tar Heel's only league crown-winner when he captured the 191-pound division title.

Golfers Meet Indiana Today

Carolina's golf team, with only one letterman returning from last year's fine squad, will open its 1959 season here today against Indiana at 1:30. The match will take place on the University's Finley course.

The Tar Heels will take to the fairways with five new faces in the starting lineup. Don McMillan, Ed Justa, Bob Gallaway, David Sloan and Hugh Goodman will taste their first varsity competition against the Hoosiers.

Five Veterans Gone

John McKee is the lone returnee from last year's fine squad which notched a close 14-13 win over Indiana. Coach Chuck Erickson lost All-American Billy Thornton, ACC individual champ, Gene Lookabill, Joe Callicott, Tommy Langley and Charles Erdman from last spring's team which won five of seven matches.

The problem was not that Marty had fallen in love with a shirt. After all, he was a Philosophy major.

The trouble was . . . Marty was in love with two shirts.

With Shirt No. 1, the Van Heusen Century, the serious Marty spent hours in heavenly bliss. He worshipped the revolutionary soft collar that won't wrinkle ever. It was Century's one-piece construction that drove him wild. (Other collars never did anything for our boy Marty, except wrinkle madly. You see, other collars are three pieces, fused or sewn together.)

With Shirt No. 2, the amazing Van Heusen "Vantage," the gay, frivolous Marty lived the life of carefree abandon. He could wear it and wear it—wash it—drip-dry it, or have it tumble-dried automatically—and wear it again in a matter of hours. It was the most money-saving love he ever had.

But when Marty was with one shirt, he missed the other. It was terrible. Like so many others with the same problem, Marty wrote to us. And so it came to pass that the Van Heusen "Century-Vantage" was born. This shirt combined the advantages of each in to one great shirt—a wash and wear, no-iron, all cotton broadcloth shirt with the soft collar that won't wrinkle ever! And just $5! Have you a problem? Illinois Takes 5-4 Net Victory

The Illinois tennis team won four of the six singles matches and grabbed off one doubles victory to edge the Tar Heel netters 5-4 here yesterday. The two squads meet again this afternoon in the second of the two-match series.

The Illini courtmen, runners up in the Big Ten last year, had to battle all the way against the younger Carolina squad before Al Holtman and Bob Breckenridge assured them of victory with a 6-3, 6-1 doubles win over Bruce Sylvia and Marshall Happer.

For Carolina coach Don Skakle, the bright spot of the day was Geoff Black's 6-3, 6-2 victory over Al Holtman in the number one singles match. A year ago when the two teams met, Holtman defeated Bob Bortner in straight sets limiting the ACC singles champ to just four games. Such was not the case today, however, as the Tar Heel captain backed up his smashing service with steady offensive play to take off the match.

Skakle was delt another blow yesterday when he learned that Dee Heather, a highly rated sophomore prospect had been declared ineligible for the entire season.

The Summary

Singles — 1. Black (C) defeated Holtman 6-3, 6-2. 2. Breckenridge (I) defeated Happer 6-2, 6-2. 3. Gilmore (I) defeated Keys 6-2, 3-6, 6-3. 4. Sylvia (C) defeated Epkins 6-3, 7-5. 5. Mesch (I) defeated Lockett 6-3, 6-3. 6. Lansford (I) defeated Ricks 6-2, 6-1.

Doubles — 1. Holtman and Breckenridge (I) defeated Happer and Sylvia 6-3, 6-1. 2. Black and Lockett (C) defeated Gilmore and Epkins 6-3, 6-4. 3. Ricks and Keys (C) defeated Mesch and Lansford 6-4, 1-6, 9-7.

Philanthropic Society Gives Nasser Vote Of Confidence

GAMAL ABDEL NASSER
. . . wins confidence vote

By STAN BLACK

President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic received an overwhelming vote of confidence from the Philanthropic Literary Society in its meeting Tuesday night.

A bill advocating full U. S. support for President Nasser's drive for Arab unification was passed unanimously with one abstention in a rare moment of agreement among the members of the Society. The presence of several Arab students gave great interest to the debate.

Rep. David Matthews introduced the bill, giving a brief summary of the events of the past 50 years in the Arab world. He pointed out that President Nasser is definitely anti-communist, although he also speaks out against imperialism and colonialism.

Rep. Stan Black advocated a re-examination of U. S. policy with regard to governments not based on popular support as opposed to those that are so constituted. He felt that Nasser is doing the best he can toward unifying the Arabs, working with a poor, illiterate mass of people as he is.

The basic good of nationalistic aspirations was affirmed by Rep. Bill Jackson, who felt that this consideration should take precedence over others, such as the best interests of the United States. He showed that Arab nationalism was not inconsistent with our best interests, but that the long term welfare of the region should be our goal.

The qualifications of President Nasser were questioned seriously by Rep. Glenn Johnson, who doubted Nasser's good faith with regard to the West. Johnson also questioned whether Nasser has the full support of all the Arabs.

In reply to Johnson, guest Awni M. Hamad from Jordan affirmed that at least 95 per cent of the Arab people want unification and see Nasser as the only possible source of that unification. He pointed out that religious ties keep Arabs from embracing communism to any great extent.

Guest Ali M. Amura, a student from Libya, made it clear that the Arab world in general wants friendship with Russia and will continue to feel this way unless Russia becomes hostile.

The struggle between the forces of imperialism and nationalism was traced briefly by guest Rudolf Zarzar from Jordan. He felt that an understanding of nationalism as a basic force in the area is necessary to any understanding of President Nasser's great popularity.

Zarzar emphasized that Arabs believe that Nasser is wholly concerned with the problems of the Arab people as a whole. He is not seeking any personal glorification as such.

An analogy between the unification of the Arab states and the unification of the United States with the aid of France was brought out by Rep. Ron Pruitt. There were no dissenting votes in either the vote of members present or the vote of all persons in the hall.

Under papers, memorials and petitions, papers by Adlai Stevenson and Cordell Hull on present world problems were read by members of the society. A poem entitled "9:20, Rathskellar, St. Paddy's Day" composed by one of the members while intoxicated was also read.

Glee Club Prepares For Fest

The Men's Glee Club held its final pre-Easter rehearsal yesterday in preparation for their trip to the Azalea Festival in Wilmington where they will provide choral music for the pageant.

Invited to participate in the panoramic spectacle in February, the 55-voiced organization will make the annual festival their main stop during the four day tour through southeastern North Carolina.

The tour is scheduled for April 2-5. Concerts will be given, in addition to the two-day stay in Wilmington, at Sanford High School in Sanford, Coker College in Hartsville, S. C., and at a Baptist church in Wilmington Sunday morning.

Festival plans call for the glee club to open and close the pageant ceremonies at both the Friday and Saturday night performances. They will also sing college songs Friday night.

Glee Club Director Dr. Joel Carter, of the UNC Music Dept., will lead the chorus in a selection of several college songs, including "Halls of Ivy," "Gaudeams Igitur," and "Hark The Sound."

Klan Leader 'Catfish' Cole Gets Sentence

RALEIGH, March 25 — (AP) — Ku Klux Klan leader James W. (Catfish) Cole must serve a prison term for inciting to riot as a result of the fabled Indian uprising at Maxton on Jan. 18, 1958.

The State Supreme Court handed down an opinion Wednesday in which it found no error in Cole's conviction in Robeson Superior Court last March. Judge Clawson Williams sentenced the Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard to 18 months to two years in prison.

However, another Klansman, James Garland Martin of Reidsville was given a new trial. Tried at the same time as Cole, Martin was sentenced to 6 to 12 months.

A host of Klansmen, led by Cole, assembled at Maxton on the night of Jan. 18, 1958 for a Klan rally. They fled in disorder, however, a few minutes after the meeting started when incensed Indians loosed a barrage of fire from rifles and shotguns — mostly into the air.

Associate Justice E. B. Denny wrote the Supreme Court opinion upholding the prison term for Cole and granting a new trial for Martin. He said Judge Williams admitted certain testimony "which should have been excluded and the failure to do so entitles him to a new trial."

Justice Denny said "there can be no justification for the defendants and their associates to go to the rally . . . armed with rifles, shotguns, pistols and other weapons, some concealed and others unconcealed, if their intent and purposes were legitimate and peaceful.

Gray Says Finances Need Close Attention

Student finances is one area of student government in which much work needs to be done, according to Charlie Gray, UP nominee for student body president.

"The handling of the students' money in the past has been very loose, mainly because the President of the Student Body has not had an adequate working knowledge of the financial system," said Gray.

"As treasurer of the student body this year," he continued, "I have made a serious effort to obtain a detailed knowledge of all phases of student finance."

"I know now the need for some checks and balances system in the spending of students' money."

"Student government spends $123,000 annually of the students' money," he explained, "and much of this money is poorly handled and spent on worthless projects that have no tangible returns for the student body.

Gray said that if he were elected he plans to make sure the student's money is spent in a way that will truly benefit the entire campus and help promote a more efficient student government.

"I consider my knowledge of finances as one of my greatest assets and I plan to use it to the betterment of the campus," he said.

Gray announced that some of his campaign coordinators in various parts of the campus are Hamp Lefler and Bill King in the fraternities, Kattie Stewart in the sororities, Joe Herndon in the men's dormitories and La Ruth Sutton in the women's dormitories.

Officers Named To YMCA Exec. Cabinet

Jack Raper, a rising senior from Raleigh, will head the YMCA as President for next year.

Also elected during the annual elections meeting held in the Y building Monday night were Bill Norton, vice-president; Louis Rush, secretary; Allen Daniels, treasurer; Mark Wilson, program chairman; and Phillip Nash, membership program chairman.

The new officers will spend the next few weeks preparing their policy and selecting the cabinet positions and the chairmen to head those different cabinet areas.

Installation ceremonies for the new officers are slated for some time in April.

Fraternity Initiates Rep. George Watts Hill

George Watts Hill Jr., Durham County representative in the General Assembly, was initiated into Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity last night as an honorary member.

Hill is a graduate of the University and has studied at Princeton. A native of Durham, he is chairman of the House Committee on Higher Education.

GM Bridge Winners Announced

Don Gray and Jim Vance were the north-south first place winners in regular duplicate bridge game in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial.

Other section A, north-south, winners were Malcolm Clark and Bill Uzzle, second place, and Bill Cagle and Bill Caison, third place.

Students winning in section A, east-west, were Hilton Goldman and Barry Karp, second place, and Pat Hodges and Frank Saville, third place.

Bruce Cathey and Mike Alexander tied with Dana Dixon and Mrs. W. F. Rogers for first place in section B, east-west. Third place in this division was taken by Al Alexander and Vic Huggins.

Fourteen tables were used in Monday night's session at which a large number of Durhamites and townspple turned out in addition to the student bridge players.

Holiday Slate

This is the last issue of The Daily Tar Heel until the spring holiday is over. Publication will resume Wednesday morning, April 1.

During the recess the Wilson Library will observe the following hours:

Thursday, 7:45 a.m.-5 p.m.; Friday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m.-1 p.m.; Sunday, closed; Monday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m.; Tuesday, begin regular hours.

Graham Memorial will observe the following hours: Thursday, 8 a.m.-11 p.m.; Friday through Monday, 4-11 p.m.; Tuesday, resume regular schedule.

The Billiard Room of Graham Memorial will be closed all day today through Sunday. It will be open 4-1 p.m. Monday and begin regular hours on Tuesday.

The barber shop of Graham Memorial will have regular hours today through Saturday and be closed Sunday and Monday.

Smith Cites Needs Of UNC Dormitories

"Basic issues are important issues because they affect every day living, "Norman B. Smith, SP candidate for student body president said yesterday.

"Student government must move away from what at times seems to be almost an aura of isolation and re-dedicate itself to the answering of some of the less exciting, yet more vital needs of the students," he said.

Smith said that one of the big problems in University residence halls seems to be the evident lack of an individualized, comfortable atmosphere. "One of the major blocks to this goal seems to be little enforcement of reasonably quiet behavior and prevention of destruction of property," he said.

"I look forward next year to seeing the Dormitory Council Courts in the men's dorms become much more effective in these concerns," he said. "And I would seek to establish student security partols or comparable agencies, such as are employed in many other universities to keep in hands of responsible students the enforcement which now falls to personnel from the Dean of Students office and the local police."

"Something that would contribute greatly to individual pride in dormitory rooms would be granting more lattitude in altering the surroundings to suit personalities of the occupants," he said.

"I can see no objection to allowing students to paint their own rooms, provided they supply the paint,' he continued. "It also seems quite feasable to let masking tape and other harmless adhesives be used on the walls."

Smith noted the "perennial lack here of study facilities." "I advocate the expansion of policy in keeping several classrooms open for all night study," he said. "Furthermore, there have been a number of vacancies in dormitory rooms."

Smith said that by consulting with the Housing Office it may be possible to establish quiet, well lighted, furnished study rooms in several of the dormitories.

"Fire prevention will continue to be one of my important policies," he said. "I commit myself to action in placing a fire extinquisher on every floor of every dormitory on campus."

He said that there should be student volunteer fire brigades established which can be called into service at a moment's notice.

He further stated that investigation of water pressure should be made, faulty alarm systems should be repaired and the possibilities of storing fire hose in strategic locations on campus should be looked into.

Henderson Picket Lines Remain Quiet Wed.

HENDERSON, N. C., March 25—(AP) — Things were quiet on picket lines in strike-beset Henderson Wednesday after a night in which more blasts of dynamite broke the quiet that has prevailed here since Gov. Hodges intervened personally in strike negotiations.

John D. Cooper Jr., president of the Harriet-Henderson Cotton Mills, said that one of the blasts caused minor damage to wooden storage-shipping building at the mills' South Henderson plant.

He said a stick of dynamite apparently was thrown over the mill fence, hit the side of the building and went off on the ground beside it. He said the cost of the damage would not be great. Officers were unable to pin-point the exact location of a blast that went off in North Henderson.

The blasts were the first incidents of violence to occur in Henderson since the Governor announced Saturday night he was intervening personally in the hope of negotiating a settlement of the four months old strike.

After two days of discussions in the Governor's mansion in Raleigh, the talks were recessed until Friday. The Governor announced that no agreements had been reached on major issues.

The recess was taken in order to give mill officials time to prepare for a hearing before a National Labor Relations Board examiner in Winston-Salem Thursday. The Textile Workers Union Of American brought charges before the NLRB accusing the company of unfair labor practices.

Meanwhile, in Washington, AFL-CIO President George Meany charged that the cotton mill firm had provoked the strike in a deliberate effort to destory the TWUA locals at Henderson. He pledged the AFL-CIO's "wholehearted support" of the strikers. Meany asserted that the company was insisting on both a no-strike promise from the union and elimination of an arbitration clause. This combination, he said "could completely wreck the union."

When told of Meany's charge, Cooper said "It is not true and we deny it."

Gov. Hodges, also asked for comment, said "I have sat for hours listening to both sides together and the alleged facts of Mr. Meany do not agree with what I understand the facts to be."

Delta Sigma Pi Slates Award Banquet April

Delta Sigma Pi business administration fraternity will hold its Outstanding Young Businessman of North Carolina Award banquet at the Carolina Inn April 6.

George R. Herbert, president of North Carolina's new Research Triangle Institute, will be the speaker.

Mr. Herbert will present the fraternity's award to the outstanding Young Businessman of North Carolina for 1958.

Britain Willing To Sell Arms To Iraq Despite Kassem Move To Withdraw From Baghdad

By ARTHUR GAVSHON

LONDON — (AP) — Britain is still willing to sell arms to Iraq despite Premier Abdel Karim Kassem's decision to pull his country out of the anti-communist Baghdad pact.

A foreign office spokesman announced this Wednesday as diplomats studied signs that Kassem still wants good relations with the western powers.

The British view seemed to be that Kassem finally went through the formality of withdrawing from the role of inactive partner in the alliance because of twin pressures from Iraqi Communists and Gamal Abdel Nasser's Arab Nationalists.

Moscow has bitterly assailed the alliance since its formation in 1955 as an aggressive grouping that threatened middle east peace. Nasser has attacked it as an imperialist device to split off Middle East states from his movement of Arab nationalism.

Now the Arab Communists and Arab Nationalists are waging a word war, each accusing the other of trying to dominate Iraq where British and western capital has a big stake in the oil fields.

Iraq's withdrawal from the pact means it no longer is entitled to military help from the other members—Britain, Iran, Turkey and Pakistan—in case it is attacked.

It was disclosed last week, however, that Britain was ready to resume arms sales to Iraq that were interrupted after Kassem's revolution last July overthrew the pro-western monarchy and government.

The foreign office spokesman said the government policy has not been changed by Iraq's withdrawal. The policy, he said, is to fulfill commitments made before the revolution and to consider sympathetically any further requests.

GEN. A. K. KASSEM

British informants said there were these indications of good will from Kassem toward the West:

1. Iraqi authorities have given assurance that Britain will not be ejected immediately from its Habbaniyah air base west of Baghdad. About 600 Royal Air Force men and dependents are there. The British hope to negotiate an agreement keeping the base intact and giving them rights to fly over the oil fields.

2. British ambassador to Baghdad, Sir Humphrey Trevelyan, when informed Tuesday that Iraq was withdrawing from the pact, was also told that Iraq's policy was to show friendship toward all who want to maintain good relations, including all members of the alliance.

The press in the Nasser's United Arab Republic seemed suspicious of Kassem's action.

Cairo's Al Shaab said "There is no proof Kassem's withdrawal from the pact aims at leading Iraq to liberate herself from foreign influence."

The paper said that so long as Kassem is fighting Arab nationalism he is not hurting British imperialism.

Damascus newspapers in the U. A. R. Province of Syria said Nasser had forced Kassem to quit the pact. In a series of anti-Communist speeches from Damascus Nasser had taunted Kassem with remaining a member of the alliance despite his promises of a policy of

Kremlin Fearful Of Security

Moscow, March 25 — (AP) — The Soviet Union declared last night it will take steps to protect its southern frontiers in the face of new U. S. bilateral military pacts in the area.

The pacts with Turkey, Iran and Pakistan were assailed in an official government statement. The Kremlin called them a hostile act toward the Soviet Union.

"Ruling circles of the U. S. A. are acting in this particular case in the dubious role of an international gendarme against the peoples of eastern countries," said a Radio Moscow summary of the statement. It added:

"The U. S. S. R. Government will of course take necessary measures to insure the security of the U. S. S. R. frontiers and to maintain peace."

The United States concluded the separate military agreements with Turkey, Iran and Pakistan March 5. The three countries form the so-called northern tier along the Soviet Union's southern frontiers.

The Soviet statement said American military authorities are planning to make Turkey the main rock-

UNC Library Receives Gift Of Rare Documents

Old English legal documents dating from the time of Queen Elizabeth I through the reign of George IV have been added to the UNC library's rare book collection.

Included are the wills, deeds, mortgages, leases, marriage settlements, releases, assignments and estate settlements. The gift was made by Mrs. Howard Mitchell and Mrs. C. Harold Waterbury of Chapel Hill, in memory of their father, the late Charles W. Rasey, one time county Recorder of Deeds of Santa Barbara, Calif. Mr. Rasey acquired the documents in the early 1900's.

These documents are currently displayed on the main floor of the Wilson Library and at Manning Hall. Following the display they will be kept in the Rare Book Room of the Wilson Library where they may be used researchers and students of law.

Each of the documents is hand written on vellum, a specially treated sheepskin. The skillful penmanship of the scriveners who wrote up the texts for the parties to the various transactions was paid for by the word. It is thought by some authorities that this fact may partially explain some of the excessive verbiage characteristic of legal documents of all kinds, sometimes traditionally followed in the present day.

The documents vary in size from the smallest rectangular sheets to the largest which are almost three feet square. Writing also varies from fine, closely confined script to fairly bold individual lettering easily legible. While most of the text is in English, some specimens are wholly or partly in Latin. Initials are often highly decorated. In contrast to the bold and clear penmanship of the scriveners is the irregular handwriting of the individual parties who sign the documents. The seals of the contracting parties embedded in sealing wax are in an excellent state of preservation.

Professor Fred B. McCall, of the University of North Carolina Law School Faculty, whose specialty deals with wills and estates, regards the collection as of distinctive value. It represents a continuity of legal processes out of which much of our own law has evolved.

UNC Librarian Named As Exchange Director

Dr. Jerrold Orne, UNC librarian, is one of two new directors just elected to the executive board of the United States Book Exchange for a two-year term.

The exchange is a private non-profit corporation engaged in cooperative exchange and other services to libraries on a national and international scale.

Sandy Trotman Reigns Over Military Ball

Sandy Trotman was crowned queen of the annual Military Ball Saturday night at the Washington Duke Crystal Ballroom in Durham.

Miss Trotman, a junior here and member of Pi Beta Phi sorority, was escorted by Joe Alexander.

Three court members, Jeannie Crews, Ann Lucas and Pat Chandler, are members of the AFROTC Angel Flight.

The ball is sponsored annually by the Scabbard and Blade Regiment here. Approximately 200 cadets, midshipmen and their dates attended the affair which began at 9 p.m.

Prior to the dance, the members of the Arnold Air Society and the Scabbard and Blade were entertained at Washington Duke by Harriet Gibbon and her electric piano from N.B.C.'s Jack Paar Show.

A Vacation

By tomorrow the campus will be deserted, except for those few who reside in Chapel Hill, and for those who have to make up for study time missed.

It will be deserted by students heading for their homes, or for the beach, or for some big city, or for the mountains, each in search of rest, recreation, and respite from the rigors of the long winter period.

It will be a time of repose, but it is possible that this time of repose could be put to a constructive use. It could be used for thought, reflective thought about a year of events or about the intellectual pursuits of the academic year. It can be a tying together of strings and a formulation of ideas. It does not mean extra effort, but it does mean that when a person is thinking, he thinks about more than the date last night or the dinner tomorrow.

Within the last year, the world has grown smaller, and in this smaller hull, two competing forces are forcing the entire population to the brink of annihilation in pursuit of their own gain, and the upperhand is held by the wrong side.

The world has seen missiles developed capable of spanning continents in a matter of minutes and capable of piercing the earth's atmosphere and hurtling out into the solar system.

It has seen the destructive power of man manifest itself with a strontium 90 content in the atmosphere high enough to make it dangerous in these United States.

It has seen the surge of nationalism in the Middle East and in Asian areas, and has seen this, in turn, break up into many fragments.

It has seen the human rights problem in America and in Africa made only slightly less difficult by developments during the past year.

And with all these events and many others come questions, questions that every citizen in the world must answer, and that few are in control of the machinery to answer.

If the student wants to, he can solve these problems unto himself. He can utilize the wisdom in his courses, and he can think about the issues. His voice is as important as any other in the world, and it is up to him to have his voice counted.

The vacation will come and go, and the stagnation will still be there.

Future Security

Sidney Dakar

Every year there is a deluge of insurance salesmen who want to sell all the graduating seniors insurance "to protect their future security." This points out an interesting phenomenon. The vast majority of people are in a constant search for security. When they get some security they then want more security to protect what they already have.

After some thought and observations one is likely to conclude that there is no such thing as true security. No one can guarantee security, not even the richest and most conservative insurance companies or the most powerful governments. Anyone who believes otherwise is deceiving himself.

Vast fortunes can be lost overnight, as in the depression of 1929. Wars come and go; inflation can make a life's savings simply disappear before one's eyes; cities can be destroyed; millions can be killed and nations can be conquered and looted by the victors. In short, the most cautious plans of men can be very easily fouled by the relentless and unpredictable course of history.

What, then, should we do in the matter of future plans? Should we live only for the day? Not at all. We should of course plan for the future, but these plans should be made with the idea that the only thing in life that is certain is that it will be uncertain. About the safest investment that we can make is that which we spend for our intellectual improvement. The investment can be in the form of time spent while trying to improve ourselves as individuals. The time by no means has to be spent in a university. Our intrinsic abilities, when fully developed, are our most priceless assets and least affected by the vicissitudes of economics, politics and wars.

The American of today lives in a very insecure and shaky world of H-bombs and rockets. He is constantly trying to grab security which does not exist in the real world. He is searching for something permanent in a world that changes overnight. Of course he does not find any real security if he is a thinking man and this often leads to frustration. Only the simple and uninformed know real security.

Why not look upon change and the insecurity it brings as normal? If we cannot have security, why not have adventure? Why not travel to distant lands to work or study? Why not try something each day that we have always wanted to do, but never thought that we should or could? In spite of all our precautions life is one big gamble. We all take chances every day, some consciously, most unconsciously.

"The Fool! He's Cutting The Wrong End"

The U. N.

Norman Cousins

The Senate Preparedness Committee has been listening to testimony about the nature of the Berlin crisis. The high point of the hearings came when General Maxwell D. Taylor, Army Chief of Staff, warned the Congress against expecting military victory as the result of a nuclear war over Berlin.

The decisive part of a nuclear war, General Taylor said, could come quickly, but "it might take 100 years to end the desolation and to restore some form of order."

"In my judgment," General Taylor said, "any dogmatic prediction of what will take place after an initial nuclear exchange is beyond the human capability. However, there is no reason to believe that peace is going to ensue at once, except, perhaps, the peace of the dead."

Having made it clear that a military showdown over Berlin could not exclude the possibility of a nuclear war, and having dramatized the fact that victory in a nuclear war is a preposterous concept, General Taylor proceeded to declare that the United States must be prepared to wage nuclear war if necessary to maintain its forces in Berlin.

It was up to the Soviet leaders, he said to back down and thus prevent the danger of a nuclear showdown over Berlin. There was a clear inference that the Soviet leaders were not so foolish or irresponsible as to go through with their plans to withdraw from Berlin and turn the problem over to the East Germans. After all, he intimated, the Russians understood the meaning of a nuclear war.

Meanwhile, Premier Nikita Khrushchev, who precipitated the crisis with his demands, has warned the United States to back down on the Berlin issue. He has expressed the hope that the United States would not be so irresponsible as to risk war over Berlin. As for the Soviet Union, he added, it is determined to go through with its plans. If nuclear war is to be averted, it is up to the United States to do the averting.

It is plain, therefore, that both the United States and the Soviet Union believe it would be monstrous and irresponsible if a war were to break out over Berlin. And each side is calling on the other side to be wise enough and responsible enough to prevent the nuclear war by backing down. But each declares its own readiness to let fly with the bombs rather than alter its position. In short, if wisdom is to prevail, each side expects the other one to furnish it. We say, in effect: "We're ready to launch a nuclear war because we can't possibly change our stand, but surely you can't be so stupid not to see that your failure to change your own stand will result in annihilation of all concerned." And the Russians, almost to the comma, are saying the same thing to us.

It becomes plain, therefore, that both sides are ready to go to war, agreeing with each other that if they should do so Berlin and all its people would be pulverized into a radioactive rubble pile in a matter of hours, with the rest of the world liekly to follow in a matter of days. In short, military measures cannot possibly provide victory, but it is only the other fellow who is expected to know this.

That the fully sovereign state should be capable of this kind of logic is no surprise. It is in the nature of unfettered sovereignty to see no answer except force or the threat of force. But what is surprising is that the human beings who inhabit the planet are not splitting the sky with their indignation over the kind of ghastly nonsense that can put a torch to the world itself. A Dreyfus case can animate and arouse a whole civilization; a Hall murder case will cause excited debate from Kobe to Kalamazoo; a pyromaniac in Utah can produce concerned headlines in Tennessee. But the possible murder of a whole civilization, with pain that would pursue men for generations to come — all this the world can take in its stride.

And no aspect of the current crisis over Berlin is more significant or tragic than the fact that the one world agency created to prevent war has hardly even been mentioned. The United Nations, which makes its appeal for the support of the world's people on the basis of its ability to keep the peace, has yet to be regarded as a factor in a possible resolution of the German situation. The problem of Berlin is inseparable from the problem of Germany. The problem of Germany is inseparable from the problem of world peace. The United Nations is the world agency charged with world peace. The United Nations, therefore, is the proper means, rather than nuclear war, or the threat of nuclear war, for attempting to resolve the Berlin crisis.

The Berlin crisis, however, gives dramatic visibility to the fact that the United Nations was never given the authority to tell the large states what to do. But if this is the case, must the world be consigned indefinitely to the peril of unanimous consent? Why shouldn't the United Nations have the power to tell the large states what to do? How else is peace to be created and maintained? If, for example, the large states insist on making and testing the weapons that can destroy all states, themselves included, then it clearly becomes the obligation of the world organization to step in and define a basis for sanity and security.

Far better to have the U.N., with all its weaknesses, wrestle with the problem of Berlin than to have the major nations attempt to resolve it with all their strength. And if we ask, how can the large states be expected to propose or accept this kind of authority, the answer is that they probably won't. But the ultimate authority and power reside with the citizens — at least in a free society. Therefore, this now becomes the first order of business for free citizens everywhere.

Man's natural habitat is now threatened. The fully sovereign nations cannot deal with that threat. The U.N. might, if enough people believe it should.

Nine Answers To Nine Questions

Gail Godwin

This spring, the Office of the Dean of Women has sent out "Senior Questionnaires' to all dormitories and sorority houses on campus. All senior girls are urged to answer the nine questions which are aimed to help the future Carolina woman student, but it is not obligatory that they do so.

Most of the questions are well-chosen and, if answered thoughtfully and carefully by senior girls, might forecast a few welcome reforms next year or the year after.

Following are the nine questions on the "Senior Questionnaire"—and nine answers by one senior girl who does not claim to represent the majority but who feels the necessity of responding as accurately and candidly as she knows how. Her frame of reference can only be her two years at the University of North Carolina as seen through her own eyes, as felt by her own sensibilities and needs. Perhaps there are others who feel exactly as she does and would answer the questions as she has; perhaps there are those who would answer some of the questions as she has.

QUESTION NO. 1 - "Have you received an adequate amount of academic and vocational guidance at Carolina? If it has not been entirely satisfactory, what suggestions for improvement or questions do you have?"

ANSWER - Yes. I only wish that the women in the larger departments of this university could have experienced the family-like closeness that exists in the rather small but productive school of Journalism. It has been a source of security to know that I had not only teachers and classmates and a dean, but that I had friends when I needed them—friends who would take an interest in the quality of my work as well as the quantity; who would be glad to see me in or out of class; who would guide me in my choices concerning a career in a chosen field.

QUESTION NO. 2 - What could have been done by the University Staff to improve your ability to select an academic program and courses of interest to you?

ANSWER - Most Carolina women, with the exception of nurses, technicians, and town girls, enter the University for their Junior and Senior years only. Therefore, it is expected that most pre-major requirements be fulfilled. If they have not, then the student must make them up during her last two years. Aside from these make-up courses—which might include Math/Latin, a natural science, a social science—she has a more or less free reign to choose from an array of subjects in her major and a varied assortment from other departments. Here, also, I have been fortunate in having an advisor who did not just scribble down the courses I thought I wanted that particular day so he could get rid of me sooner. I was not one of a hundred advisees, but one of eight or nine. Instead, he questioned my choices one by one in such a soul-piercing manner that I usually admitted that I had chosen one or two electives for less-than-noble reasons. If I ever went in to him with a handy little list of ten o'clock "crips" and nothing before ten o'clock, I would usually come out with a few eight o'clock brain twisters and a few cursewords under my breath. Now, as a I look back, I thank him for reinforcing my spaghetti-like will power.

QUESTION NO. 3 - Do you feel that the staff of your major department has been as helpful as your requirements demanded? Explain.

ANSWER - Yes and no. I feel that I got what I wanted out of such courses as Book Reviewing, History of Journalism, and News Editing. But I wish we had been kicked out of the warm classrooms more often and made to beat the pavements so we could learn the practical side of our future profession.

QUESTION NO. 4 - You have had the unique experience of attending two colleges. By this time you must have evaluated the advantages and disadvatages of this type of program for you. Will you briefly discuss some of these which seem most important?

ANSWER - Two years at a rather cloistered girls' school followed by two years at a comparatively lenient University seems to me to be preferable to four years behind the gates of that girls' school. It seems also preferable to being thrown as a green, gullible, and gaping Freshman into such a big University with so many tempting extensions that might turn the head of a simple girl and cause her never to reach her Senior year.

QUESTION NO. 5 - If you had it to do over, would you transfer to Carolina or any other University at the end of your Sophomore year?

ANSWER - If I had it to do over, I would transfer to the University of North Carolina at the end of my sophomore year; I would not send my daughter here . . . but then, that's what my mother said once.

QUESTION NO. 6 - Will you evaluate the adequacy of the social life at Carolina?

ANSWER - Yes, I certainly will. It's over-adequacy is the very reason I would send my daughter somewhere else. I wouldn't want her to be so inundated by dates, fraternity parties, sorority doings, and all those other butterfly activities which are a must around here if you are going to be a "real sharp girl" that she would come home at Thanksgiving and say she had not yet discovered a new book, that she had missed all the concerts, that she had not tried to sneak into the stacks at the library (if they are closed again by then) and that she liked Poly. Sci. because the best looking Alpha Epsilon sat next to her. My vote is for the school where the sharp girl is the girl who cares about what is going on outside her personal radius and who wants to know why enough to find out why.

QUESTION NO. 7 - Have you participated to your satisfaction in campus extra-curricular activities? If not, are there reasons that might be important for us to know in our effort to guide new students?

ANSWER - This question has the makings of a trap question, such as "When did you stop beating your wife?" If I said, with a tear and a sigh: "No, I haven't participated to my satisfaction in campus extra-curricular activities," there might well be an extra question under my answer: "Well, whose fault is that but your own?" Because it would not be anybody's fault but my own since it is made very easy to participate. There is a bandwagon circling the blocks of the campus every ten minutes. However, I am quite satisfied with my meager list of "extracurrics" because I chose them for a specific purpose which they have now filled.

QUESTION NO. 8 - Have you felt the housing and social regulations governing women students have hampered or aided your academic and social adjustments at Carolina? Discuss.

ANSWER - I hope there will come a time when the people who make the rules about undergraduate girls having to live in dormitories or sorority houses will change their minds and let girls enjoy the same freedom as boys. If a girl's parents are willing to pay for an apartment or a room, and if the girl does not wish to live in a family of thirty to two hundred girls, then I think she should be free to live off campus.

I would have certainly been happier if I did not have to attend house meetings the night before a big test; pay fines for leaving a Coke bottle on my floor; and get campused for being five minutes late. Is it so necessary that a college girl be restricted in such personal matters? I don't think that these regulations will make me a more enriched human being after I graduate. It will be more like throwing off shackles.

QUESTION NO. 9 - Have you lived in a three-girl room situation? If so, what advantages or disadvantages did it present?

ANSWER - I have never had to live cramped in a three girl room here at Carolina, only once I did have a roommate with two heads if that could count as a three girl room. However, a friend of mine has two roommates and she says it is very unpleasant because one of them has so many clothes that she took both closets and the other one smokes opium and makes the room unbearable when the windows are closed.

Excellence

It cannot solve them by submerging all forces of moderation which have been chiefly responsible for the improvements in the relations of the races for the past 50 years.

It cannot exclude equity and justice.

The school segregation problems of the South are too important to be left to the politicians alone. The South will make a genuine approach to the ultimate resolution of all these perplexities only when it enlists in effective order the influence of the wisest and most intelligent people of the South—and of the nation — for duties that will test their practicality, their patience, and their courage to the limit. That is the hard but inescapable course.

It is the challenge to excellence. Young men here tonight must take it in hand, after older Southerners have made so many mistakes; for it is going to be with the South a long time. As you do so, and when you meet with disappointment and injustice and defeat — as you will, although I hope not for long—perhaps you will think of some words Mr. Justice Holmes spoke 73 years ago to the students in Harvard College. Some of you may remember them because they used to be in your required readings and may still be. But there is virtue in going back to freshman English. There is virtue in going back to this:

"Your education begins when what is called your education is over, — when you no longer are stringing together the pregnant thoughts, the 'jewels five words long,' which great men have given their lives to cut from the raw material for results which you do not see, cannot predict, and which may be long in coming, — when you take the fact which life offers you for your appointed task.

"No man" — said Holmes — 'has earned the right to intellectual ambition until he has learned to lay his course by a star which he has never seen, — to dig by the divining rod for springs which he may never reach . . .

"For I say to you in all sadness of conviction, that to think great thoughts you must be heroes as well as idealists. Only when you have worked alone, — when you have felt around you a black gulf of solitude more isolating than that which surrounds the dying man, and in hope and in despair have trusted to you own unshaken will, —then only will you have achieved.

"Thus only can you gain the secret isolated joy of the thinker, who knows that, a hundred years after he is dead and forgotten, men who never heard of him will be moving to the measure of his thoughts, — the subtle rapture of a postponed power, which the world knows not because it has no external trappings, but which to his prophetic vision is more real than that which commands an army."

I wish to answer Dave Jones, who in his column, Roundup, appearing on March 22 charged that "the boys who live in Avery Dorm were robbed!" He further stated that I, as Speaker of the Student Legislature, working in a coalition with the members of the University Party accomplished this task. I have consulted with various members of the Legislature and I believe that the facts have been misinterpretted and misrepresented in his column. I would like to take this opprotunity to clear up the proceedings of that night.

The Ways and Means Committee of the Legislature held their weekly meeting with only one member absent. Three persons were present to represent the different phases of the operation of Lenoir Hall. After discussion, the bill was tabled "because of lack of research in this area (student employee situation at Lenoir Hall) . . . until more concrete material could be gathered from the various departments involved." The purpose of this committee is to gather information from all sides, to judge the situation objectively, and to make appropriate recommendations. To committee report is essential, especially in a matter as complex as this, to insure responsible debate on the floor of the Legislature. The committee empowered to objectively weigh the arguements found that they had conflicting statements. They wished to clear up the confusion before we began debate on the floor of the Legislature. This is proper and commendable procedure.

The committee report was presented stating that the bill was tabled. We could take no action on the proposed bill on that night. The bill would automatically come up for debate on the next session of the Legislature.

Representative Jones then arose to make his comments concerning the bill. The chair ruled that these remarks were out of order because they should be presented either in the committee or on the floor when the bill is being debated.

The chair's decision was challanged from the floor. A discussion followed concerning the recognition of Rep. Jones. The vote to recognize Rep. Jones was 14-24. There were 18 University Party members and 21 Student Party members present. There was no straight party vote and furthermore the University Party could not have railroaded a decision since they were in a minority.

There is no curtailment of speech in the Student Legislature. There is, however, a time when each discussion is appropriate. The Legislature is not an open forum but a deliberative governmental body attempting to serve the campus in a responsible fashion.

I trust that this explains the actions on the night of March 19.

Kassem's orders this week to Iraqi newspaper editors to cease attacking Nasser appeared not to have reached Col. Fadel Abbas Mahdawi, president of a military court in Baghdad. The court is trying four air officers on charges of participating in the army revolt at Mosul two weeks ago.

A Baghdad broadcast heard in Amman quoted Mahdawi as predicting that Nasser would be assassinated.

"The Syrian people will undoubtedly destroy this despot," he said. "They will kill him. He may rest assured that the dauntless Syrian or Egyptian people will make his fate the same as that of Nuri Said (The Iraqi premier killed in the Kassem revolt)."

Mahdawi said the Mosul revolt was a Nasser plot.

Summer Work In Glass Firm Is Available

Students planning careers in sales have an opportunity to work during the summer with Owens-Illinois Glass Company.

The company will send representatives here Wednesday, April 1, to interview students in the College of Arts and Sciences and School of Business Administration.

The company's summer program is designed for men who will graduate no later than June 1960, who are single, 21 years old by June 15 and who are free to travel.

Those selected will work from June 15 until Labor Day. During that time, the students will receive training in the Owens-Illinois Dura Glass Center in Toledo and will be assigned to various marketing areas. In these marketing areas they will call on groceries, drug stores and other retail outlets promoting the sales of non-returnable bottles.

The students will be paid a salary, plus additional allowance for living and travel expenses.

Interviews with the company's representatives may be arranged through the University Placement Office.

NLRB Investigators Meet Thursday

WINSTON-SALEM, — (AP) — National Labor Relations Board investigators and officials of strike-bound Harriet-Henderson cotton mills at Henderson will meet here Thursday to discuss a union charge that the company is guilty of unfair labor practice.

James R. Webster, chief legal officer of the NLRB regional office here, said the session will be a continuation of an investigation begun at Henderson last week.

The meeting is set for 10 a.m. in the NLRB offices in the Nissen Building.

For those of you that didn't take off for the holidays yesterday, or the day before, here's a rundown of Carolina's short baseball season to date.

As of today, the baseball Tar Heels' record is 2-0. Perhaps not too many eyebrows will be raised at this, but a close look at those two opponents may cause some feelings of surprise.

Both Dartmouth and Connecticut were in the NCAA District 1 play-offs last year and both are coached by veteran mentors. Connecticut slaughtered Maryland of the ACC 13-1 at College Park.

What kind of a team will the Heels field this season? Judging from the first two games, it looks like this team may be a whole lot like last year's, and that's great. Against Dartmounth the Tar Heels scored a run in the bottom of the ninth for a 2-1 win. Against Conpecticut the Heels got a homer from Harold Workman in the bottom of the eighth for an 8-7 victory in a free-swinging contest.

Last year's ACC runners-up developed a reputation for coming from behind and playing exciting ball. This season's crew has shown this ability so far. Both days the stands were jam-packed.

The value of home crowds in Chapel Hill for baseball games can be easily demonstrated. Last year the students were firmly behind the Tar Heels, and this led to amazing things. Carolina did not lose a single game at home. Thus far the friendly voices in Emerson Stadium have propelled the Heels to two straight victories over top-ranked opposition.

Today the Heels are in sunny Florida where they open a three-day series against Florida State, Florida and Illinois. Last year Carolina didn't do to well in the land of tourists, but that had little bearing on their later performances.

After vacation Carolina meets two more out-of-conference foes (Ithaca and East Carolina) and then the drive for the ACC pennant begins.

Last year's flag winner, Clemson, is the choice for most of the fans and writers around the league. Carolina, Wake Forest and Maryland also figure highly in the estimation of those who know.

We beg to differ. Here's the way they line-up as we see it and this is the way we think they'll stand when the season has ended:

1. Carolina
2. Clemson
3. Wake Forest
4. Maryland
5. N. C. State
6. Virginia
7. Duke
8. South Carolina

One advantage Walter Rabb, Carolina mentor, will have that he lacked last season, is profundity of top-notch sophomores. Carroll Bolick, a soph catcher, moved not only into the starting line-up but into the clean-up slot as a hitter. Bolick really produced in banging out a triple and single in three trips.

Other promising sophs are right-handed pitcher John Stott, who got credit for the win against Connecticut, third-baseman Tommy Camp, first-baseman Dave Dale, outfielder Russ Hollers, pitcher Bob Deaton, and third baseman Ferg Norton.

With these youngsters to go along with an already proven out field, pitching staff and catcher, Rabb stands an excellent chance of coming through with the ACC flag for Carolina.

Peacocks Whip St. A 2-1 For Campus Soccer Crown

The Peacocks, a group of Phys. Ed. graduate instructors, today became all-Campus soccer champions by beating St. Anthony Hall 2-1.

It was a close, hard-fought game from start to finish. Walt Weiland put the Peacocks ahead 1-0 in the first quarter, but St. A's John Ghannin's goal evened it at 1-1 in the third frame.

But in the final quarter Charley Schrader poked another through for the Peacocks and that was the way it stood, 2-1.

Tracksters Beat State By 96-34

Slender distance man Wayne Bishop, versatile Ray Stanley, and flexible Lyndon DeBorde each copped two events Monday as they led the Tar Heel track team to a 96-34 opening victory over N. C. State's Wolfpack at Raleigh.

Bishop won both the mile and two mile and also ran the third leg on the winning one mile relay team. Stanley won the broad jump and the javelin (a toss of 192' 2" which was probably the top individual performance) and finished second in the discus.

DeBorde flicked through both the high and low hurdles for wins there.

All-American half-miler Dave Scurlock who usually runs the 440 and 880 missed the meet.

Summary:

Thinclads Go To Florida

Thirteen members of the Carolina varsity track team and five from the freshman squad depart today for sunny Florida where they will participate in Saturday's Florida Relays at Gainesville.

In the individual events, Wayne Bishop will run the two mile, Ward Sims will pole vault, Lyndon DeBorde will run the high hurdles, and Fraser Smith will throw the discus. Ray Stanley and John O'Neal will throw the javelin and Stanley will also broad jump.

The Tar Heels will enter a two mile relay team in the probable order of Bob Foxworth, Bing Somers, Cowles Llipfert, and Dave Scurlock. A sprint medley team will be composed of John Sylvester (440), Charlie Sowers (220), Bob Eubanks (220), and Scurlock (880).

In the freshman division Dennis Rash (440), Ward Purrngton (220), Tam Leffler (220), and Dave Peltz (880 will run the sprint medley, and three of these will join Don Jeffries in the mile relay.

Netters Trim Illinois, 6-3

The Carolina tennis team evened its season record at 1-1 and avenged Tuesday's 5-4 loss to Illinois at the same time yesterday as it dumped the strong Illini squad 6-3.

For the second day in a row captain Geoff Black led his team to victory although the senior from Quebec had to extend himself more this time. Bob Breckenridge took the first set of the match 9-7 before Black rallied in the final two with scores of 6-3, 6-4.

The Illinois' chances of winning were definitely hindered by the fact number three man Joe Epkins injured himself during his singles match with Ben Keys and was forced to default both his singles and doubles matches.

Sophomore Bruce Sylvia continued his fine singles play with a 6-3, 6-1 win over George Gilmore. Tuesday, Sylvia won his first match in varsity competition by defeating Epkins 6-3, 7-5.

Possibly the biggest upset of the afternoon occurred in the number one doubles match where Marshall Happer and Sylvia lost the first set to Al Holtman and Breckenridge 6-1 and then came back to sweep the next two 6-4 and 6-2 to take the victory.

The Summary

Singles — 1. Black (C) defeated Breckenridge 7-9, 6-3, 6-4. 2. Holtman (I) defeated Happer 6-3, 6-3. 3. Keys (C) won from Epkins by default. 4. Sylvia (C) defeated Gilmore 6-3, 6-1. 5. Lockett (C) defeated Lansford 7-9, 6-1, 6-2. 6. Mesch (I) defeated Ricks 6-4, 6-0.

Doubles — 1. Happer and Sylvia (C) defeated Holtman and Breckenridge 1-6, 6-4, 6-2. 2. Mesch and Lansford (I) defeated Black and Lockett 7-5, 6-4. 3. Keys and Ricks (C) won from Gilmore and Epkins by default.

Golfers Top Indiana 24-3 In Opener

Carolina's varsity golfers, with only one letterman returning from last year's squad, got the season off on the right foot here yesterday with a surprisingly easy 23-4 victory over highly-regarded Indiana.

Every single member of the Tar Heels whipped his opponent in an utter romp. Number one man for Carolina, Ed Justa, whipped his opponent 3-0 and won medalist honors with a 1-under par 71.

The Tar Heels all shot well, winding up with a team average of 73.8.

The Heels face Cornell here next on April.

In addition to winning every individual match, the Heels took all three best-ball scores.

Last year's golf squad won the ACC, but this year's team returned only one letterman, John McKee, the number 6 man. Among the missing were Gene Lookabill and all-American Billy Thornton.

The Summary

Ed Justa (C) defeated Garie Kriete 3-0; Don McMillan (C) defeated James Betou 2-1—best ball -Carolina 3-0.

David Sloan (C) defeated Ronnie Royer 2½-½, Bob Galloway (C) defeated Jon Sommer 2-1 — Best ball- - Carolina 2-1

Hugh Goodman defeated Hiram Coble 3-0, John McKee (C) defeated Dave Pella 2½-½

J. PAUL SHEEDY, hair expert, says: "Wildroot tames those curls!"

WHO SAID IT FIRST?
A column of incidental intelligence by Jockey brand

"EVERYONE TO HIS OWN TASTE"
There has never been any accounting for tastes, and the man who appreciated this truth first was Francois Rabelais. In his "Pantagruel", he coined this now-famous judgment:
"Every one to his taste, as the woman said when she kissed her cow."

"PRACTICE WHAT YOU PREACH"
Sounds like advice right out of "Poor Richard", but Plautus said it many centuries before Ben Franklin. Classical scholars, of course, know this statement in its original Latin.
"Facias ipse quod faciomus swades."

"LOVED AND LOST"
It's better than not loving at all according to Lord Tennyson's "In Memoriam", XXVII:
"I hold it true, whate'er befall/I feel it, when I sorrow most/'Tis better to have loved and lost/Than never to have loved at all."

Jockey SKANTS striped brief

"Purely sensational"—that's the judgment of college men who have seen the new Jockey Striped SKANTS. Jockey stylists have taken this 100% stretch nylon bikini-style brief...added candy stripes...and produced a garment you'll really enjoy wearing.

SKANTS is cut high on the sides with a low waistband and comes in a choice of red, black, green, rust or blue stripes. Look for SKANTS—in stripes, or solids—in the Jockey department at your campus store.

Administration Abolishes All University Fraternities

Policy's Enactment Is Two Years Away

By SITRUC SNAG

Fraternities have been abolished at the University of North Carolina.

So came the word from Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver, who announced that there would be a two year waiting period so that fraternity men could adjust to new dormitory surroundings.

Weaver added that he thanked various student leaders for their assistance in bringing this decision, and singled out Daily Tar Heel editor Curtis Gans for his fine work in bringing the destruction of UNC fraternities.

Gans, when reached for comment said, "I set out to get 'em, and we got 'em."

Housing Director James Wadsworth replied to a question about what the University was going to do with the new surplus of dormitory residents created by the University edict, by saying that there were already plans underway to building a sixteen story dormitory equipped with bar so that these fraternity men would not feel too bereft.

He added, "In the meantime, we will just have to take some money from the huge amount appropriated for faculty salaries to build temporary structures for these new refugees."

He explained that the two year waiting period was a blessing in that it would give the University time to provide room in its budget for this new influx. He warned, however, that a room rent increase, the eleventh in as many years, might be the result.

Ashe Exum, IFC president, comments that he was happy to hear the University decision.

"Not wanting to slight editor Gans, I would like to point out that this was the IFC's idea all the time. We just felt that many problems had to be worker out before this move could be successful," Exum said.

He added, "This move will eliminate the worst fraternity problem - finances. It will also eliminate the second worst fraternity problem - rushing. In one move the University has settled the pressing problems of the fraternities."

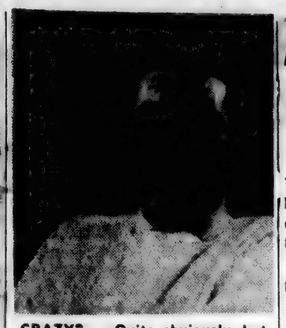
Student Body President Don Furtado commented, "I was for it all along. I just didn't think it was feasible. I'm glad the University took such a courageous action."

DTH Strikes Back

Today's Daily Tar Heel features two front pages as a special service to all who continually ask for page one play. We regret that this can not be a regular service of The Daily Tar Heel since page one is demanded more than any other part of this rag with the possible exception of 'Peanuts'.

Anything on this page (yeah, the one you're reading now) is false (except the ads) . . .

Right now, if you're looking for sports, see page three; if you're looking for news (?) see the legitimate page one; if you're looking for something to relax you, go back to bed; and if you're looking for a good paper — you're reading the wrong rag anyway.



CRAZY? — Quite obviously, but this young man is a new candidate for editor of this scandal sheet (sponsored by us April Fools). The staff found his picture and decided that since he would be going into the job like most editors leave, he undoubtably would be the best editor this rag ever had.

Former IFC President Yates 'Fingers' NSA Socialist

Former IFC President Tucker Yates announced yesterday that he had found a "Socialist" in the United States National Student Association.

Yates fingered Michael Harrington, noted Socialist Youth Leader as the person who was present at the N. S. A. Congress at Delaware, Ohio last summer.

Yates added, "Harrington's membership proves that N. S. A. is subversive. I'm sorry, I couldn't get a Communist, but a Socialist will do. Everybody knows they're pink."

Harrington, looking white as ever, commented to The Daily Tar Heel's New York Bureau that he was not affiliated with N. S. A. "Too tame," was Harrington's comment about the N. S. A.

The Socialist Youth Leader went on to say, that he considered N.S.A. a reactionary organization, and that his presence there last summer was to add a little life to the Congress. "I was disappointed not to see one of my fellow travelers." Harrington commented.

Robert Kiley, president of N. S. A. and former Student Body president at Notre Dame, was taken aback by Yates' accusation.

Kiley, in commenting to Daily Tar Heel Philadelphia Bureau reporter Fred Katzin, said "I am amazed. I did not know we had one of those in our organization. It must have taken a great deal of work on the part of Yates to dig him out."

"I'd like to appoint Yates as an officer in charge of our spring housecleaning. I'm sure he would do a thorough job," Kiley added.

Yates was unavailable for comment as to whether he accepted Kiley's offer.

Pasternak Is Here

Boris Pasternak, Nobel fiction award winner, will be at the Intimate Bookshop at noon today to autograph copies of his controversial novel, Dr. Zhivago.

Pasternak, sponsored by the Carolina Forum, slipped out of Russia at an undisclosed date for his appearance on campus.

Due to time limitations imposed by Pasternak's itinerary, prospective purchasers of the autographed books are asked to be prompt.

Year's First Panty Raid Made Here By UNC Coeds

AF NEWS RELEASE

The first "panty raid" here this year was made Tuesday night, but for the first time in the long history of the University the raiders were coeds.

Officers reported that several dozen coeds (mostly Tri Delts) strolled up Cameron Avenue to the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity house at midnight Tuesday. The quiet evening of the first day after spring holidays was interrupted with loud shouts from the girls of, "We want short shorts!"

As a result of the incident, several coeds were arrested, and all other girls at the DKE house will suffer penalties for being out after coed closing hours.

Several DKEs were also arrested and charged with inciting a riot and with cooperative participation in the panty raid.

The raid was organized by Tri Delt Katie Stewart, officers said. Miss Stewart is being held in Chapel Hill jail without privilege of bond.

Also jailed was Mary Margaret Brown, who officers said was "yellin' louder than all the others put together."

Officers commented that the raid never would have occurred if several DKEs had not lured the Tri Delts with promises of a "successful" panty raid.

Charged with inciting the riot was DKE John Whitaker. The Tri Delts said Whitaker called the sorority house just before 11 p.m. Tuesday and told the girls that local policemen would be in another part of Chapel Hill at midnight, the time he said the coeds should make a hurried raid.

Just before midnight, another DKE, Bob Borden, was supposed to call the police and report a panty raid at the ADPi house. But Borden was so excited and so busy pressing a pair of men's unmentionables that he forgot to call.

The DKEs stayed inside the house until the coeds arrived, and then the boys flocked onto the balcony, carrying the called for apparel.

From the shorts that were confiscated by officers, the names of Howard Holderness, Jimmy Patrick and Bob Walker were found. Officers said they thought another pair belonged to "Bucky" Shuford, but only the "Shuf" was legible.

The most unusual pair of shorts, officers said, was a white pair trimmed in lace, red sequins and small seed pearls. A large red heart was sewed on the back. From the word, "Tom," written on the shorts in sequins and pearls, officers were able to discover the owner, Tom Rand.

Rand's shorts were found in the possession of Miss Brown.

When local policemen were collecting the DKEs' shorts, they took half a dozen pairs of an extremely large size. Because of the size, officers said they knew the owner couldn't be anyone else but Walker Blanton. Blanton, however, eluded arrest and was still at large early today.

Three coeds, Mari Barnes, Leslie Crutchfield and Bea Newman, were reprimanded by officers for fighting over a pair of shorts belonging to Tim Burnett.

Hurricane Zelma Aims For Chapel Hill Area

By RUSHIN ROULETTE

Hurricane Zelma is scheduled to hit the Carolina coast at approximately 6:59 tonight, according to hurricane authorities.

The weathermen say that Zelma is heading toward Chapel Hill traveling 110 miles per hour and should hit here at 8 p.m.

Oscar K. Sigaforid, head weather forecaster at Satola, Fla., where Zelma originated, warned that if the hurricane does not change her course, she will strike Chapel Hill at the precise moment that the unseasonal blizzard, moving down from Greenland will hit.

The blizzard is the worst the nation has ever known and some scientists believe it to be the beginning of a new ice age.

Weatherman Sigaforid was not certain just what sort of weather conditions will result from the force of the two pressure areas colliding.

The town of Chapel Hill has gone into action to prepare for the disaster.

The Intimate Bookshop is offering free copies of "Peanuts" to the first 20 people blown into the shop; Kemp is having a hurricane-blizzard sale; the Rath is staying open all night so that people might find refuge in the catacombs; Milton is having a sale on raincoats (marked down from $42.93); and Antonio is offering Hailstone pizza (reservations are a must!).

Harry is not making any preparations. He feels that his customers probably won't notice the weather anyway.

A notice from the Dean of Women's office stated the correct procedure for coeds to follow.

The notice said that in case of strong winds all coeds must remember to sign out before leaving their residence. No coed should fly through unlighted parts of the campus unescorted.

Any woman student who does not have travel permission is instructed to present written permission from her parents before leaving her residence. (No telephone calls or telegrams accepted.)

When returning to her residence each coed must sign in, provided the residence is still there.

The office could not comment as to whether or not the combination hurricane-blizzard could properly be called a sporting event.

That office will release a statement later today giving their decision. If it should be termed a sporting event, coeds will be given permission to wear bermudas.

In a statement yesterday afternoon, Don Furtado, student body president, said that he is planning to bring the whole matter up before the Student Legislature for consideration.

Weatherman Sigaforid praised Chapel Hill and the University for heir far-sighted preparations.

Tibet

The United States is today reaping the wrongs of its Indian policy of the post-war era. Nothing can more clearly portray this fact than the impotence with which the United States must watch the crushing of a Tibetan revolt in that religious center high in the Himalayas.

There will be a few murmurs of sympathy in Washington, but very few will remember the Indian wheat crisis of 1947 to which the United States responded with too little too late, and let Communist prestige establish a foothold in that vast country which could very well swing the Asian tide.

As a direct result of this policy of being too late with too little, the Indian government is currently unable to respond to the challenge that the revolt in Tibet clearly places before it. It cannot even respond to the extent that Austria and the United States responded in the Hungarian Revolution situation, simply because it has not the muscle to back an interventionist policy. As a footnote to this, it is clear that the fatal error of the United States in recent years has been its failuer to intervene physically in the Hungarian Revolution.

It has been said by various American commentators that the Tibetan revolt would cost the Communist Chinese a great deal in prestige. This may have a certain shred of truth but the very fact that they were able to crush this revolt finally without more than a whimper or two of comment is clear evidence that the Communist Chinese are right now firmly in the saddle in Asia. The result is that while it will leave an unpleasant stigma in the minds of many, the Tibetan revolt served only to prove the direction in which the balance of power has shifted in Asia.

There are no clear and easy remedial measures in Tibet, and for the time being that situation is closed. But it is not too late yet to do something about the rest of Asia, and the key to the rest of Asia is India. For India not only has the second largest population in the world, but its present neutrality is the only thing that is keeping the entire area from falling like a deck of cards to the Communist Chinese. That neutrality is in danger.

It is in danger by the Communist successes in other areas, as well as it is in danger by the economic weakness of India as a country. A comparison can be drawn between India and China which for the purposes of this investigation is totally valid. Both China and India are over-populated, and both have great industrial potential. Under the economic programs of the forced state, the Chinese have developed, if not a thriving economy, at least a producing stable one. The Indians on the other hand have done no such thing. Moreover, the Indians will continue to be impotent and the threat of India going Communist will continue so long as this situation is not radically altered.

So here is where the United States fits in. The U. S. must cease to be too late with not enough. It must work out a program with India to make its economy sound and its industry productive. This will not take a few million dollars. The bill will surely run into the billions. This will be hard to push through a Congress determined to cut the heart out of foreign aid. Yet, it is incumbent on America as the leader of the free world to enable it to be profitable to be free.

The United States cannot be penny pinching when its very existence is threatened. And the saying is becoming more and more true — so goes Asia, so goes the world.

Come

This Friday there will be a political rally in Gerrard Hall in which all candidates for campus-wide office will attend. Each will speak, and each will be there to answer your questions.

If you want to cast your vote wisely, be there. One informed vote is more important than any mass action.

Harper's Bizarre

Easter comes at different times to different people. To the New Yorker with a gay new bonnet and suit it comes around 10 o'clock Sunday morning; others find it in the Easter sunrise; to children, brightly decked out and equipped with wicker baskets, it comes after breakfast in the form of colored eggs. But Easter at home, the one we know, comes in the hour before dawn.

It comes as softly as the morning breeze, and as sweetly. The mocking bird which has spent a wakeful night suddenly hushes as the first strains of music float down the street, ". . . He rose . . . He rose . . . He rose from the dead . . ."

The music fades, the trees stir in a breath of wind, and the bird remains hushed. Then louder, but sweetly as before, the sound drifts back, ". . . He rose (he rose) . . . He rose (He rose) . . . He rose from the dead . . ."

Far down the street a light blinks on. Then another, and another. The shadow-borne sound stops a moment before each window, ". . . they crucified my Savior, and laid him in the tomb . . ."

Nearer now, the already full-bodied sound takes shape. In the light of false-dawn they stand — colored people — as, in generations past, their ancestors sang for the white folks the songs they had been taught, and had made their own.

The group hums softly — and slowly, so slowly, the sound becomes words, clear and true in the morning air:

". . . they crucified my Savior.
I know He died for me,
And the Lord will bear my spirit home."

Then, as softly as it came, the sound drifts on, toward new lighted windows. Here someone calls out a soft "Thank you." There another opens his door to proffer a gift. And the sound, the soft, ethereal sound — Easter — fades in the distance. ". . . He rose from the dead . . . and the Lord will bear my spirit home."

"Now In This Case, They're All Waiting For A Call"

Union Rights And Union Wrongs

Max Ascoli

Somewhat belatedly and reluctantly, our country has found itself face to face with two formidable facts: Big Labor is here to stay, and America's commitment to world leadership is for keeps. Only in the late 1940's did we find out that the foreign world was not as foreign as it used to be. Only in the late 1930's did organized labor become as established and legitimate as business. Most labor leaders still find it difficult to reconcile themselves to their new status as pillars of society.

A naive extension of native democratic ideals still pervades our international and labor policies. The dogma still prevails: Our country stands shoulder to shoulder with every nation where the people's interests are taken care of by the people themselves, where differences of opinion are settled by unfettered elections, and where, if at all possible, there is a two-party system.

Lately, several Congressional leaders have rediscovered that the cure-all for labor scandals is more and more democracy. "Within unions a framework of democracy," said Senator Mundt, "will guarantee to every union member the right of unfettered self-expression in the selection of his leaders and in such vital economic matters as strike determinations." Recently, President Meany of the AFL-CIO was given a hard time by a House subcommittee. He couldn't possibly agree that strikes should be called or settled only by majority vote of the rank and file—unless, as he put it, the stockholders be given the same responsibility for management.

Quite a number of elected politicians still find it difficult to acknowledge the leaders of organized labor as politicians from another realm. We have heard ad nauseam in the halls of Congress that union members should incessantly and massively participate in all the major decisions on union affairs and spend their free time watching over their elected representatives. Respectfully, one can ask our congressmen how they would like to have their constituents massively breathing down their necks.

Delusions about the realm of labor are not the exclusive occupational disease of politicians. In a recent editorial on the labor bills now pending before Congress, the New York Times wrote: "A striking feature of their bills is their wide agreement on ways to democratize and purify unions." Yet the Times, like the other New York papers, had suffered great damage just a few weeks earlier from a strike called by a free-balloting, democratic, but not over-pure union.

It is also said that things would go much better in our unions, great and small, if their internal politics were run according to a two-party system. This could easily happen, and conflicting intra-union issues, real and phony, could be speedily raised if the people who are the most skillful professionals in this business, the Communists, were given a chance to infiltrate our trade-union movement.

As matters actually stand, labor has little room for two parties and even less for that kind of ever vigilant, direct, or town-meeting, democracy that some of our lawmakers seem to advocate. A few of the most powerful unions, like the Machinists, are run by enlightened despots; some, like the UAW, by very strong executives checked by semi-judicial controls and by potential internal troubles. The Teamsters are still under the iron fist of an empire builder similar in many respects to the founders of business empires generations ago. The "robber barons," however, were lucky enough to be exempted from the scrutiny of Congressional investigations, and pressures to plead the Fifth.

The institutions and the principles of democracy can no more be transferred wholesale to the realm of labor than to the realm of business. Indeed, democracy is weakened and defiled whenever the attempt is made to extend it beyond the range of public government. If it is to remain supreme, public government must constantly define and survey the boundaries within which private governments do their work. Our Federal government must see to it that the leaders of labor are held accountable to their constituents for the mandate the have gained, and do not make themselves into feudal lords free to violate the laws of the land—including the individual's right to dissent.

What makes democracy work is the tireless activity of the few and the comparativei ndifference of the many—provided that the few don't make themselves into an all-powerful class and are never relieved of the fear that the many may wake up. This is true also about the limited amount of democracy organized labor can bear.

If we are less hysterical about labor and business, then we can learn how both can be kept within bounds. And if we are aware of the peculiarities that make democracy work here at home, then we may become more reconciled to the fact that free, unfettered elections are not necessarily the best way to solve international difficulties like the unification of Germany, and that friendly foreign countries like India or Mexico can be reasonably free, even without too much of a two-party system.

THE REPORTER

Anxiety In The Scientific Community

Frank Crowther

There was an extremely interesting item sandwiched in the middle of the news section of The New York Times on Sunday, March 22. It reported that a scientist employed by International Business Machines, by name Dr. A. R. J. Grosch, manager of space programs for I.B.M., stated the following: "Our missile program is the swan song of a dying civilization." This remark was shouted from the floor of a meeting at the California Institute of Technology, attended by some of the nation's leading space specialists. Dr. Grosch was one of the several observers from I.B.M. in attendance.

The report continued by saying that this remark brought others to their feet and broke up the meeting. Soon afterward, the general manager of IBM.'s military products division declared Dr. Grosch a renegade and asserted: "His views don't agree with my views nor with those of the company."

This was an unquestionably shocking statement, especially when one considers its significant source. This man is (or was) the manager of a space program in a company which has extensive government contracts. These are the men who supposedly believe in the quest for outer space, yet here is a scientist who demonstrated violent apprehension. Might we not assume that this utterance was a hysterical manifestation of anxiety and expectation? If one alludes to the Freudian definition, anxiety as an affective condition "is the reproduction of an old danger-threatenng event; anxiety serves the purpose of self-preservation as being the signal of the presence of a new danger . . . (and) . . . is undeniably related to expectation; one feels anxious less something occur." In existential analysis, a stronger and more inclusive interpretation of the concept is presented. Anxiety is a threat to Dasein (i.e., "being-there" — pointing out that man is there, has a distinctive there in his own being which is a "particular point in time as well as space of (his) existence at (any) given momment.") This anxety "is the experience of the threat of immanent non-being; . . . an experience of threat which carries both anguish and dread, indeed the most painful and basic threat which any being can suffer, for it is the threat of loss of existence itself."

Of course, it might be pointed out that this was the statement of a single scientist — though, admittedly, one of key position — and in no way represents the opinion of the rest of the scientific community. This we must grant. But, how many other space scientists are harboring many of the same feelings? Might there be others equally or more anxious? And at the root of this anxiety isn't their quite obviously a prevading sense of moral guilt, expressing tension between the ego and the superego? And since the latter, the superego, "stands in an especially intimate connection with the id" which contains everything that is inherited, fixed in the constitution and is defined as a "chaotic cauldron of seething excitement", cut off from the external world and unconscious — since this relationship exists, we may necessarily have to end the investigation there. When dealing with the unconscious, we can never really make defnitive statements which are veridical dicta. We end up on trembling ground dealing with mere verisimilitudes, appearances of truth. Thus we have a paradoxical situation of tri angular tension between the id, the ego and the superego.

But we do have the alternative of going to the situation itself and observing it. We may try to understand what is happening to us. And we do, we are confronted with an unbelievably confused and disordered world which appears to have lost its collective mind. We are now all potential murderers and everything is obviously preparing us for the act itself. We are blowing bombs up on the desert, on the sea and lately in outerspace. Our propaganda is actually conditioning us for an inevitable war with Russia. Soon, there will be no way out of it. We are spending $40 billion each year on defense (the amount of money that 200,000 average men make in a lifetime). Naturally, we must defend ourselves, but isn't this getting ridiculous? Where will it stop? Are we acting like rational animals? It appears not; we are more like demoniacal animals, hell-bent for the radioactive dust pile at the bottom of a universal incinerator. It's just a matter of who is going to light the match and touch it off.

Here we are talking of how to control outer space when we can't even control our own households or get along with our neighbors. While we are reaching for the moon as the child does, thinking that he can grasp it, the failure of our civilization in the Atomic Age may have already begun its revenge. The keynote explosions that ushered in this age on August 16 and October 8, 1945 still resound in our ears, especially in the ears of us Americans. We conceived of the bomb; we built it; and we dropped it — twice. And we cannot plead, as did Joseph K. in Kafka's The Trial, of being accused and condenmed without knowing for what; our common sense of guilt knows well the terms of the indictment and the nature of our crime. Ironically enough, the crime was committed against ourselves. So while we dance merrily around the mulberry tree whose berries, if we look closely, are hydrogen bombs, some of us may well remember the voice heard in one of Strindberg's plays, saying, "What a pity about man!"

A Book

Perhaps the editor is partial toward journalists, but even admitting this professional bias, the editor would like to recommend Joseph and Stewart Alsop's "The Reporter's Trade" as one of the most significant contributions to the non-fiction field in the past several years.

The editor is surely not Republican and Conservative as the Alsops describe themselves, but he is able to recognize that the Alsops along with James Reston of The New York Times are perhaps the best newsmen currently practicing the art.

In their 368-page volume they give a fairly clear record of the past twelve years, interpreting the significance of the events that have occurred both by means of their past columns and by interpolated commentary. They are frank about their errors, and candidly proud about their successes.

One of their successes so clearly outlined in the book is their ability to focus on two of the three crucial factors that are operative in the world today. The first of these is the obvious growth of Communist power in the world and the changes and alterations in the character of that power.

The second major actor is the rapid growth of technology that has radically altered the conception of the world of thinking men and in its wake has created many new problems which men are having difficulty solving. Clearly, on this issue their Republican partisanship has been submerged, for they are vastly more critical of the Eisenhower administration in this regard than they are of any previous administration.

The major factor or factors left out - not totally excluded, but effectively sublimated - is the pressing world wide problem of individual rights and perhaps equally important, the growing role of state planning in creating an attitude towards man

The Alsops are crystal clear on what could certainly be the most important issue in domestic America - the right of the public to be informed. Their thesis is simple. It begins by saying that without information the public is incapable of acting rightly or wrongly, and administrative leaders who draw their mandate from the public are incapable of acting totally. If the public is informed, the public may mandate wrongly, but if the public is informed, and the proper leadership applied, the public will doubtless rise up to the present day challenge, even if it means inconveniencing themselves. This has special pertience since neither the Gaither Report nor the Killian Report have ever been released for public consumption, and most of the public is blissfully unaware that America has no longer the leadership in major defense areas.

The book has pertinence to the campus too, for it clearly dispels any ideas that the range of student inquiry whether here in The Daily Tar Heel or in the upper echelons of student government should be limited to student problems. One of the soundest messages of the book is that this world is growing smaller every day and the event that occurs in Iraq has great bearing on what happens in Chapel Hill. There are enough impediments to freedom of access to information, as these reporters are quick to point out, without having self-imposed ones here to bar creative and constructive thought.

The book as a journal of record focuses clearly on the United States' somewhat dizzying descent from power in the last twelve years. Despite the two reporters' protestations of optimism, and clearly in some individual columns they were optimistic, the overall record reads almost like the beginning of a funeral oration. It is the unfortunate state of modern America — today's America — that this gloomy view and the horrifying trend of the past twelve years happen to be the unvarnished truth. Both these two fine reporters and the editor sincerely wish it were not so.

So, if you are unafraid of looking a myriad of cold, hard, unpleasant realities in the face, the book is available, and you should be at the head of the line to buy it. And if your brother happens to a have a birthday soon, buy an extra copy. He might learn something too.

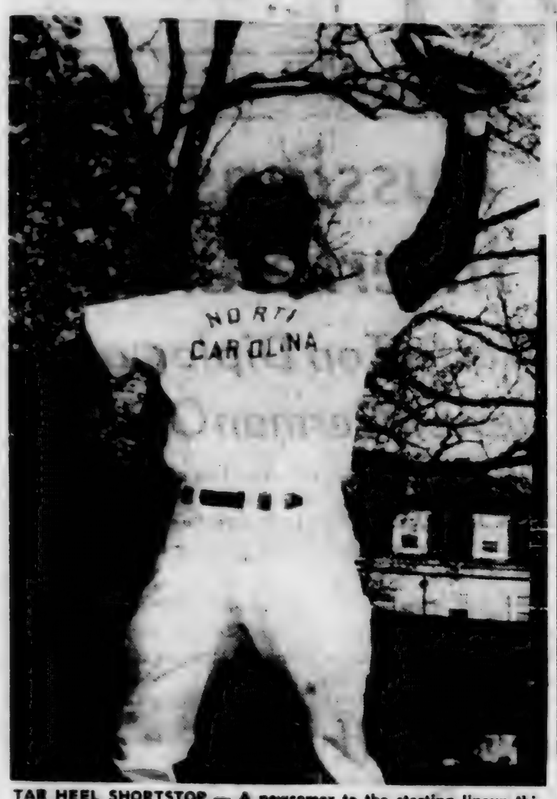
Tar Heels Seek To Bounce Back Against Ithaca Here Today



TAR HEEL SHORTSTOP — A newcomer to the starting lineup this season, shortstop Harold Workman has stamped himself as a man to watch. Workman played well on the Florida trip and it was his home run in the eighth that beat Connecticutt here last week.

Hammett On Mound; Game Set For 3

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's varsity baseball squad will seek to avenge its first loss of the young season here today when it battles Ithaca College at 3 in Emerson Stadium.

The Tar Heels, back from a highly successful trip to Florida, are owners of a fine 4-1 season mark. Having beaten Dartmouth and Connecticut before departing, the Heels ran over Florida State 11-9 and edged Florida 8-7 before losing their first game of the season to Illinois, 11-3.

Ben Hammett got the win over Florida State while Wayne Young received credit for the Florida victory. Ben Harding was tagged for the loss against Illinois.

Hammett To Start

Hammett is the scheduled starter for today's contest with Ithaca. He may share mound duties with Young.

Sickness and injuries may cramp the Tar Heels, as no less than four starters are sidelined for various reasons. First baseman Vaughn Bryson, right fielder John Burgwyn, third baseman Tommy Camp and catcher Al Baldwin are all in the infirmary with viruses.

The Tar Heels will have their work cut out for them today as they face one of the toughest college baseball teams in the nation. Last year the Ithaca Bombers piled up a 13-2 record and stood at 11-4 the year before.

Thriller Last Year

These same two teams provided a thriller here last year, with Carolina winning 2-1 in the last of the ninth. Coach Bucky Freeman has had but one losing season in his 24 years at Ithaca. In the last 10 years the Bombers have posted an 82 per cent winning record. Big league pitcher and manager Eddie Sawyer is a grad of this small baseball powerhouse.

After five games, John Burgwyn leads Carolina hitters with a .563 mark. He is trailed by Russ Hollers (.500), Tommy Saintsing (.400) and Ben Hammett (.400). These early averages can be a bit misleading, however, because of the small number of at bats.

Coach Walter Rabb seemed well satisfied with the Florida trip, adding that his team got three good workouts from three good teams. After today's game, the Tar Heels meet East Carolina Friday, then begins the long ACC grind toward the pennant in May.

Golfers Face Cornell Today

Carolina's varsity golfers go after their second win in as many outings here today when they take on Cornell of the Ivy League on Finley Golf Course.

The Tar Heels opened their season with an impressive win over highly-regarded Indiana before vacation. The Heels won every single match en route to a 24-3 slaughter.

McKee is the only returning letterman from last year's ACC champion team, and except for him every one of the Carolina starters saw their first varsity action against Indiana.

The match is scheduled for 1:30 on the University owned Finley Golf Course here in Chapel Hill.

Stanley, Frosh Star In Florida

Jack-of-all-trades Ray Stanley and five determined freshmen performed to near perfection and brought back three first place trophies from Saturday's 16th Annual Florida Relays at Gainesville.

Stanley, who spends the winter bouncing basketballs for Frank McGuire, was all by himself as Carolina's outstanding individual performer winning the broad jump with a leap of 22' 6¼", finishing fourth in the javelin with 195' 3½", and tying for third in the high jump with 5' 10". This amazing performance netted him 6.37 points.

But it was the five freshmen—Dave Peltz, Dennis Rash, Ward Purrington, Scott Brent, and Tam Lefler—who really stole the show. Forced to pay their own way for the trip and undaunted by the glamor off it all, the Tar Babies entered two events and won them both. Rash (440), Purrington (220), Lefler (220), and Peltz (880) ran in the freshman-junior college division of the sprint medley relay and finished first with a 3:34.6, just a tenth of a second off the meet record. Auburn, Alabama, and LSU were among the teams that trailed them.

Then, one hour later, the mile relay team of Purrington, Rash, Brent, and Peltz breezed to another victory and this time cracked the record in doing so with a 3:24.9. Florida State, Alabama, and LSU were the three other teams that placed, in that order.

Other varsity places in the Relays in addition to Stanley's were Wayne Bishop's third in the two mile; a second by the sprint medley relay team of John Sylvester (440), Bob Eubanks (220), Charlie Sowers (220), and Dave Scurlock (880); and a third by the two mile relay team of Bob Foxworth, Bing Somers, Cowles Llipfert, and Scurlock.

Amazons Edge Faculty 199-1

By RUSS HAMILTON

(This is an April Fool's article, no harm meant, please be kind—we have a lousy lawyer.)

Alderman's power-packed Amazons, led by 7' 2" Willa (the Killah) Chamberlain, poured on the steam here yesterday to defeat the Faculty Phonies 199-1 before a screaming capacity crowd of 37 in Woollen Gym.

Alderman's Chamberlain led the Amazon attack with 102 points and 57 rebounds. She was closely followed by Zelda Dosnofski with 49 and Sally Sigafoos with 35.

The Faculty was led by Katherine Carmichael who dumped in one point to become high scorer. Bill Aycock trailed with -2 points.

The Amazons jumped off to a quick 58-0 lead in the first minute of play and from there on it was practically no contest. The story could have been different, however, if the Faculty's high-scoring Bill Aycock hadn't fouled out with 30 minutes to go in the first half. Aycock is currently averaging a brilliant -3.1 points per contest.

The defensive star for the Amazons was amazing 3 feet 1 inch I. M. Reachinup. Defensive standouts for the faculty were Ray (the Ripper) Jefferies, Bill (the Bomb) Friday, and Fred (the Friar) Weaver.

The Amazons, who copped their first victory in a row with the win, open a three-day stand against the Boston Celtics in exhibition contests today. They have previously defeated the Celts 99-44 and 7-4 in Boston.

Amos Stake, coach of the Amazons, gave forth with these words of wisdom, "My girls are undoubtably the best team on campus, in the state, yea; perhaps in the entire nation. Chamberlain has already been offered pro contracts from 573 teams, but says she will stick with us. The only thing we have against playing here on campus is the tremendous screaming crowds that fill Woollen Gym . . . it's huge capacity (37 people and 2 dogs) just puts too much pressure on my team. Stake has a lifetime coaching record of 23,444 wins and 23,445 losses in collegiate circles. He came here from Toads Wart Tech in southern Tia Juana.

Edwards Tells Reasons For Backing Candidates

Rudy Edwards, former IDC president, gave some of the reasons why student leaders have pledged their support to Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel as co-editors of The Daily Tar Heel.

"Such people as Don Furtado, Ralph Cummings, Dick Robinson, Ann Harvey, Lucy Posgate, Sue Ballantine, Bob Carter and Otto Funderburk are just a few of the students who have endorsed O'Tuel and Shumate," Edwards commented Tuesday.

This team has gained wide support, he said, because "Ron and Harold bring into the editorship race the most diversified combined newspaper experience of any candidates who have run for The Daily Tar Heel in the four years I have been on campus."

He said that they had experience in all phases of newspaper work, and they thoroughly understand the operations of The Daily Tar Heel and have ideas as to how the paper can operate more effectively.

Shumate and O'Tuel plan to put more emphasis on campus news and events such as intra-mural and different campus organizations. "This is important in bringing the Daily Tar Heel back to the students," he said.

"Harold and Ron possess a maturity of outlook and an objective impartiality that had been missing before their entrance into the race," Edwards stated.

He also pointed out that students who have had a chance to talk to the candidates for co-editors have been impressed by the mature qualities.

Edwards noted that the Student Party endorsed Shumate and O'Tuel as the "most capable and competent candidate for The Daily Tar Heel editors."

IDC Elects Funderburk President

Otto Funderburk is the new president of the Interdormitory Council. He and five other new officers were elected at a meeting of the IDC March 25.

The other officers are as follows: Jim Scott, vice president; Dave Alexander, secretary; Phil Edwards, treasurer; Jerry Morgan, court chairman, and Jerry Chichester, court clerk.

Funderburk, Scott and Alexander were elected by acclamation.

A junior from Spray, Funderburk has served as vice president and president of Manly Dormitory, as chairman of the IDC Court this year and in Student Legislature. He has been a member of Student Party and was recently named into the IDC Honorary Society.

Also at the March 25 meeting, the IDC passed by a 16 to 14 vote the new penalties for the IDC Court and Dormitory Council Courts.

These include (1) fines from $2 to $10, (2) removal from all dorms for one semester, (3) removal from all dorms for one semester with recommendation never to be readmitted to University residence halls and (4) suspension from school.

In addition, letters will be sent to parents on disciplinary measures taken.

Jim Crownover (SP) spoke to the body on a bill he has before Legislature on buying a television set for the infirmary out of the TV repair fund. The Council voted that half the money come from this fund.

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board, spoke on elections procedures.

Concert To Start Band Tour

The UNC Concert Band will inaugurate its spring tour with a concert in Hill Hall Tuesday, April 7 at 8 p.m.

Under the direction of Bandmaster Herbert Fred, the 55-piece ensemble will perform in Chapel Hill as part of the regular Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the University's Music Department.

On Wednesday, April 8, the group will begin a three-day tour which will take them throughout the western part of North Carolina with stops in Gastonia, Shelby, Concord and Asheville.

Fred's duties as conductor will be shared by assistants Calvin Humber and Earl Gates, both graduate students in music at the University. Humber will conduct "Ballet for Young Americans" by Ralph Herman, and Gates will direct "Pieces of Eight" by Jenkins-Neff.

The remainder of the program under the baton of director Fred will include the following works: "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor" by J. S. Bach; "La Boutique Fantasque" by Rossini-Respighi; "Suite Espagnole" by Lacme; "Finale" from Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovich; and "His Honor March" by Fillmore.

The UNC Concert Band is composed entirely of students from the University, most of whom also participate in the Marching Band and the UNC Wind Ensemble. These instrumentalists are particularly busy during the football season and again in the spring when they can be heard in concerts in Hill Hall, at the Davie Poplar on the campus and in Kenan Stadium for graduation exercises.

GOING' IN CIRCLES — Ed Crow seems all wrapped up in his work. He's getting ready for the Student Art Show, to be sponsored by the Presbyterian student center April 5-8. All entries should be submitted to the Presbyterian Church office, second floor of the Y, by April 3.

U. S. Cautions Russians Against Flight Interference

West's Top Diplomats Review German Outlook

WASHINGTON —(AP)—The United States cautioned Russia today against interfering with allied flights to West Berlin. It took this action as Western foreign ministers met to draft concrete proposals aimed at easing international tensions over Germany's future.

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter Jr. reviewed the German outlook with Britain's Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd and French Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville.

They arranged to call West German Foreign Minister Heinrich Von Brentano into their State Department conference room to join in the strategy talks later.

The Foreign policy chief considered a wide range of proposals they hope to make to Russia, including a federation plan for merging Western and Communist Eastern Germany eventually into a single democratic nation.

This allied plan would be linked to step-by-step disarmament measures aimed at meeting Russia's contention tat a united Germany might attack its neighbors.

As the two-day conference got underway, the State Department strongly protested against the action of three Soviet fighters in buzzing a U. S. Air Force supply plane flying in the air corridor to West Berlin last Friday.

The Soviet fighters were reported to have maneuvered dangerously close to the American plane, a Turbojet C130 which was flying at an altitude of nearly 25,000 feet.

The Soviets in a protest lodged in Berlin contended the flight violated an agreement nto to fly higher than 10,000 feet in the air corridors.

The State Department rejected the Soviet demand that future flights be limited to a 10,000-foot height. No such agreement exists, a spokesman said. Flights such as those by the C130 wil fly as high as is necessary to insure their most economical operation, press officer Lincoln White told a news conference. The normal operating level of a C130 is around 25,000 feet.

A top flight panel of diplomatic advisers backed up Herter in his initial meeting with British, French and West German foreign ministers.

UP FOR APPROVAL

Half Price Date Ducats

Don Furtado, student body president, and Wayne Bishop, CAA president, met with Athletic Director Chuck Erickson to discuss date tickets at football games, last Wednesday.

They decided to ask for date tickets at half price for the South Carolina game Oct. 10 (Band Day and Dad's Day) and the Tennessee game Oct. 31 (Homecoming).

They will also ask for half price tickets for all students and faculty for the Duke game in Durham Nov. 21.

These results are subject to the approval of the Athletic Council.

"This tentative set-up is in keeping with the recommendation of the two CAA presidential candidates, as well as Wayne Bishop and myself," Furtado said.

He said that date tickets for Clemson were not requested because the game is only two days after the opening of school and it would be impossible to set up proper ticket distributing facilities far enough ahead of time.

Tickets were not requested for the State game. Furtado said this was because it is Consolidated University Day and students from Woman's College and State will be here, causing a seating problem.

"Nothing has been decided about the Virginia game thus far," said Furtado, "but date tickets may be requested for this game next year. This will depend largely on the response of the students to the available tickets for other games."

Young Campaign Staff Grows In Editor Race

Jey Deifell, freshman class president, and Jo Carpenter, outstanding dorm woman of 1958, are two new members of Davis Young's campaign staff in his race for editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

In a statement issued Tuesday Deifell said, "I urge as many students as possible to get in touch with Student Party Chairman John Brooks and ask him to make available Young's complete journalistic record which he now has.

"Everything Young has written, both the good and bad, is now in the possession of Brooks. I hope that many people will look up Brooks in 32 Old East or phone him at 8-9162."

Deifell said he believes it is most significant that Young made this information available.

Young issued a standing challenge to his two opponents, Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel, to make public their own journalistic records.

He said, "I think that by reviewing these and checking closely the backgrounds and experience of the candidates involved, the voters will be able to make a wise decision on April 7."

Young said he would be willing to discuss or debate with his opponents at any time at any place the issues confronting the paper and the campus, as he wants to bring the campaign down to the level of issues.

He concluded, "I am looking forward to the Big Five rally on Friday night. At this time, students will have a chance to hear all of the major candidates and to make a wise selection."

Bingham Gives Views On Treasurer's Post

"A wide range of activities and a working knowledge of economic factors dealing with extensive financial operations are important prerequisites for the job of treasurer," said Bob Bingham, University Party candidate for treasurer of the student body.

Bingam said Tuesday he believes his varied background in the operation of tourist attractions and related businesses, as well as his participation in various extra-curricular activities, qualified him for treasurer.

The UP candidate has worked for the Southern Appalachian Historical Association in its production of the outdoor drama, "Horn in the West," for the past six seasons and has been connected with the show on the theatrical and the management levels.

Last summer he was also engaged in public relations and promotion for historic "Tweetsie" Railroad in Blowing Rock and expects to head that department this summer.

Both these tourist attractions are significant factors in the economic life of Watauga County and western North Carolina. "Tweetsie" is a half-million dollar project. The outdoor drama represents the direct or indirect expenditure of $335,000 per year to Boone and the county.

A 20-year-old rising senior, Bingham is largely financing his own education. He has worked in Lenoir Hall and did laboratory work last year in the Botany Department.

He was a member of the freshman wrestling team and was intramural mat champion in the dormitory division for two years. He is currently advisor to a youth group at the University Methodist Church, a post he has held for three years.

John Minter, UP chairman, said Bingham is regarded as a tireless worker by his fellow students and has conducted an aggressive campaign for the treasurer's post.

Minter commented that Bingham was selected to represent the University Party because of his "unusual integrity." He said the UP was pleased with the manner in which Bingham "had got down to business in learning the duties and responsibilities of the job."

SAVE Your Packages

Save your old cigarette packages!

The makers of Philip Morris, Marlboro and Parliament will give a free stereophonic set to the fraternity or sorority which save the greatest number of these three brands of cigarettes.

The contest is now underway and will continue through May. The deadline date for turning in packages will be announced later. Harvey Salz, student representative, will collect the cigarette packages in May.

The stereophonic set will be on display in Y Court.

Last year the Tri Delts won a Hi-fi set which was given in a similar contest.

WHAT WAS THERE —

Under Your Door

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Good morning Carolina Gentlemen!

Did you find a letter under your door this morning?

. . . A letter from the Men's Orientation Committee, maybe?

Anyway, letters were slipped under the room doors of the men's dorms this morning from the Men's orientation Committee urging all male students to apply for orientation counselers.

David Parker, orientation chairman, stated that the committee wanted more applicants.

Application blanks may be found in the Y, Reserevd Reading Room of the Library and the Information Office of Graham Memorial.

The deadline for returning applications is Thursday at 7 p.m. in 268 Venable Hall.

The quiz will be given at 7:30 p.m. also in 268 Venable Hall.

Parker said that applicants should read over last years orientation manual found in the Y, Reserved Reading Room of the Library, and the Information Office of Graham Memorial.

Playmakers To Give 'Mrs. McThing' Soon

The Carolina Playmakers will present Mary Chase's recent Broadway success, "Mrs. McThing," in The Playmakers Theatre April 8-12 at 8:30 p.m.

Featured in the cast of this comedy of witchcraft are Webb Caye of Garden City, N. Y., and Clyde Milner of Chapel Hill.

Milner, a youngster from Estes Hill Elementary School in Chapel Hill, plays the role of Howie, created by Brandon de Wilde on the Broadway stage. Milner is no stranger to the theatre, having appeared in the Playmakers opening production of "Oklahoma!"

He has studied drama with The Lamont School of Drama for the past five years, playing leading roles in "The Emperor's New Clothes" and "The Peddler of Hearts." He appeared on WTVD-TV, Durham, in a commercial series with Ty Boyd, local announcer. Milner's father is Charles Milner, director of the UNC Extension Division.

Webb Caye appears in "Mrs. McThing" as Poison Eddie Schellenbach. Caye is a graduate student in the English Department. He has played leading roles with the drama group of Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., and with the Litchfield (Connecticut) Summer Theatre, appearing in "Othello," "All My Sons," "Life With Father" and "The Male Animal."

Tickets for "Mrs. McThing" are now available at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved for $1.50.

Shumate, O'Tuel Withdraw From Editor Race

Spring Vote Returns To Be Counted Apr. 8

Ballots in the April 7 election will not be counted that night but will be held over for counting Wednesday, April 8.

The change in the ballot counting procedure was decided by the Elections Board at a meting Tuesday afternoon.

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Board, said Tuesday that ballots will be sorted and prepared for counting the night of April 7.

He said the Board decided to wait for the actual counting for these reasons:

(1) The counting load will be heavier than in the fall elections after which the ballots were not all counted until early the next morning.

(2) Hasty counting and sorting has resulted in errors.

(3) The polls will remain open in some dorms and town stations until 7 p.m., an hour later than for previous elections.

(4) The handling of Interdormitory Council ballots by the Elections Board will complicate the sorting procedures and consume much extra time.

(5) The several different ballots which have to be used in the election will be compiled into one main set of ballots which will have to be separated for counting.

(6) The lists of voters in the dorms and the cards which are filled out by those voting in town districts will have to be checked with the number of ballots cast in each respective district.

Patterson said the Elections Board hopes to assure correct voting procedures at the polls though sacrificing speed in counting the ballots a day late.

Counselor Applications Due Today

Today is the last chance for Carolina men to apply to be orientation counselors, according to David Parker, Orientation chairman. The deadline for returning applications is 7 p.m. today in 208 Venable.

Blanks may be obtained at the YMCA, the reserve reading room of the Library and the Information Desk at Graham Memorial. Study manuals will also be found at the same places.

The test, Covering Campus life, will be given to all applicants today at 7 p.m., also in 208 Venable.

Parker stated that approximately 170 counselors will be needed and he urged all interested students to return the completed application forms as soon as possible today.

Tri-Delt Set To Give Coed Scholarship

The Tri-Delt sorority each year awards scholarships to deserving UNC women students. The total amount of these scholarships will be approximately $400.

This program is an international service, irrespective of sorority affiliation. Coeds have been urged to send in application blanks if they wish to be eligible to receive one of these scholarships.

Application blanks may be obtained from the dean of women's office and must be turned in to the same office by Tuesday, April 7.

Judges of the applicants will be Miss Isabelle MacLeod, Dean Katherine Carmichael, Mrs. Robert M. Miller, alumnae adviser; Mary Margaret Durham, Tri Delt president; Ruth D. Parderson and Pat Page, service projects chairmen.

Smith Outlines Campus And Town Cooperation

Norman B. Smith, Student Party candidate for president of the student body, stated Wednesday that new problems and new challenges are thrust upon the student government now because of the growth of the University and Chapel Hill.

Smith stated that the student associate director on the Chapel Hill Merchants Association was an "encouraging" service to unite the town and the students.

In the next year the activities of the associate director and the students working with him must be expanded to three fields, Smith reported.

He outlined the three fields as follows: "(1) a realistic investigation of charges of exhorbinant prices to students in Chapel Hill and make recommendations to the Merchants Association, reminding that body what an important factor 7,500 students are in the local economy, (2) continued effort by bad check notification and other means to give the merchants more confidence in student credit, (3) establishment of a student employment agency to be active especially in the fall in placing students in local jobs.

Smith also emphasized the need of student government to cooperate with Chapel Hill and University planning authorities, not only to study placement and facilities of buildings on campus, but to investigate and make recommendations on such projects as the new fraternity courts which will be built, traffic control and new parking lots.

"In recognition of the geographic expanse of our campus, I am especially interested in seeing 10 minute parking areas for students in classroom building parking lots," Smith said.

"This would be very convenient for students who live far away from the central part of campus and want to stop briefly to see an instructor, submit a paper, get a book, etc."

The SP candidate also said that outdoor recreation and picnic facilities should be considered. "I will do

Student Legislature Reviews Budget Approval Bill Tonight

The Student Legislature will consider approval of the 1959-60 student government budget tonight.

The solons will meet at 7:30 in Phi Hall, 4th floor, Old East.

A bill for approval was presented last session by Charlie Gray (UP), student body treasurer.

Also on the agenda will be a bill, introduced by Ann Harvey (UP), to change the method of selecting jurors for the trying of Honor Council cases.

If the method is approved, a committee will be selected from the Honor System Commission to submit its system for the selection of jurors to the Legislature for approval.

Jury applicants will sign written forms, to be kept in the student government office, and their names will be automatically placed on the list for jury duty for the duration of their stay at UNC. A juror may withdraw with a written statement presented to the attorney general.

At present, jurors are selected by interviews with applicants.

Jim Crownover (SP) presented a resolution last session to declare student government policy in the area of enforcement of the drinking rule.

If sanctioned tonight, the legislators will declare that any display of ungentlemanly conduct due to excessive drinking is a direct violation of the Campus Code.

As such, subsidiary organizations and officers will be instructed to enforce the drinking rules, the Orientation Committee will be directed to emphasize the above through presentation of the Campus Code and Honor Code, initial presentation will be publicized through dorm and chapter and pledge meetings and The Daily Tar Heel, and the problem will be emphasized throughout the year.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled today in Graham Memorial include the following:

Publications Board, 2-4 p.m., Grail Room; Elections Board, 4-6 p.m., Grail Room; UP Caucus, 6:30-7:30 p.m., Grail Room; U. P. Caucus, Roland Parker No. 1; SP Caucus, 6:30-7:30 p.m., Roland Parker No. 1; Senior Class Gift Committee, 5-6 p.m., Roland Parker No. 3; SP Advisory Board, 1:45-3 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Finance Committee 3-6 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Dance lessons, 7-9 p.m., Rendezvous Room.

Jim Crownover Pledges To Work For Students

"The many problems of our campus are all to obvious," said Jim Crownover Wednesday.

Crownover, Student Party candidate for vice president of the student body, went on to say that these problems run from the need for a student union to a codification of judicial and financial policies.

"I can only promise that I will apply myself to the solution of these problems and the betterment of the student community with the same energy and interest that I have had in the past," he said.

Crownover's student government experience includes dormitory president and manager, service on 10 executive committees and in Student Legislature and majority floorleader of Legislature.

"I would like to call to your attention," the candidate said, "several of the problems which I have worked on during my three years here and point out to you the importance of being well-acquainted with the administration in solving these problems.

"I have served either as a member or chairman of committees concerned with the following:

"1. Procurement of the Avery Canteen.

"2. Formulation of a more liberal and realistic interpretation of the drinking rule.

"3. Extension of free telephone service to the Library.

"4. Securing of Hear-Hear phone booths for the dorms.

"5. Procurement of more vending machines for the dorms.

"6. Purchase of a TV set for the Student Infirmary.

"7. Construction of a self-service laundromat on campus.

"8. Fairer presentation of student interest in athletic matters, and several others.

"One of the more informal, but important, duties of the vice president is to serve as student government liason with the South Building administrators. I have worked closely in the solving of the previously stated problems with the business manager, director of operations, director of the University Book Stores, dean of student affairs, director of athletics, University physician and dean of women."

Crownover asserted, "If elected, I pledge to you that I will continue to work hard and try to represent the best interests of each of you in your student government. I urge that you continue to ask questions and offer suggestions—they are needed!"

David Grigg Opposes Deferred Rushing

David Grigg, University Party candidate for vice president of the student body, said he was opposed to deferred rush and the combination of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils in a statement released Wednesday.

Grigg commented that he was opposed to deferred rush because of financial reasons primarily and he was opposed to a combining of the two councils "mainly because of the uncomfortable situation in which many of our women students feel they would be placed."

The candidate said he was in favor of a study of all phases of the Honor System. He is also urging a study of student finances to assure that the money is being spent to the benefit of the most possible students.

Grigg also said he believes the only permanent answer to the lack of social facilities in the men's and women's dorms is a new and adequate student union.

In commenting on the role of student government, he said, "Student government should concern itself with all of student activity. It should especially be continually seeking ways to lessen the financial burden on the students; it should constantly study such things as dorm rent, UNC Laundry, UNC Book Exchange and Lenoir Hall."

He stated his overall aim is "to give the entire campus my time and energy toward a progressive and realistic program in student government — one which will be close to the students and will serve their best interests."

In discussing the qualifications for the position he is seeking, Grigg said, "I believe the major requirement for the vice president of the student body is to have not only legislative experience, but experience in a wide range of student activity.

"Because he presides over Student Legislature, which deals with practically all student organizations at one time or other, I feel this general knowledge is essential to cary out his duties adequately."

Grigg mentioned that he has served in all three branches of student government. He has been sergeant-at-arms and a member of the Finance Committee in Legislature and currently serves on the Budget Committee.

He has also served on the attorney general's staff and is now a member of the Symposium General Committee.

Grigg said he was able to understand both dormitory and fraternity problems since he had lived in a dorm for two years and is a member of a fraternity.

Gray Cites Economic Strain In Opposing Deferred Rush

Two controversial issues pertaining to UNC fraternities were discussed by Charlie Gray, University Party candidate for president of the student body, in a statement Wednesday.

The two problems he mentioned were deferred rush and discriminatory clauses in fraternity charters. Gray is opposed to both deferred rush and discriminatory clauses, but he said the inclusion or elimination of the clauses should be left for decision by each fraternity.

Deferred rush, Gray said, would create three problems and possibly eliminate one problem. The three new problems are financial difficulties, dirty rush and a possible decrease in the number of fraternities, he said.

"The economic strain on fraternities would be terrific during a transition period. Many houses are in poor financial condition at the present time and unless these houses can secure additional funds, many surely will have to drop off campus," Gray said.

He estimated the financial loss to most houses would be between $100,000 to $150,000.

Dirty rush would be a real problem, Gray said, for both the IFC and freshmen. The freshmen would lose study time, and a silence period for a long length of time would be "almost ridiculous," he said.

The third problem created by deferred rush, referred to by Gray, "would be that the rich would get richer and the poor, poorer."

He explained that "A fraternity that was attempting to improve its rating would almost have an impossible task, for the outstanding fraternities would receive the outstanding pledges."

Gray admitted that deferred rush might improve a freshman's academic adjustments, but "I think a compromise would be much more desirable than forcing deferred rush on the fraternities."

Gray called for a trial period in which fraternities could prove they can be helpful to incoming students. If this fails, he said, deferred rush might be feasible.

If the Faculty Committee on Fraternities makes a report for deferred rush, Gray said he would continue to fight it "until all hope is lost." Then he would work to help assure the continued extistence of fraternities. He mentioned that he had been working on a plan to help fraternities if deferred rush comes, but would not release details of his plan.

Outing Club Plans Spring Regatta

Carolina's newly formed Outing Club will lay plans for their Spring Regatta at their meeting today at 7 p.m. in 301B Woollen.

The Regatta will be held at Lake Wheeler in Raleigh and is sponsored by the Outing Club in conjunction with the Intramural Offices of UNC and State.

A calender of events for the rest of the semester will be released at the meeting and the fishing contest which began on March 27 and will last until May 16 will be discussed.

Any interested student, including coeds, has been invited to become a member of the club by attending the meeting.

UNC FLOWERS — Maybe Eleanor Smith, left, is cautioning her companion Judith Bunn not to pick the flowers. The girls, both students, are obviously enjoying the beauty of the first signs of spring in the Coker Arboretum on the campus, regardless of what they are discussing. Nevertheless, the plants are there for the enjoyment of all and are not to be picked or removed, according to C. Ritchie Bell, director of the Arboretum. He invited visitors to the Arboretum, one of the world's show places of horticultural excellence, and emphasizes that many of the 34 different varieties of daffodils are now at the height of freshness and beauty. Glee Club To Appear In Azalea Festival

By BEN TAYLOR

The UNC Men's Glee Club left by bus this morning on a four-day tour which will feature them as the basic singing group for Wilmington's Azalea Festival.

The annual spring tour will take the 40-voiced choir on a quick swing through the Wilmington area and Coker College in Hartsville, S. C. With the exception of today, the entire tour will center around the festivities of the Azalea Festival in the port city of Wilmington.

The club's first stop will be made at Sanford, where they will perform before the assembly audience of the Sanford High School. From there they will travel to Hartsville, S. C., and perform in a joint formal concert with the Coker College Glee Club. A dance will be held afterward.

Friday morning the Glee Club will head north to Wilmington, where they will stay until Sunday afternoon. A practice will be held in Wilmington at 2 p.m. Friday afternoon, followed by supper and the pageant spectacle that night.

The Glee Club will lead the expected audience of 8,500 in singing the national anthem, "Dixie," and "Carolina In the Morning." After an introductory speech by toastmaster Ronald Regan, the Glee Club will give a 15 minute concert of college songs, including "There is Nothing Like A Dame," "Halls of Ivy," Gaudeamus Igitur," Carolina Loyalty Song," and the UNC alma mater, "Hark The Sound!"

Saturday, the Glee Club will be free to watch the spectacle of the 12th annual Azalea Festival Parade that afternoon. Several of the Glee Club members will act as escorts for various college queens riding floats. That night they will again open and close the Festival's variety program.

Sunday morning they will sing before the congregation of the First Baptist Church in Wilmington in a concert of religious numbers. "God Ever Glorious," "Thanks Be To Thee" and "O Brother Man" will be some of the songs sung before the Baptist body.

After dinner at the church, the club will return to Chapel Hill.

Ugly Man Contest Begins

Candidates for UMOC, the Ugliest Man on Campus, are being chosen by campus dormitories, fraternities and organizations this week.

Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, is sponsoring the contest which will be held from April 13 to the 18.

The April 9 deadline for applications has been cited by newly elected APO president, Randal Ethridge. "We hope that the dormitories, fraternities, and other organiaztions that wish to sponsor a contestant will turn in their applications soon if they have not already done so," Ethridge said.

Each organization wishing to sponsor a candidate must submit three 5x7-inch prints of his picture and turn in or mail an application to the APO office, basement of Smith Drmitory. The office is open from 1 to 4 p.m. daily.

The photographs may be obtained for approximately $2.50 from the Photo Lab or may be made elsewhere.

The contest is held annually at many universities and a plaque designed by L. G. Balfour and Co. will be presented to the winning contestant by Ethridge at a meeting of the winner's sponsoring organization.

The contest will be decided through polls maintained at Y Court, the Pine Room and the Scuttlebutt. Any student may vote for his choice for "UMOC" as many times as he chooses on the basis of a penny a vote.

Refund Set For Defunct Publication

Harken students! A wrong has been righted. Justice has triumphed. Refunds will be made to academic individuals who trustingly invested their paltry fortunes in the Ram and Ewe last year.

Students who subscribed to the "kaput" Ram and Ewe at the first of the year will be refunded 70 cents if they will but present themselves to the Student Activities Fund office on the second floor of Graham Memorial before April 10.

Co-Candidates State Thanks For Support

Davis Young Remains In Race Unopposed

Ron Shumate and Harold O'Tuel announced their withdrawal from the race for Daily Tar Heel editorship.

In a statement released yesterday the co-editor candidates cited "differences in our views which could not have been foreseen before we entered the race," as the cause of their withdrawal.

"The decision was not an easy one to make — nor was it a hasty one," the candidates continued, "but we feel — and certainly hope — it was a wise one."

They added, "Our decision comes with much regret, not only for ourselves, but for those who so faithfully stood behind us and worked for us."

"We wish to sincerely apologize to everyone who supported us — whether it was actively or passively." The pair continued. "We fully realize there are many who gave time and effort to our cause that they really could not afford."

O'Tuel and Shumate went on to congratulate Davis Young, currently unopposed for the editorship, but pointed out that there were still "many differences" in point of view and management of the paper that exist between the co-editor candidates and Young.

They pledged their help to assist Young in putting out a representative Daily Tar Heel during the coming year.

Young, in commenting on the withdrawal, said, "For many reasons, I sincerely regret that Ron and Harold have found it impossible to stay in the race."

He added, "There is absolutely no doubt that had they chosen to stay in, they would have run a strong race and might very possibly have won."

Young concluded by saying, "Their courage and honesty in dealing with their problem, even at the cost of personal embarrassment, is to be commended."

Middle East Crisis Looms In Broadcast

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Diplomatic officials reported Wednesday the Israeli and Syrian radios have issued a call for all military reserves to report to their units.

Israeli government officials were said to have explained that the call did not mean general mobilization but only signalled normal military training for three units.

A few hours later, reports reaching here said, Radio Damascus interrupted programs to order all military personnel on leave to report immediately to their units.

U. S. Government officials were perturbed by the broadcasts. They said it was difficult to say whether or not they foreshadowed some military action in the Middle East.

Radio Tel Aviv broadcast what it said was a call from the Israeli general staff calling on all Israelis to report to their units. Military personnel were asked to listen for code names telling them when and where to gather.

Diplomatic authorities who have followed Middle East developments say there have been no signs of any sudden dangerous increase in tensions in the area. They were frankly puzzled by the developments.

The Damascus radio broadcast called on all soldiers on leave, as well as reserves, to report to units within 24 hours.

Middle East

The countries of Syria and Israel sound far away and unimportant, but there is currently being enacted in those countries a drama upon which your life may well depend.

The drama is unfolding with the announcement of reserve units having been called into active duty by the governments of both these countries, indicative that there is a possibility of a war in the very near future — perhaps tomorrow.

The source of the war is not readily apparent, but a conservative guess would have it that the United Arab Republic and Gamel Abdel Nasser in particular want to recoup some of their losses which they recently suffered in Iraq. If this is the case, they might be willing to risk a war with Israel on the pretense of a staged border attack, and in so doing unite the entire Arab group in their one consuming passion — their hatred of Israel.

A situation such as this would put the United States in a terible bind, for they would be in a position of having to trade off whatever good will they might still have from the Arab nations in order to live up to the treaty commitments to Israel. Or the United States would have to ignore Israel, lose face with the Western world, and back the Arabs. Finally, and most probably, the U.S. would let things stand and wait for a United Nations mandate. In any event, the U.S. stands to lose, for Russia will be solidly behind the Arabs in their brightening hope to splinter the Middle East from western influence. It is possible that in the process, European mistrust of the United States will be the result.

This picture is not bright, and it grows no brighter with each passing day. The United States is reaping the rewards of the past without having corrective measures for the future.

There is an outside possibility that Syria will attack Iraq or vice-versa, but the stakes are smaller and the gain for Nasser of such a move will be minimal.

If Nasser wants to make his brand of nationalism the nationalism of the entire Arab community, then it is incumbent upon him to play for large stakes, and the Iraqi squabble is a small stake or sour grapes which will be exceedingly doubtful in its outcome, it could win back the prestige Nasser lost, but it could also bring in Russian intervention which would topple Nasser for good and establish Russia's hand firmly in the Middle East.

With another pot boiling in the Far East, and the United States is helpless to do anything in either area, the situation looks grim. It can get grimmer.

On Studying

Sidney Dakar

Studying in college has much in common with trying to find solutions to the many issues that face the world today. It seems that we cannot hope for real peace in our time. We should consider ourselves lucky if we can only prevent an out-break of H-bomb warfare. Only the dreamers entertain hopes of achieving the 1815-1914 European type peace.

Only the dreamers entertain ideas of really "catching up" in all of their study assignments. After several years of working very hard at trying to catch up, I finally decided that it was hopeless. The illusive goal of having absolutely no homework come Friday and the weekend just never seemed to get any closer. The more I studied, the more I realized that I should be studing on the weekend instead of doing the town.

A basic change of attitude was necessary before I became a happy and free individual again. The solution to my frustration came after recognizing that it is a rare man indeed that can read all of the things that interest him and all of the things that his professors say should interest him. The complete acceptance that much of the assigned reading is a waste of time for most individuals with strong interests of their own is not as easy as easy as it sounds. But, once this is completely accepted the student will see seemingly unlimited vistas opening before him.

With this point of reference I am able to read for hours from Blazac, Palto, Hume and any of the other great writers without feeling that I am neglecting my "required studies." I read the things that are extremely interesting to me and when necessary memorize enough material on the classroom subjects in order to make a B or C on the course. Life has taken on new meaning and joy which I never felt while trying to read every line that someone else said was important for me.

Now when the mood strikes me I can sit all the afternoon without feeling negligent and drink beer or coke while discussing say the Arab-Israeli problem with a Jew or an Arab. Now I can lay aside my book of essays by Montaigne or Nietzsche and "goof off" even more by spending the afternoon listening to Mozart. At last I have freed myself from the mental shackles which I acquired during my freshman year. I am free! I am free to sample and participate in life as it slides swiftly behind us, never to return.

"Try It On – I Made It Especially For You"

What Is Said

The New Republic

The President has led us to the dead end of the street called "bigger bang for a buck" and "massive retailation." In the present war of nerves, it is the people of the West and not the Russians whose teeth should be set chattering by Mr. Eisenhower's heated pronouncements at the March 11 press conference. A built-in ambiguity of phrasing always allows one to explain that he does not mean what he seems to mean. But in this instance, such an apology is straned. For he said unmistabably that, ultimatums on Berlin notwithstanding, he did not intend to reconsider the scheduled reduction in forces of the Marines and the Army, because > we are certainly not going to fight a ground war in Europe. What good would it do to send a few more thousands, or indeed even a few divisions of troops to Europe? I do not see why we would thing that we, with something of a half a million troops, Soviet and some German in East Germany with 175 divisions . . . in that neighborhood, why in the world we would dream of fighting a ground war?

Then what kind of war would we dream of fighting? Presumably a nuclear war. Over Berlin? The President himself has previously all but ruled out this alternative. And again on March 11, he observed that a nuclear war "cannot free anything." If it cannot do that (it is certainly not our purpose to unfree anything), what could justify the use of nuclear weapons? The logic of Mr. Eisenhower's remarks seems to us to be that the US should abolish its nuclear stockpiles and announce to the world that pacifism in the nuclear age is the only practical policy. It is a conclusion that is implicit in the President's announcement that "to use that kind of a nuclear war as a general thing (what does he mean, "a general thing"? Could it be used as a "specific" thing?), > looks to me a self-defeating thing for all of us, because after all with that kind of release of nuclear explosions around this world, of the number of hundreds, I don't know what it would do to the world, and particularly the northern hemisphere.

Thus having announced to the Russians that they need not fear our ground forces and need not fear nuclear retaliation unless they launch an all-out strike (which is highly unlikely), the President concludes his conference with the staggering QED: "Therefore, we will do what is necessary to protect ourselves, but we are never going to back up on our rights and responsibilities."

Or have we totally misinterpreted Mr. Eisenhower's intention? Was this just more budget oratory — aimed at "spending" Democrats? Or was he, in some mysterious way, trying to tell Mr. Khrushchev that if he disturbs peace in Europe, he will be hit with nuclear missiles. If that was his intent, he did not succeed. For in the light of what Mr. Eisenhower has said and of what the Russians know of public opinion in this country and Western Europe, Mr. Khrushchev cannot be expected to believe that if East German troops were to occupy Berlin in order to "maintain order," SAC aircraft loaded with H-bombs would be dispatched to Soviet targets. Read carefully, the President's March 11 analysis signals our adversaries that, short of an all-out attack, they may do just about what they want in Europe; and furthermore, that NATO's ground forces have about as much military utility as a covered wagon on a freeway. If they are only there as a trip-wire to set off "massive retaliation," why are so many there at all? He allows the world two unimaginable alternatives: nuclear war in defense of limited positions in Europe in the event of Communist aggressive action, or no defense at all. In effect, he says: we cannot do what we could do short of suicide (fight a limited, conventional war in Europe), and we will not do what we have weapons to do (wage a nuclear war).

"What," he asks, "would you do with more ground forces in Europe?" The answer, if one may presume ot answer the former Supreme Commander of NATO, is that we would use them to fight, hoping — and it is the only hope there is, if one rules out both nuclear war and surrender — that the aggressor would understand early in the fight that the next step would be nuclear attacks of devastating ferocity.

If we are bewildered by Mr. Eisenhower's words, what of the West Berliners? Where are they left? Those who read may run and make their peace with the 175 Soviet divisions.

Still, some may find the President's comments reassuring, and we have in mind not only the Russian leaders. Wishes will still after thought; it is comforting to assume that if the West relaxes, peace will come. The Nation magazine says that "General Eisenhower has given an admirable example of composure in these past weeks," and that all of us should "emulate Mr. Eisenhower's soldierly behavior." Composure and calmness thus become synonymous with shutting one's eyes to Soviet strengths and declining the sacrifices that might avert both a nuclear holocaust and cheap Soviet victories.

There are, we believe, alternatives of strategy more practical than the President's, and in an article by James E. King, Jr., next week we hope to examine them.

Goettingen Letter: A Look Back

I do believe we could teach Gottingen something about how to be a university. I have been told hundreds of times about German discipline. It's almost completely lacking here. First of all, there is scarcely any evidence of that symmetrical order which is so prominent at Carolina. The buildings here are scattered all over the place, and they are so well integrated with the town that if a person is not really careful he's liable to end up trying to buy his beefsteak in the zoo lab.

Absolutely no sense of discipline here . . . There is no campus code to guide student conduct, and not even a theoretical "Gottingen Gentleman." They make the obvious mistake here of leaving personal conduct up to the individual and his associates. The women students are not campused (there being no campus), nor are their regulations in any way different from the men's. There is no curfew. Strange to tell, though, it has become customary for women students to leave a man's room by ten o'clock at night. A self-imposed curfew, without legal status! What next!

The girls live in rented rooms in the town, just as the boys do. There is no house council to slap their wrists when their rooms are messy, nor is there an IDC to make angry noises when someone tears the telephone off the wall or pitched beer bottles down the hall. The landlord simply pitches the offender out the door and laughs at the idea of him finding another room in this crowded city: case closed.

Students here are never asked to sign "the pledge." If a student lies, he is held in contempt; if he steals, he is put in jail; if he cheats, he cheats only himself.

It is theoretically possible, if sufficient funds are available, to be a career student here at Gottingen, because it is practically impossible to flunk out. Only people on scholarships take exams, which serve in lieu of homework and attendance checks to determine whether or not a student is doing anything at all. Most students don't have to sweat their performance until the end of their eighth or ninth semester, when they take the "Stadtsexam" to win their diplomas.

Another thing lacking here is that good old rip-'em-up tear-'em-up school spirit. It is doubtful if many alumni ever have occasion to sit back and reminisce about "the good old days at Gottingen." In fact, most students here are more interested in their professors than in the university itself. They soon learn who the good professors are in their field, and they will follow him from one university to another to hear his lectures.

What this university needs to consolidate it is some big-time athletics. Then everybody could go out all together and get excited together and shout: "bash him in der shin," or "kick in another for good old G. U." The saddening state of affairs now is that only the people who are interested in sports play them, and the only people who show any real concern for the scores are the players.

It is possible that the lack of colorful student politics here is due to the absence from the scene of a student newspaper to report each day on who stood up and moved what, and what was passed, in the student legislature. Then too, the president and legislature are so busy working out minor student problems of better food and adequate housing that they have no time for such important issues as the proper placement of park benches and trash baskets.

And for all dilligent work done by students here, there is no recognition. For scholarship, there is no Phi Bella Kaper; for outstanding service, no Alte Quelle; and for just being plain wonderful every day in every way, there is no Silber Wurst to announce to the mob the superiority of the few. There just doesn't seem to be any B. M. O. C. Not even any class officers.

In fact, there is no adulation of personalities here, unless you consider the practice of celebrating the awarding of a Ph.D. with a parade through town in this category. Only these grinds are honored by public acclaim. Something's wrong with the system of values, obviously.

There is no counselling system here, either. In order to find out what courses are required for the finals at the end of his career, the student has no other recourse than to consult the study plan for his field, on sale at the bookstore. The student has no way of making sure where he stands in his work until he has to lay his cards on the table at the end of his school career, when they are expected to show their stuff on a comprehensive final. What they need here is something like Carolina's easy, comfortable honey-comb system, in which we plug up each cell with a certain grade and then weigh the whole mess at the end of four years.

And yet, in spite of its deplorable lack of order, discipline, pledges, school spirit, campus politics, honorary organizations, and counselling systems, Gottingen has somehow managed to turn out about half-a-dozen Nobel Prize winners and a host of other noteworthy men. How they ever do it I don't know. Maybe next semester I'll find out.

ROBERT C. NOBLE

Atomic Energy

Norman Cousins

The debate on the danger of radioactive fallout has ended. Commissioner Willard F. Libby, of the Atomic Energy Commission, has now acknowledged a "real concern" over contamination resulting from the testing of nuclear explosives.

Two recent events may have contributed to this concern. The first is that Southern California experienced a radioactive fallout far higher than the danger line specified by the AEC. The second came a few weeks ago when the wheat fields of northern Minnesota were dusted by an over-the-safety-limit quantity of radio-active strontium.

The significance of Dr. Libby's present concern is related to the fact that he is the Government scientist chiefly responsible for having assured the President and the American people in the past that the risk involved in nuclear testing was too small to worry about. Along with Dr. Edward Teller, Dr. Libby was one of the most influential spokesmen in blocking any serious effort to arrive at a world-wide ban on nuclear testing even if inspection and enforceable safeguards could be worked out.

It was more than three years ago that the possible danger to human bone and tissue, as well as to food, was called to the public attention by independent scientists outside the AEC. At that time, Commissioner Libby contended that the problem was negligible. One year later, Dr. Albert Schweitzer issued his now famous "Declaration of Conscience," in which he said that the explosion of nuclear weapons represented a violation of the natural rights of man, threatening his health, his air, his water, and his food. Dr. Schweitzer called on all nations to reuounce the explosions before the atomic armaments race got totally out of control, brooking the danger either of a world-destroying war or wholesale contamination of the atmosphere, or both. Dr. Libby's reply to Dr. Schweitzer no longer used the adjective "negligible." This time he acknowledged that a "small risk" was involved, but he said that the security of the free world depended on keeping ahead of the Soviet Union in the arms race.

In any event, Dr. Libby now asserts a "real concern." Those who opposed him can take no satisfaction in the fact that they were right. Nor does Dr. Libby's recent resignation from the AEC and the discontinuation of Dr. Teller's advisory position with the AEC correct the situation they were largely instrumental in bringing about. Even if not another bomb is exploded, the atmosphere will carry a burden of poisonous radioactivity for many years to come. There is no known way of washing the sky; no way to keep the strontium and the cesium from falling like rain; no way to keep it from getting into food and milk and thence into the bones of children where it will create radiation pockets in the bone morrow. But we can at least try to keep the situation from becoming immeasurably worse. The fact that danger exists is no warrent for multiplying it.

No one can question the patriotism of men like Dr. Libby and Dr. Teller. No one can doubt that they honestly felt that our ultimate security depended on the acceptance of their policies. But they are guilty, we believe, of putting false facts before the American people in an attempt to get those policies accepted. First, they concealed any unfavorable information about the by-product effects of the explosions. Second, when outside information developed, they attempted to minimize the danger.

Didn't they know from the start that the danger was "real?" We find it difficult to believe that they did not. But we believe that they genuinely felt that the loss of thousands of lives was small alongside the millions of lives that they felt would be jeopardized if the Soviet Union should seize nuclear leadership in the world. The weakness in their argument is that the security of the United States depends on arms control rather than on arms supremacy. Therefore, the U.S. should seriously seek effective and enforceable ways of both stopping the tests and putting an end to the nuclear arms race. But this is not what Dr. Teller and Dr. Libby wanted — even if a method of foolproof inspection could be achieved. And they have been working behind the scenes to prevent any agreement at Geneva or anywhere else.

Why do they hold to this position? In private briefing sessions to the press they express the view that the present large nuclear weapons practically ensure that the next war will be a suicidal one. Therefore, they want the testing to continue to enable them to devolp non-suicidal atomic weapons. They don't say that they will donate these weapons to a potential enemy to make sure he will use them on us. Nor do they say why they insisted on developing the suicidal weapons in the first place. There is more than merely a collapse of logic here. There is a surrender to the whole fantasy of absolute power in a way that would have appalled the men at Philadelphia in 1787 and confirmed them in their view of the danger of ever allowing men, even good and honest men, to become more important than law in the operation of a society.

The essential problem before the American people today is not to devise punishments for madness but to put an end to it. It may or may not be too late to stop the nuclear-arms race. Concerning that, no one really knows. But it would be tragic to assume it is. At least we owe it to sanity to make the effort. But it will have to be a large effort. It will have to be large enough to enlist the support of most of the world's peoples. It cannot be a synthetic effort. The moral content must be clear and substantial. If we are capable of such an effort, there is a chance our nation and generation can serve history in the way it most needs to be served in our time.

Browne Rites Set Today At 3 P.M.

Funeral services for Prof. Edward Tankard Browne of the UNC Mathematics Department will be held today at 3 p.m. in the University Methodist Church.

Prof. Browne, 64, died Tuesday. A faculty member since 1922, he was author of several mathematics textbooks, the latest of which was "Theory of Matrics and Determinant and Number Theory."

He was also co-author with Prof. John W. Lafley of "Introductory Mathematics" and with Prof. E. A. Cameron of "College Algebra," both textbooks for college freshmen.

Born Nov. 22, 1894, in Northumberland County, Va., Browne was an alumnus of the University of Virginia and the University of Chicago.

He is survived by his wife; two sons, Prof. E. T. Browne Jr., of Auburn, Ala., and William B. Browne of Baltimore, Md.; and a daughter, Mrs. Joseph A. Hayworth, of Hyde Park, N. Y.

The family has requested that donations be made to the University Methodist Church building fund in lieu of flowers.

Dale's Triple Gives Heels 4-3 Win Over Ithaca Squad

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Sophomore first baseman Dave Dale lashed a long triple to deep center field to drive in teammate Russ Hollers ahead of him and provide Carolina with a 4-3 victory over Ithaca College here yesterday.

Dale's shot came in the bottom of the seventh inning and Hollers scored easily from second base. Hollers had doubled before Dale's blow wound it up.

Young Gets Win

The winning pitcher for Carolina was Wayne Young who came on in relief of Ben Hammett in the fourth inning. Young allowed only two hits the rest of the way.

When Young came in the bases were full with only one out. He promptly got Mel Giarola to bang into a double play to put out the fire.

The Tar Heels raked four Ithaca pitchers for 11 hits, with Bob Carty being tagged with the loss.

Harold Workman with 3 for 5 and Russ Hollers with 2 for 4 led the Tar Heel batsmen for the day.

4 Regulars Out

The Heels were playing shorthanded as four regulars were out with virus infections. John Burgwyn, the team's leading hitter, Tommy Camp, Al Baldwin, and Tommy Saintsing all sat it out.

Carolina boosted its season mark to 5-1 with the win; their only loss came at the hands of Illinois in Florida. After a game with East Carolina here this Friday, the Tar Heels get into the thick of the ACC race next week.

Heels Score First

Carolina got first blood, in the initial inning, when Gerald Griffin got to first on a fielders choice and romped to second when the ball was overthrown at first base. He trotted in on Workman's ground-rule double down the left field line.

The Bombers tied it up in the top of the fourth, but Carolina went ahead again in the bottom of the fourth when Bruce Crump slid home and was called out but the catcher dropped the ball.

The Tar Heels made it 3-1 in the bottom of the fifth. Ithaca's last bid came in the top of the eighth when they scored two unearned runs to tie the count at 3-3. But then Dale's clout opened the gates in the bottom of the seventh and the Tar Heels had their fifth win of the year.

It was a rather sloppily played game as both teams committed four errors. Ithaca got three runs on seven hits while the Tar Heels garnered 4 runs off 11 hits.

Middies Platoon

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — (AP) — Navy football Coach Eddie Erdelatz will go all out in platooning next season.

The 22 best Middie gridders will be divided into two elevens of equal balance, Erdelatz said Wednesday. He'll run the interchangeable units in and out every seven and one-half minutes.

Erdelatz told newsmen, "Next year we'll have a starting team, a replacement team and a second team.

"The best players will be sprinkled through the starting and replacement teams. We'll have a 22-man front."

Navy's so-called "second team" will see action occasionally and would supply individual replacements for injured men on the other two units, Erdelatz explained.

The 37-year-old coach talked enthusiastically about his plan.

"The starting and replacement units will be even. We won't stress offense in either one," Erdelatz said.

McGuire Put On Coaches Group

Frank McGuire, University of North Carolina basketball coach, has been named on the board of directors of the National Basketball Coaches Association and chairman of its press committee.

McGuire has appointed on his press committee the following coaches: Fordy Anderson, Michigan State; Doggie Julian, Dartmouth; Ben Carnevale, Navy; Adolph Rupp, Kentucky; Dick Harp, Kansas; Pete Newell, California; and Bob Spear, Air Force Academy.

Following a series of speaking engagements at basketball banquets, McGuire will appear at various summer basketball clinics. His schedule opens with his annual work at Camp Pla-Mor at Windy Hill, S. C., during his first three weeks in June. He will be at Camp All America, Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y., July 15-16.

McGuire has three August engagements. On Aug. 5-6-7 he will lecture at the summer clinic of the Wisconsin High School Coaches Association at Madison, Wis. On August 16-21 he will be at the fourth annual conference of the famed Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Inc., at Kansas City. On Aug. 25-27 he will teach at the eleventh annual Southern Illinois University football and basketball clinic.

Big Four Meet

The Big Four Rod and Gun Field Meet will be held on Tuesday April 14 at the Durham Wildlife Club.

This is the third annual Meet, and participation for this Meet is heartily urged. Trophies will be awarded to each individual winner. Contestants will be eligible to enter one event, and all events will begin at 2:00.

The events are archery, bait casting, target rifle shooting, trap shooting and fishing. The supervisors for the Meet are Tom Johnson and Don Atkins.

OUTING CLUB

There will be a meeting of the UNC Outing Club tonight at 7:00 in room 301-B Woollen Gym. Plans for the water skiing regatta will be discussed. Membership cards will be available for all those interested in joining the club.

Golfers Blast Cornell Team By 24-3 Count

Carolina's varsity golfers made it two in a row here yesterday by completely routing Cornell of the Ivy League 24-3 on Finley Golf course.

The Tar Heels pushed their season mark to an unbeaten 2-0 with the victory, they had previously whipped Indiana 24-3 last week.

The Tar Heels didn't lose a single match, the same thing that occurred against Indiana. Number 2 man Don McMillan turned out to be medalist for the day with a 1-under par 71. His opponent, Rich Weyand, fired an even par 72.

One Tie

The only black mark on the Carolina ledger was a tie between UNC's Dave Sloan and Cornell's Dave Dawson.

The linksmen are right back at it today when they battle Michigan State at 1:30 on Finley Golf Course.

The Summary:

Ed Justa (C) defeated Ait Hemker 3-0

Don McMillan (C) defeated Rich Weyand 2-1

Best Ball - Carolina 2-1

David Sloan (C) tied David Dawson 1½-1½

Bob Galloway (C) defeated Jim Getchonis 3-0

Best Ball - Carolina 2½-½

Hugh Goodman (C) defeated Bob Wagoner 3-0

John McKee (C) defeated Tom Smith 3-0

Furtado Endorses Smith For Presidency

Student Body President Don Furtado yesterday endorsed Norman B. Smith, for President of the Student Body.

In a statement released yesterday, Furtado said, "I am supporting Norman Smith for the presidency because of his past record, his initiative and perception, and his devotion to maintaining a responsible student government."

Furtado explained that he based the statement on the needs of the position as he has been them from the vantage point of a year's service.

"The President of the Student Body should be much more than a political mechanic," Furtado asserted.

He outlined the president's duties by saying, "In addition to serving as a student representative in many areas, it becomes his responsibility to mold student policy, initiating those that are necessary to adapt to a changing campus and community environment."

"Only with this purpose can he maintain a student government which is a functioning example of responsible and mature student action," Furtado continued.

Furtado cited Norman Smith as an example of a person who has devoted himself to this concept. Specifically, Furtado pointed to two examples in which Smith served student government well.

Smith's work on the room rent committee, appointed by Furtado to study the situation of constantly increasing room rent was, according to the president, largely responsible for the acceptance of the principle and practice of one-half self-liquidation which would cause no rent increases by the Trustees, and the Advisory Budget Commission.

"When Student Government," Furtado pointed out, "realized the pressing need to support the University in its budget request, Norman Smith volunteered to head the Committee on State Affairs, and he was responsible for an explanatory budget book, for setting up a personal visitation project, and for arranging a televised budget discussion project."

"These two examples, in addition to his outstanding legislative record, are tangible illustrations of Smith's concern for the betterment

Fuller Heads New PIFC For Spring

Erwin Fuller, junior from Louisburg and representative from Delta Sigma Pi, has been elected chairman of the Professional Interfraternity Council for the duration of the spring semester.

This action was taken at a regular business session of the council.

The Professional Interfraternity Council is the governing legislature and judicial body for the professional business administration and pharmaceutical fraternities. The four fraternities which presently constitute the membership are Delta Sigma Pi, Alpha Kappa Psi, Phi Delta Chi and Kappa Psi.

Other officers elected to the Council are Don Deaton, vice chairman; Whit Moose, secretary; and Don Pugh, treasurer.

Other members are Ted Bolick, Jerry Price, Charles Bennett and Larry Wilson.

A written constitution has been adopted and submitted to the respective fraternities for ratification. Upon ratification by the houses, the constitution will be submitted to student Legislature for approval.

The PIFC was formed in 1956 and negotiates visiting agreements for women with administration for fraternities.

The PIFC does not control rushing activities because of diversity of interest of houses.

The recently-drawn up constitution is the first known written document of the PIFC, and is patterened to some extent after the IFC constitution.

Each house is represented on the PIFC by the president of the house and one otherr epresentative.

The council has legislative and judicial powers as enumerated in the constitution. A detailed judicial procedure is outlined.

Minter Points To Gray's Party Role

Charlie Gray's role in making the University Party program a success was pointed out in a statement issued Thursday by John Minter, party chairman.

Gray is the UP candidate for student body president.

Minter said, "Gray's moderate policy of facing issues and holding our student government to the line of realistically progressive means of improvement has been best evinced through his work in the Legislature."

He pointed out that through both dormitory and fraternity district Legislature representation, Gray has seen all phases of campus needs and has argued for them in a manner that sees things accomplished, not just discussed.

Besides being assistant floor leader and floor leader in Legislature, Gray has served on the Ways and Means Committee, has spent many hours on the Honor Council revision, and has served this year as head of the fraternity parking committee, according to Minter.

Commenting on the presidential candidate's work in the financial branch of student government, Minter said that by serving as treasurer Gray has spent much time investigating detailed financial problems, codifying expenditures and clearing

The time is 8 p.m.

The political rally between the University Party and the Student Party will be in Gerrard Hall tonight at 8 o'clock instead of a previously incorrect time given.

Speaking at the rally will be the big four student body officer candidates and Davis Young, The Daily Tar Heel editor candidate.

YMCA Elects Officers; Raper Is President

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Jack Raper, a rising senior from Raleigh, is the new president of the YMCA.

Other new officers are Bill Norton, vice president; Lewis Rush, secretary; Allan Daniels, treasurer; Mark Wilson, program chairman; and Phil Nash, membership chairman.

Cabinet members will be selected at a later date.

Raper is a Brooks Scholar and a member of Phi Eta Sigma, the special freshman academic program, the Order of the Old Well, the Student Legislature and the Symposium.

He is also the former cleark of the Men's Honor Council.

Vice President Norton is a rising sophomore of Durham. He is on the Elections Board and a member of Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity. This year he has been active in student government.

Rush, a Morehead Scholar, is a rising junior from Asheboro. Rush is a member of Phi Eta Sigma and the special freshman program.

New treasurer Daniels is a rising senior from Goldsboro. He has worked with the Y's freshman activities; also he is head football manager next year.

Daniels is a Kappa Sigma.

A rising senior from Chattanooga, Tenn., Mark Wilson is a Morehead Scholar, and he is a member of the Phi Eta Sigma, the Order of the Old Well, the special freshman program, Symposium and Wesley Foundation.

Wilson is chairman of the Fine Arts Forum and a member of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

Membership chairman Phil Nash, a rising junior from Bristol, Va., is in the AFROTC. Nash is comptroller for the Sabre Air Command and chairman of Operation Build-Up for the Arnold Air Society.

He is also rush chairman for Sigma Phi Epsilon social fraternity.

Guiding Lights

The new officers for the YMCA are (l. to r.) Allen Daniels, treasurer; Lewis Rush, secretary; Mark Wilson, program chairman; Bill Norton, vice president Jack Raper, president; and Phil Nash, membership chairman.

Sheffield Hits Tactics Of Campaign

In a statement issued yesterday, Dewey Sheffield, vice-chairman of the Student Party, criticized certain tactics being used in the student body presidential campaign.

According to Sheffield, "Certain elements have organized and are conducting a whisper, smear campaign against the Student Party candidate for president, Norman B. Smith."

He said that there is campaigning being conducted in fraternities and sororities, as well as dormitories, which is based on completely false statements about Smith.

Sheffield said such persons are saying that "Norman Smith is against fraternities and sororities and is working to abolish them on this campus. You have certain interests that you must protect. You must vote to protect this interest."

The SP vice-chairman calls such a statement "entirely untrue." He said, "Norman has repeatedly stated that he will do everything in his power as president to maintain fraternities and sororities on our campus."

Sheffield feels such campaigners are also seeking to alarm coeds by saying that Smith is working to abolish the Women's Residence Council.

Of this, he remarked, "Smith has conducted one of the most extensive researches into our campus judicial system. He is definitely opposed to the abolition of the WRC."

Sheffield said, "I appeal to the students on campus to demonstrate to the conductors of this smear campaign their wholehearted opposition to such political tactics by giving Norman B. Smith a ringing vote of confidence on April 7."

He pointed out further that the SP platform for the spring elections promotes sane, progressive, efficient student government and cited the following two planks:

Plank three advocates action to establish long-term commissions (judiciary, executive and legislative) to study and recommend governmental structures leading to more consistent and efficient student government.

Sheffield concluded, "The Student Party has always worked for all students at the University, and it ever shall. We again pledge to the student body our untiring efforts toward furthering the cause and welfare of you, the students."

Public Rally To Hear All Major Candidates

The nine candidates for campus-wide political office will appear tonight at a public rally at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The rally is sponsored by the Current Affairs Committee of Graham Memorial Activities Board and will include a question and answer session following the candidates' speeches.

Both Charlie Gray University Party candidate for president, and Norman Smith Student Party nominee will outline their plans for the presidency, if elected.

David Grigg, Sue Wood, and Bob Bingham will complete the University Party speeches for vice-president, secretary, and treasurer respectively.

Speaking for the Student Party, in addition to Smith, will be Jim Crownover, Ann Lucas, and Erwin Fuller, for the same campus-wide positions.

Davis Young, unopposed candidate for editor, will be the only speaker on the editorship race.

Jerry Stokes, chairman of the Current Affairs committee, said yesterday, "This public debate affords every student on campus an excellent opportunity to know the platform of every candidate."

"Questions from the floor will enable anybody on campus to see how the candidates react under pressure," Stokes continued.

"I hope everyone on campus will avail themselves of this single opportunity to see all the candidates face to face," Stokes concluded.

BUDGET EXPLAINED

By DEE DANIELS

The 1959-60 Student Government budget was explained by Charlie Gray (UP) to the Student Legislature last night, but it will not be voted on until next session.

Speaker Ralph Cummings explained that the bill would be held due to mimeographing difficulties which prevented its being sent to legislators two days prior to its presentation to the body. Such a stipulation is stated in the Student Legislature by-laws.

Jim Crownover's (SP) bill to appropriate funds for the purchase of a TV set for the infirmary was sanctioned after being amended by the Finance Committee this week.

The bill provides that $95 from the TV repair fund and another $95 from the Legislature be allocated for said purchase.

A bill to appropriate $500 to Playbill was held in the Finance Committee and a resolution that Lenoir Hall employees be paid in cash was returned to this committee.

Crownover's bill to declare a policy on the drinking rule was tabled.

Ann Harvey's (UP) bill to change the method of selection of jurors for the trying of Honor Council cases was also tabled.

Concert To Open Band Tour

The University Concert Band is scheduled for the fourth concert of the Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the UNC Music Department on April 7 at 8 p.m.

Playing in Hill Hall under the direction of band master Herbert Fred and assistant conductors, Calvin Huber and Earl Gates, the 55-piece ensemble will present a program of music by Bach, Rossini, Jenkins, Lacome, Herman, Shostakovich and Fillmore.

Tuesday's program will also inaugurate a three-day tour which will take the all-student group to the western part of North Carolina with visits to Gastonia, Shelby, Concord and Asheville.

Deadline In Art Show Is Extended

The deadline for entries in the Student Arts Festival has been extended to Saturday noon, April 4.

The Festival is sponsored by the Presbyterian Student Center and will be held April 5-8. Entries in the four divisions: oils, black and whites, photography and sculpture are to be submitted to the Presbyterian church office on the second floor of the Y. Student wives may also enter works in the show.

A screening committe will determine which works will appear in the exhibit.

Works in the show will be judged by three of the state's outstanding artists: Joe Cox of the N. C. State School of Design; Gregory Ivy, head of the Art Department at Woman's College; and Robert A. Howard of UNC's Art Department. They will name first, second and third place winners in each division.

All events in the festival take place at the Presbyterian Student Center. Monday night at 7:30 a T.V. script entitled "The Image of Man in Contemporary Art," features Bob Ketler, graduate student in Dramatic Arts.

Tickets for the Greenwich Village Buffet, Tuesday at 6 p.m., cost 25 cents and can be gotten at the exhibit or church office at the Y.

Hours for the exhibit are: Sunday, April 5, 8-10 p.m.; Monday - Wednesday, 1-9 p.m.

Greek Letter Leaders Announced

Chi Omega sorority and Tau Epsilon Phi fraternity have topped other fraternal organizations at UNC in scholastic averages, according to a report from the dean of student affairs office.

Raymond L. Jefferies, assistant to the dean, compiled the ranking in a report to Chancellor William B. Aycock based on fall semester grades and including both active members and pledges.

Following Chi Omega in the sorority listings was Kappa Kappa Gamma in the number two spot. Others, in order, are Alpha Gamma Delta, Delta Delta Delta, Pi Beta Phi, Kappa Delta and Alpha Delta Pi.

The Chi Omega average was 2.3222. In the grading system, the letter grade "A" is valued at 1.00, "B" at 2.00, "C" at 3.00 and so on. The all sorority average is 2.4603.

Fraternity averages, somewhat lower than the sorority marks, were led by the Tep's 2.6142. Others in the top 10 among 24 campus fraternities were, in order: Beta Theta Pi, Pi Kappa Alpha, Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Phi Epsilon, Chi Psi, Pi Lambda Phi, Delta Psi (St. Anthony), Zeta Beta Tau and Alpha Tau Omega.

All fraternity average is 2.8889, compared to a sample average taken from men students in general of 2.8728.

Miss Trotman Succeeds To Honor Council Post

Sandy Trotman, a junior from West Orange, N. J., succeeds Nancy Adams as chairman of Women's Honor Council.

Miss Trotman believes that "no honor system can function properly without the full understanding of those who live under it.

"Therefore, it will be my endeavor to provide each woman student on this campus with a more complete understanding of the workings of the Women's Honor Council and the Honor System. In this way, our Honor System can become a more vital part of each woman student's life."

She was elected to the Council in the fall of 1958. Her other activities include secretary of Campus Orientation Committee, secretary of Pi Beta Phi sorority, and Women's Handbook Committee.

Playmakers' 'Mrs. McThing' Will Have Five Show Run

The Carolina Playmakers production of Mary Chase's fantasite comedy "Mrs. McThing" is scheduled to open April 8 at 8:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre for a five-performance run. This is the fourth major production of the Playmakers forty-firsts eason.

Featured in the cast are Louise Lamont and Patricia Koch, both local residents.

Mrs. Lamont heads the Lamont School of Drama, Chapel Hill, and teaches classes in the Allied Arts Center, Durham. An experienced actress, she has appeared professionally with Tallulah Bankhead in "Her Cardboard Lover" and with Fred Stone in "You Can't Take It With You."

She has worked with The Barter Theatre, Abingdon, Va.; The Chase Barn Theatre, New Hampshire; and toured professionally through Buffalo, Chicago, Toronto and Detroit.

Her performances with The Carolina Playmakers have included roles in "Hamlet," I Remember Mama," "The Little Foxes," and "Lysistrata." In "Mrs. McThing" she takes the dual role of the witches, "McThing."

Patricia Koch is a student at Estes Hills Elementary School. She is making her initial appearance on the Playmakers' stage. Behind her is the tradition of her grandfather Frederick H. ("Proff") Koch, founder of the Playmakers.

Patricia is a student of Louise Lamont and has appeared in "The Princess and the Hundred Dolls" and "Snow White." She is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Koch. Dr. Koch is an Assistant Professor of Botany at UNC. Mrs. Koch teaches in the Chapel Hill public schools and is the author of several books for children.

Seats are still available for the five performances of "Mrs. McThing." Tickets are on sale at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved for $1.50.

MRS. MCTHING — Mrs. Louise Lamont is shown with Patricia Koch as they will appear in the coming Playmaker production of Mary Chase's comedy, "Mrs. McThing."

April 24 Date Set For Beauty Pageant

The ninth annual Miss Chapel Hill Pageant will be held April 24 in the auditorium of Chapel Hill High School.

The local event, sponsored by the Chapel Hill Junior Chamber of Commerce, is open to all Chapel Hill girls and University coeds between the ages of 18 and 25, inclusive. Each entry will be judged on talent in her chosen field, evening dress and bathing suit appearances.

The winner of the pageant will be crowned by Diana Johnson, last year's Miss Chapel Hill, and will enter the state competition in Durham. The winner of the state pageant will represent North Carolina in the annual Miss America pageant at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

In addition to a free trip to the state pageant the girl chosen as Miss Chapel Hill will receive a wardrobe and a college scholarship.

Full information about entering the contest may be obtained from J. D. Wright at Town and Campus.

Spring Swing Starts Today

Th Chapel Hill Merchants Association is sponsoring their third annual Spring Swing today and Saturday.

The Spring Swing usually consists of a sale and a street dance. However, the dance has been cancelled this year because no location could be found for it. East Franklin St. could not be used, and the association was unable to have the dance anywhere else.

Negotiations Fall Through At Henderson

RALEIGH — (AP) — Gov. Hodges threw up his hands Thursday and aamitted failure in his long, weary attempt to settle Henderson's strife-marred textile strike.

Hopes that had been building up in Henderson as optimistic rumors circulated were dashed abruptly as the Governor announced the talks had broken down and he was withdrawing from then egotiations.

After six long days of talks held at the executive mansion, Hodges said that although agreement had been reached on many points the differences between management of the Harriet-Henderson textile mills are the Textile Workers Union of America "are still serious and are of long-standing.

Come!

The public rally tonight will be the last and perhaps only opportunity to get a chance to really know the presidential candidates.

There are many different conceptions of what these offices entail, and the best way to find out how a man measures up to your conception of how that office should perform is to ask him the type of questions that will make him respond to pressures, the type of which he may be faced with in the office he is trying to elect himself to.

No doubt there will be a good deal of hedging and squirming, but the campus has a right to know what to expect. If you want to cast a wise vote, be there. The meeting may be very interesting.

Strike

Mediations have broken down on the Harriet-Henderson strike scene, and another hope for settlement has gone by the boards.

The Harriet-Henderson strike is a small blight on the state, and unfortunately the largest responsibility falls on the Governor.

He, of course, did not start the strike, nor the violence. But, he watched the strike as a man in a burst of curiosity watches a flaming building, and only after the top floor has been demolished will he call the fire department.

The Governor's administration has never been pro-labor, and this is a case where labor has a distinctly better case to make for itself than management, but the Governor' feeling for the needs of industry in this state should not have displaced his sense of importance of his office nor his ability to discern right from wrong.

When he finally intervened in the strike, his efforts were late, and still are little, and although the heat has cooled down, a great deal of bitterness remains and will remain so long as strong affirmative action remains untaken.

Perhaps there is by now a necessity for federal mediation, but this action has only come to be necessary because of the failure of the Governor to supply the needed leadership. This state cannot hope to win respect with this type of leadership, and it is time for the Governor to do some serious thinking about his position in this whole affair.

The strikers at the mill cannot wait much longer. Perhaps that is the Governor's purpose.

Refreshing

When a group as large as 2,000 is willing to journey to Raleigh to stand up in an auditorium and say that they want increased taxes, if it means that the state can have adequate schools, the incident is noteworthy and refreshing. It restores somewhat the faith one might have in humanity.

It is going to take just that to make the North Carolina educational system what it ought to be, and one would expect that an even larger percentage of the people would mass in a group and oppose increased taxation. Maybe the people of the state realize the importance of education, and perhaps, if the mandate is strong enough, the leaders in the General Assembly will act decisively, instead of trying to find the smoothest edge to get increases in the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations, and still avoid increased taxation on any great scale.

The need is great. The scale ought to be also.

Of Importance

Sidney Dakar

Everyday that we read a newspaper, magazine or listen to a radio we are told that Americans are not stressing the important things in life. I have written in this column something to this effect. Some people have gotten the wrong-idea about what I have said. It is true, in my opinion, Americans do stress the materialistic things of life, but this is not because we are Americans but because we are human.

People in foreign lands never fail to point out that Americans are the gaudiest people in the world. This is no doubt true. The thing that is not realized by most Americans is that almost all foreigners would gladly exchange places with the Americans if the opportunity presented itself. We can afford to be gaudy; most foreigners cannot. The foreigners then rationalize and say that all of the material values that the Americans stress are stupid. In other words, they are stupid because we can afford them and they cannot.

Anyone who has lived overseas knows the effect that material things, namely the U. S. $, has upon most foreigners. I rarely met a young lady who was not ready and willing to partake of the material things of life, in the form of the best clubs and restaurants in town, as long as I was willing to spend the Yankee dollar. But, you say that these are the young people. What about the older people? I do not recall meeting a businessman who stressed the "important values" more than the material values. Most merchants overseas have three price systems; the lowest is for the natives, the next for the American G.I. and the highest is for the American tourists.

It is amazing how many people who arrive here from some land where the "important values" are stressed do not want to return to their native lands. I know several foreign students who had a contempt for many of the modern gadgets that we have in America, but after a short stay they changed their tune. These same students today are driving around in one of the "unnecessary" things and some are living off campus in apartments that are furnished in a style that certainly has something besides necessities in mind.

Everyday we have it pounded into our ears that we should share our wealth with the underdeveloped countries of the world. We should of course help the unfortunate, but we must not get carried away with our sentiments and expect any thanks from the ones we help. These people are not going to love us, no matter how much we give. No matter how much we give, the less fortunate ones will look at us in our new cars and fine homes and hate us for not giving them twice the amount that we gave. If we would give twice the amount, they would want twice that amount. This is human nature.

Did any of you ever stop and wonder what the world would be like it, say, the "oppressed masses" of Africa, China or India were in our positions and we were in theirs? I certainly would not bet that they would not sneer at us, slap our out-streched hands and tell us that they had nothing to spare. Since time began the world has been made up of "haves" and "have nots," of "hammers" and "anvils." And so it will always be.

"What Makes You Think We're Trying To Conceal Anything?"

No Ground War? Atomic War!

The Commonweal

President Eisenhower's authoritative stand in the present foreign policy and defense crisis is a source of comfort and reassurance to a great many Americans, apparently. The President has been speaking his mind with vigor and conviction, wielding as he seldom has before the full power of his position as Chief Executive and Commander-in-Chief. And those who were anxious over the loss of Secretary Dulles' assured direction of our foreign policy are relieved that Mr. Eisenhower has shown an equally firm and confident manner.

We are not so sure. It may be good news that the President has chosen to exercise for himself the decision-making powers of his office, but the decisions he has made must not be overlooked in jubilation over the fact that he has made them.

In one of his recent press conferences, for instance, Mr. Eisenhower made clear a United States policy decision which had been discernible, perhaps, in previous actions and statements but had never been openly spelled out. Replying to a reporter's question about the need to bolster our armed forces in light of the Berlin situation, the President said, "What would you do with more ground forces in Europe? . . . We are certainly not going to fight a ground war in Europe." He went on to indicate that if our existing ground forces could not handle a "brush-fire situation," the United States would then resort to nuclear weapons.

If these Presidential statements mean anything, it seems to us, they mean that the Administration has committed itself to an enormously important and enormously disturbing decision in foreign policy and in strategic planning. Critics of the Administration, including, on occasion, the editors of this magazine, have frequently expressed misgivings over the ever-increasing reliance, in the balance of power against the Soviets, on "massive retaliation' or "massive deterrence" in the form of nuclear bombs. The "bigger bang for a buck" theory led to steady reductions in defense spending in almost every area but that of the horror weapons and to corresponding reductions in our ability to deal with "limited" emergencies.

As our conventional forces declined in numbers and weapons strength, many feared, the United States would be less and less able to stand firm in the face of military threats—except by resorting to the threat of nuclear war. In the past, as Mr. Dulles has admitted, this policy did in fact bring us to the brink of the holocaust, because it left no middle ground between appeasement and the horror of all-out nuclear war.

Now it appears that we, and all those who shared our fears, were right—and there is no satisfaction to be found in the thought. President Eisenhower has suggested (and rather off-handedly!) that the NATO forces are now useless, that we would not try to contain a European military action by conventional forces but would use our massive weapons—in a way that could hardly be called deterrence or even retaliation. And this in conjunction with the insistence that our Army and Marine Corps be reduced still further, that we give up any idea of meeting the Soviets weapon-for-weapon or missile-for-missile, that we rely on the ultimate sanction; our ability to annihilate with our bombs untold millions of Russian men, women and children.

The moral implications of such a strategy, which have, astonishingly, been ignored, are profoundly important for a society which claims the ideals we do, and it is incredible that they should be passed over without even a comment. But even on the level of tactics and diplomacy this is a deeply disquieting decision. The abandonment of the effort to maintain the strength of our conventional forces will make it more and more difficult to counter Soviet probes against the West. If we cannot pursue, a limited military objective, in any Russian-produced crisis—and we have no reason to expect that there will not be more of them—the West will have less and less room to manœuver between the alternatives of yielding to the Soviets inch by inch and plunging the world into the insanity of nuclear war.

NATO, already weak, has thus been dealt a body blow by the man who was one of ts most ardent champions. Our allies, understandably nervous about U. S. intentions by reason of their proximity to Soviet launching pads, are more concerned than ever. The uncommitted nations are alarmed by our acceptance of Soviet military superiority, on the one hand, and on the other by what they see as a frightening readiness on the part of the United States to "brandish the A-bomb" in recent international disputes.

The President's decision to cut back conventional forces and missile development and to rely almost wholly on our possession of the big bombs to deter Communist aggression is, we think, morally disturbing and politically and militarily fraught with danger. The danger of all-out nuclear war is, obviously, perceptibly increased by it. But because such a war would be unspeakably horrible and the responsibility for initiating it almost impossible to assume, the danger of appeasement becomes even more likely: There must be a third alternative.

A Discovery

Bill Bailey

"As in the time of Noah," says Billy Graham, "sin and pleasure still persist. There is more time spent in the theaters today than the churches." The sage words of this famed evangelist never fail to ring the bells in the tower of truth; but these words especially carry considerable and shocking import. In our modern and enlightened society it is difficult to realize that there are yet people who are happy. However, being of an optimistic alloy, I feel that this menace can be stopped with so many modern social devices at our call.

Besides the crusades of Graham, there is other heartening news: Time magazine reports that there are 10,000 more missionaries now than a decade ago. The borders of civilization are extending farther and farther into the depths of the wild; the natives are becoming educated; they read the Bible; they put on shirts and pants; they learn about dynamite and gunpower; Solemnity replaces pleasure. When the missionaries complete their indoctrination, we can send out the second wave: the gold-miners, the oil men, the big game hunters, and the land grabbers. These men are really a force organized for the Good, much the same as the missionaries; they will herd the people off the land into camps, and the politicians and real estate boys will sell it back to them for a very reasonable price. After the strong indoctrination period most of the natives will be highly pleased to receive so much for so little; they can start again the modern way to build for a solid future . . . they've learned to fear; they've learned right from wrong.

The human being is an active animal; he explores, roams, cogitates. He does more than just educate himself . . . much more. He also feels it his natural duty to see that his neighbor learns too. Really, there are so many things that the uneducated miss: they don't have Circle meetings, or draft boards, fraturnities or sororities. So, though its a little bit un-Christian, this is the reason I believe in the present rocket age. Just think what it will mean to the Martians and Venusians to learn of our established mores and age-tried cultural methods! Won't it be splendid to take away their toys, to change their smiles into frowns? We can tell them that pink tenacles aren't Ivy; we can sew buckles to the seat of their trousers; we can send their children to Sunday School. As, but this is but speculation, for when one thinks on these subjects, one's imagination swells to magnificent proportions: one thinks of other stars, of other galaxies, of new worlds, even. There are domestic problems to be solved yet, so we mustn't let our ideas run amuck; there are natives in Africa to be tamed yet, and we must start civilizing Alabama. When we make our own world safe, then we may set our sights on the stars.

It is with a much gladder heart that I look to the day I can sit in my chair, reading the Presbyterian News or the Congressional Record, pause, and think that the people have lain aside evil things, and that there are few shining faces but more sober ones. Success is at our fingertips, so let's grab it! Shall we prey.

Idiocy

Gerald W. Johnson

If the new state of Hawaii within a few years is represented in Washington by a pair of Senators, one rejoicing in the name of Ah Sin, the other in that of Hashimura Togo, and both Communists, will it be correct to regard the United States of America and the Dominions Beyond the Seas as a total loss and no insurance?

I presume to doubt it. A Communist, I admit is an objectionable specimen of humanity, less on account of his economic and religious heresis than on his illimitable and invincible idiocy. But idiocy chemically pure idiocy, may be and often is a catalyst of wisdom. Injection of a drop or two into the Senate might precipitate in that political alembic a considerable amount of wisdom now held in suspension in many gallons of bilge.

For this reason I have always regretted the disappearance from the House of the eminent representative from New York, the Hon. Vito Marcantonio. Off-hand, I cannot recall a single occasion on which Marcantonio made a sensible speech but I am persuaded that on numerous occasions his blatancies so shocked other honorable members that they were momentarily jarred loose from cherished idiocies of their own. A pair of really high-proof Communists in the Senate might have a similar effect in that august assemblage and thereby promote the general welfare.

One effect they would almost certainly produce is that of a clearer realization of what is implied in the Dulles policy of Brinkmanship. Geographically Hawaii is an outpost, defensible only as we control the Pacific, including the air above and the depths below its surface. As long as it was a mere territory its loss in a disastrous war could be written off when it could no longer be held without excessive cost; yet there would be no question of a betrayal of our pledged word. But now that it is a state it comes under the provisions of Article IV Section 4, of the Constitution of the United States, declaring that each state shall be guaranteed a republican form of government and protected against invasion. There is no limitation on this provision Congress henceforth has no power to decide that the further defense of Hawaii will be so expensive as not to be worthwhile. We are now committed to fight for the islands as long as we have a man or a dollar left.

We have staked everything we have on the presumption that we can control the Pacific for the indefinate future. But unless we find some way of ending the Cold War by an amicable agreement, that control will certainly be challenged in the future by the Asian powers, probably including Japan, whose hatred of us, however well concealed, is bound to be deep and bitter.

To assume blithely that we are certain to win such a war is really more than Brinkmanship. It is very close to what the ancient Greeks called hubris, and the Old Testament calls the pride that goeth before destruction. Yet to endow an exposed outpost with a political character that makes its fall as dealy a threat to our national existence as would be the fall of Washington is evidence of confidence hard to distinguish from hubris.

If, then, the polyglot electorate of Hawaii (better than three-fourths non-Caucasian in 1950) should send a couple of Communist Senators to Washington the jolt to the other 98 might bring some of them to a realization of how far from fact the deliberations of this august body have strayed in recent years.

The jolt might also compel a reappraisal of our defense system, not as regards its purpose but as regards its appearance. As a deterrent that system functions not by reason of what we think of it but of what others, especially potential attackers and potential allies think of it. What is good for General Motors may be good for the United States, but no considerable body of opinion holds that it is necessarily good for India and Pakistan, or even for France and Great Britain.

The question is, what is the effect on the bystanders? But it is precisely this question that both the State Department and Congress have resolutely refused to discuss in public; and the faintly piping voices of a few figures in the background — Adlai Stevenson, for instance — are drowned by the rolling thunder of Senatorial oratory concerning the conspiracy of godless Communism.

Yet there is an ineradicable human tendency to regard the man who holds the gun as the one who is doing the heist. It is not necessarily true. The man with the gun may be a cop; but if he isn't in uniform and doesn't show a badge the crowd cannot be blamed for getting the wrong idea.

Truman recognized the importance of appearance when the Korean affair broke, and he was careful to get the United Nations to give us a large and shiny badge before we pulled a gun. It is since Truman's time that we have dropped Jefferson's principle of showing "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind." If a pair of Communist Senators might help us mind our manners, even that heavy price might not be too much.

John R. Riley To Address Press Club

John R. Riley, former UNC journalism student and teacher, will speak to the Press Club Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norval Neil Luxon.

Riley will talk on the public relations field in journalism. His experience in the field has come from work with Carolina Power and Light Company of Raleigh, for which he is director of publicity.

In 1958, a book on the fiftieth anniversary of Carolina Light and Power by Riley was published.

After he graduated with a degree in journalism from UNC in 1933, he worked with the Raleigh News and Observer. Later he taught journalism here.

Other business at the Press Club meeting Monday will be election of new officers and discussion of the annual awards banquet and softball game.

Club members may get rides to the dean's house by coming to Bynum at 7:15 p.m. Monday.

April 5 Is Deadline For WBT Scholarships

High school students wishing to try for WBT $2,600 4-year scholarships in radio, TV and motion pictures may apply at the University by April 15.

The deadline for applications was extended today from April 1 to April 15 it was announced by Earl Wynn, director of the Communications Center here and chairman of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures.

Each scholarship is for four years and is valued at $625 a year—awarded by WBT-WBTV-WBTW in Charlotte.

Winners may elect to study at the studios in Chapel Hill (in the creative production department) or to study electrical engineering at State College in Raleigh.

Applicants may get necessary information from the Scholarship Office, P. O. Box 1330, Chapel Hill.

The WBT-WBTV-WBTW scholarships were established six years ago by the Jefferson Standard Foundation. It is counted "an investment in top-flight people for the radio and television industry."

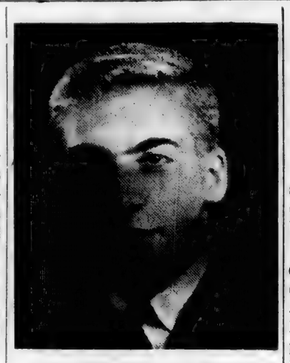
The Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures at Chapel Hill has access to the facilities of the Communication Center which consist of radio station WUNC (FM), the Chapel Hill studio of WUNC-TV, a photographic laboratory with facilities for producing motion pictures, and a recording laboratory.

The Department of Electrical Engineering of the School of Engineering at State College is highly developed and provides outstanding opportunities for those interested in engineering for radio and television. Further information may be secured by writing to Dr. George Hoadley, Chairman of the Department of Electrical Engineering, The School of Engineering, North Carolina College of Agriculture and Engineering, Raleigh, N. C.

Former TV Actress To Perform At Meet

Katherine Real, former TV actress, will sing and do Brazilian folk dances at the Cosmopolitan Club meeting Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Rendezvous room.

Miss Real worked as a TV actress in Brazil.



Albert Joseph Lank, freshman, died in his sleep at his residence in Bethesda, Md. last Friday.

Funeral services were held for him Monday in his home community.

Lank resided here at 308 Avery Dormitory and was an active participant in Alpha Phi Omega, service fraternity.

Lank was the son of Myra and Everett S. Lank, also residents of Bethesda.

Public Health Puts Seven On Council

The School of Public Health has seven faculty members on the Governing Council of the American Public Health Association.

Dr. Sidney S. Chipman, professor of maternal and child health, is an elective councilor of the association. Also serving in this capacity are Dr. John T. Fulton, professor of public health dental epidemiology; Dr. Edward G. McGavran, dean of the UNC School of Public Health and Dr. Herman G. Baity, emeritus professor of sanitary engineering.

Dr. John J. Wright, professor of public health administration, is chairman of the Standing Committee on Eligibility. The chairman of the Standing Committee on Evaluation and Standards is Dr. Bernard G. Greenberg, professor of biostatistics.

Dr. Robert E. Coker Jr., research professor in public health administration, is chairman of the Committee on Health Officers.

Chamber Music Here Sunday

A chamber music recital will be held Sunday at 8 p.m. in Graham Memorial. This will be the fifth Petite Musicale of the spring semester.

Performers in the recital will be Emily Kellam of Raleigh, harpist; Suzanne Parker of Chapel Hill, violinist; Terry Jones of Chapel Hill, pianist; and the University Spring Quartet, with Thomas Rice of Chapel Hill as string bass player. The series is sponsored by the music committee of Graham Memorial.

The program will include Camill Saint Saens' Fantaisie for Harp and Violin, which Miss Kellam and Miss Parker will perform; Paul Hindemith's Third Sonata, performed by Miss Kellam and Miss Jones; and Debussy's Danses Sacrees et Danse Profance, to be performed by Miss Kellam and the University String Quartet.

The Quartet is composed of Edgar Alden, violinist; Jean Heard, violinist; Dorothy Alden, violist; and Mary Gray Clarke, cellist.

Miss Kellam is a graduate of the Oberlin Conservatry of Music and has performed in the Dallas Art Museum and the North Carolina Art Museum in Raleigh.

She also appeared as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony during the 1951 and 1957 tours, and as orchestra harpist with the UNC Symphony. She has studied the harp with Carlos Salzedo.

Miss Parker, currently studying with Edgar Alden, is a graduate of Peabody Teachers College, Nashville, Tenn. She has played five years with the Nashville Symphony and has toured with the North Carolina Symphony. She currently is a member of the Duke Symphony and the UNC Symphony.

Radio Club Beams Far During March

North Carolina, Germany, Alaska, Thailand, Panama Canal Zone—these are but a few of the five countries and 15 states that received messages from the UNC Amateur Radio Club station W4WE during March according to Jimmy Scott, president.

Much of the "traffic," amateur radio term for messages, was due to the Easter Special run by the club before the spring holidays.

"Our message count climbed from 25 for February to 64 for March," Scott said, "and is expected to climb still higher as the presence and facilities of the club become more well known."

The club is willing to send messages anywhere in the United States, possessions and to military and embassy personnel almost anywhere in the world.

At present there are temporary boxes in the Y and in Graham Memorial for depositing any messages. These soon will be replaced by permanent boxes. After 5 p.m. the organization may be reached by calling 3916.

Archaeologist To Speak To Institute Here Soon

The president of the Archaeological Institute of America, Prof. George E. Mylonas, will be here Monday, April 13, to address the Institute's North Carolina Society.

Professor Mylonas, who is connected with the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N. J., will give an illustrated lecture, open to the public, at 8 p.m. in 105 Gardner Hall.

He will tell of one of his main archaeology digging areas, the ancient ruined city of Mycenae in southern Greece. Mycenae was the capital city of King Agamemnon, who led the Greeks against Troy, and whose quarrel with Achilles forms the opening theme of the "Iliad."

Prof. J. P. Harland, UNC archaeologist, announced the program for the N. C. Society of the Archaeological Institute of America.

Professor Mylonas taught for some 25 years at Washington University in St. Louis where he headed the Department of Art and Archaeology. Born in Smyrna, Turkey, he became a U. S. citizen in 1937. He holds the Ph.D. from the University of Athens, Greece, and has studied at the Johns Hopkins University.

He has dug at major excavations in Greece, including Haghios Kosmos, Eleusis, Olynthus, Akropotamos and Mycenae.

World Youth Festival Has Affiliation With Communism

Students considering attending the World Youth Festival in Europe this summer have been urged by the UNC Student Government Executive Committee to investigate the purposes of this organization before considering it in their plans.

The Tenth National Student Congress passed a special resolution stating that last year's Congress approved USNSA's refusal to be represented officially at the VI World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship.

The recent history of the World Federation of Youth and the sponsors of the Festival indicate that the organization is incapable of providing an objective program, according to the UNC committee. The World Federation of Youth has had, from its inception, a constitutional tie with Communism, the committee reported.

The committee also stated that the character of past festivals since the first event in Prague in 1947 has been such that cultural programs were sharply obscured by a partisan, political approach. These Festivals were not fundamentally student events, but were weapons designed by the Soviet government to further its own partisan goals in the field of international politics.

The 1957 Moscow Festival differed from previus ones in that increased contact between individual Soviet and American citizens was permitted. Even then such contact was neither included in the formal program nor encouraged. The factor was not sufficiently important to warrant official participation by USNSA or other representative American student organizations.

The Executive Committee said the conduct among students of any international meetings should be free from any partisan cnsideration and should be directed towards the promotion of building international understanding through the free exchange of ideas.

The Festival does not meet this requirement, and the UNC student government said it joins NSA in the hope that students will continue to seek contact by other means which will lead to lasting friendships and development of understanding.

Community Church Sets Dedication Date

Dedication of the new building of the local Community Church will be held April 5-12, with the Rev. Charles M. Jones, pastor, preaching the dedicatory sermon on Sunday, April 5, at the morning worship services.

Dr. James T. Cleland, dean of Duke University chapel, will speak at 8 p.m. April 6 as part of the dedication program. His subject is, "The Church in the Community."

The long low-lying, $90,000 structure is located on a 14-acre wooded tract between the Purefoy and Mason Farm roads, immediately past Victory Village. George Matsumoto, member of the school if design faculty of State College, was the architect.

The new church building has a seating capacity of 325 in the auditorium. There are four Sunday School classrooms on the main floor and three in the basement. The pastor's study and the church office are in the west end of the main floor. A completely equipped modern kitchen also is in the building.

The Rev. Mr. Jones has been pastor of the Community Church since it was organized in August 1953 with 60 members. Present active membership is 249, with a Sunday School enrollment of 191.

Gene Strassler is director of music and Lee Bostian is organist.

Open house for the Chapel Hill community and surrounding area will be held at the church during the afternoon of April 5 from 2:30-5 o'clock.

TOUR THROUGH SEVERAL INDUSTRIES

Kappa Psis Look At Their Future

Members of the Alpha Kappa Psi, a professional business fraternity, recently got a first hand look into their futures.

A two-day tour of business and industry in the Charlotte area highlighted the fraternity's professional activities. The trip included visits to Belk Stores Service, Inc., American Commercial Bank, Lance, Inc., The Douglas Aircraft, Inc., Esso Standard Oil Company, Celanese Corporation and Package Products Company.

The members considered the visit to the missile plant the highlight of the tour. Alpha Kappa Psi was the first such group to ever tour the Douglas plant. Because of the security involved in the top secret work, the tour was delayed until the day work shift was finished. Members were able to see assembly stages of the Army Nike missile from initial inspection of raw materials to shipment to defense areas.

The advantages of a spacious physical plant and office facilities were revealed by the visit to the Esso offices. The members saw credit card facilities, components for instituting general pricing policies and the advantages of sufficient office space.

A tour of the Belk Stores Service, Inc. introduced the members to practical marketing problems of a large-scale wholesale establishment. The services offered by the organization include advice on problems of accounting advertising, architecture, taxing and general management. The group also visited a retail outlet of the Belk firm.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled for today in Graham Memorial are as follows: Board of Directors of Graham Memorial, 4-6 p.m., Grail Room; GMAB, 1:30-3:00 p.m., Grail; Newman Club 7-10 p.m., Roland Parker 1 and 2 and Woodhouse Room; International Affairs, 2-3 p.m., Woodhouse Room; Dance — Nick Kerns Combo, 8-12 p.m., Rendezvous Room.

Organizational Meeting Is Planned

Graduate Students affiliated with Westminister Fellowship, Wesley Foundation, Canterbury Club, BSU, YMCA, and other campus religious organizations have been notified of an organizational meeting of a proposed inter-denomination religious activity for graduate students on the UNC campus.

The initial meeting will be held Friday at 5:30 p.m. in the upper conference room of Lenoir Hall.

The topic for discussion will be "Meeting the Religious Needs of the Graduate Student on a University Campus." Its aim is to evaluate the effectiveness of existing religious organizations in respect to the needs and interests of the graduate student and to determine if a campus-wide inter-denominational organization can meet the intellectual and religious needs of the graduate student.

of the University and of his willingness to devote himself to vitally important, but unseen, tasks," Furtado pointed out.

He added, "Anyone who has had any close dealings with Norman Smith will admit, whether he agrees with him or not, that he has been willing to hear all sides before making any decision."

"Smith has been courageous enough to state his views on controversial issues without political timidity," Furtado asserted. He went on to say that Smith's statements had been distorted by some, but that all who have listened to Smith realize that his statements are based on a sincere desire to help the University rather than on mere political motives.

George Allen To Address Assembly

George V. Allen, director of the United States Information Agency, has been chosen as chief speaker for the Model United Nations Assembly sponsored by the Collegiate Council of the United Nations April 9, 10, 11.

Allen, former U. S. ambassador to India, will speak at the second plenary session, Friday, April 10, at 8 p.m.

The keynote address Thursday, April 9, will be given by McNeil Smith, a lawyer from Charlotte.

Churches Form Topic For Historian

American church groups and their relation to secular affairs formed the discussion topic for a UNC historian, Dr. Robert M. Miller, at the recent annual conference of the Southwestern Social Science Association.

Miller, an assistant professor in the UNC Department of History, has just returned from Galveston, Texas, where he commented on two historical papers during the conference.

The papers concerned "Southern Baptists and Race Relations, 1865-1900," and' 'The Opinion of the American Churches on Nazi Germany."

Labor, Water Are Assets

New South Growing, Attracting Industry

"The New South, the industrial South, is growing and attracting industry with the advantage, among others, of two particularly valuable assets: a labor force anxious to do a good day's work for a day's pay and good water resources."

George R. Herbert cited these assets here Thursday night before the eighth annual Southern Municipal and Industrial Waste Conference, sponsored by the Department of Sanitary Engineering of the School of Public Health.

Herbert is president of the Research Triangle Institute of the Research Triangle Foundation. This organization, physically located in the area betwen Durham-Raleigh-Chapel Hill, has been founded to attract and aid new industry in North Carolina.

"We are conscious of the fact that the South," Herbert said, "with only five per cent of the textile industry in 1880, today has 50 per cent of the nation's spindles. Much of the newer industry, for example, the burgeoning chemical industry, which is providing a broadening base of diversification for our economy, is attracted by that rare and invaluable combination—good workers and good water."

Herbert said man's dependence on water is absolute and complete. "As individuals, we realize that we cannot exist without adequate water supplies, nor can the industries which produce the goods we require and which provide our livelihood. One might assume that the vastness of the seas makes water a limitless resource and that we need not worry about our dependence upon it. We know, of course, that this is not true."

The institute president said that in practice, the utilization of water is limited by the rate at which it flows down our streams and rivers from the watersheds, where it has been dumped as rain or snow, back to the ocean, thereby completing the never-ending cycle. "Until science provides us with a cheap, efficient method of purifying sea water," Herbert explained, 'we are solely dependent upon—and our community and industrial activities are limited by—the natural flow of our streams. This is true even though we may artificially impede the flow with dams and store the water or divert it through man-made channels."

The two-day meeting got underway yesterday and will conclude today. Other North Carolinians appearing on Thursday's program included Dr. Daniel A. Okun, UNC School of Public Health; UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock; Prof. Emil T. Chanlett, UNC School of Public Health; Gen. James R. Townsend, Greensboro city manager and chairman of the N. C. Water Resources Commission; Wade G. Brown, assistant superintendent of the Durham Water and Sewer Department; Fred V. Doutt, Champion Paper and Fibre Co., Canton; Dr. Henry T. Clark Jr., administrator of the UNC Division of Health Affairs and UNC President William C. Friday.

Library Given Old Books

The Library of the School of Pharmacy has received two gifts of old pharmacy books.

Mrs. Ralph P. Rogers Sr. of Durham donated 15 books from the library of her father, the late DeWitt C. Swaringen, who was a pharmacist of China Grove. Dr. J. E. Adams, UNC professor of botany, presented four books he used when he was a student at the Columbia University College of Pharmacy in the early 1930's.

Minter Points To Role

up misunderstandings concerning the General Surplus.

Minter said, "His untiring efforts have placed the students' $120,000 budget in the best condition it has been for many years."

Discussing Gray's work in the executive branch, Minter pointed out that Gray has served on the president's cabinet and the Chancellor's cabinet, enabling him to get a good overall picture of student government and administrative action.

He continued by saying that by being an NSA delegate last summer and a member of the Consolidated University Student Council, Gray has seen the workings of other colleges across America and has applied this information to making improvements here at UNC.

Concerning Gray's principles, Minter said," He is truly moderate against radical idealism, but he is truly liberal when improvements can be made in a rational manner."

Heels Meet ECC Here At 3

Carolina's Tar Heels go after their sixth win of the season here today when they meet East Carolina at 3 in Emerson Stadium.

The Heels enter the fray with a fine 5-1 record, having lost only to Illinois. Carolina edged Ithaca 4-3 in its last contest.

East Carolina has been doing well in its conference, the North State.

Captain Ben Harding is expected to get the call for mound duties today. Harding has an 0-1 record for the season. Another possibility is John Stott (1-0).

Coach Walt Rabb will be hoping to get his sick players back into the line-up today. Missing against Ithaca were Tommy Camp, John Burgwyn, Al Baldwin and Tommy Saintsing.

The Tar Heels go into today's game with a 17 game winning streak in Emerson Stadium. The last time the Heels tasted defeat before the home folks was April 13, 1957, when they bowed to Duke 9-4. They didn't lose a home game all last season.

Today is Carolina's last non-conference game, as they head into the thick of the ACC pennant chase Monday. The Tar Heels get started out against strong opposition; they travel to play defending champion and as yet undefeated Clemson on Monday.

Netters Begin Crown Defense Against Terps

The Carolina tennis team begins its defense of the ACC championship this afternoon at 3 o'clock when it meets Maryland on the home courts.

The Tar Heel netters will take a losing 1-3 mark into today's action as a result of two losses to Rollins during the Easter vacation. After dropping the first match of the season to Illinois 5-4, the Carolina team rallied the next day to whip the Illini 6-3 before it suffered 5-4 and 6-3 setbacks in Florida.

Despite the poor overall mark Coach Don Skakle's crew is favored to take the Terps today since Maryland mentor Doyle Royal has only three lettermen returning from a team which posted a 7-6 record a year ago.

Skakle will shift his lineup around for the visitors from College Park on the basis of how well certain players did in Florida. Captain Geoff Black remains in the number one spot, but he will be followed by Bruce Sylvia, the team's only unbeaten singles player.

Ben Keys, who won both of his singles matches against Rollins, will be playing third. Marshall Happer has been dropped to fourth with Walker Lockett and Tommy Ricks rounding out the starting six.

Tomorrow the netters meet Virginia and Monday they face South Carolina in other conference matches.

Golfers Take On Michigan

The undefeated Carolina golf team goes after win number three today when it plays host to Michigan on Finley Golf Course at 1:30.

The Tar Heels have crushed Indiana (24-3) and Cornell (23-4) so far this season in their only two matches.

Every member of the six-man squad is undefeated, the only black mark on there cord being a tie in the Cornell match.

Coach Chuck Erickson's crew will start with Don McMillan, Ed Justa, John McKee, Bob Galloway, David Sloan and Hugh Goodman.

McMillan and Justa have been the medalists in the two previous meets. Justa fired a one-under par 71 against Indiana and McMillan did the same against Cornell.

The Tar Heels hit the links again Saturday against Davidson.

THE CARE AND FEEDING OF ROOM-MATES

Room-mates are not only heaps of fun, but they are also very educational, for the proper study of mankind is man, and there is no better way to learn the dreams and drives of another man than to share a room with him.

This being the case, it is wise not to keep the same room-mate too long, because the more room-mates you have, the more you will know about the dreams and drives of your fellow man. So try to change room-mates as often as you can. A recent study made by Sigafoos of Princeton shows that the best interval for changing room-mates is every four hours.

How do you choose a room-mate? Most counselors agree that the most important thing to look for in room-mates is that they be people of regular habits. This, I say, is arrant nonsense. What if one of their regular habits happens to be beating a Chinese gong from midnight to dawn? Or growing cultures in your tooth glass? Or reciting the Articles of War?

Regular habits, my foot! The most important quality in a room-mate is that he should be exactly your size. Otherwise you will have to have his clothes altered to fit you, which can be a considerable nuisance. In fact, it is sometimes flatly impossible. I recollect one time I roomed with a man named Osage Tremblatt who was just under seven feet tall and weighed nearly four hundred pounds. There wasn't a blessed thing I could use in his entire wardrobe—until one night when I was invited to a masquerade party. I cut one leg off a pair of Tremblatt's trousers, jumped into it, sewed up both ends, and went to the party as a bolster. I took second prize. First prize went to a girl named Antenna Radnits who poured molasses over her head and went as a candied apple.

But I digress. Let us turn back to the qualities that make desirable room-mates. Not the least of these is the cigarettes they smoke. When we bum cigarettes, do we want them to be shoddy and nondescript? Certainly not! We want them to be distinguished, gently reared, sestful and zingy. And what cigarette is distinguished, gently reared, sestful and zingy? Why, Philip Morris, of corris! Any further questions?

To go on. In selecting a room-mate, find someone who will wear well, whom you'd like to keep as a permanent friend. Many of history's great friendships first started in college. Are you aware, for example, of the remarkable fact that Johnson and Boswell were room-mates at Oxford in 1712? What makes this fact so remarkable is that in 1712 Johnson was only three years old and Boswell had not yet been born. But, of course, children matured earlier in those days. Take Mozart, who wrote his first symphony at four. Or Titian, who painted his first masterpiece at five. Or Hanso Felbgung, who was in many ways the most remarkable of all; he was appointed chief of the Copenhagen police department at the age of six!

It must be admitted, however, that he did badly. Criminals roamed the city, robbing and looting at will. They knew little Hanso would never pursue them—he was not allowed to cross the street.

Ike Cautions NATO Against 'Illusions Replacing Reality'

Must Plan For Life In Tension

WASHINGTON, April 2 (UP) — President Eisenhower today cautioned the Atlantic Pact countries against "substituting illusions for reality" in searching for new agreements with Russia to reduce world tension.

Speaking as an old soldier, Eisenhower appealed for free people to display courage, sacrifice and perseverance while their governments carefully explore for just solutions to existing East-West deadlocks.

We must be prepared during the years ahead to live in a world in which tension and bickering between free nations and the Soviets will be daily experiences," he said.

Eisenhower spoke at ceremonies commemorating the tenth anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Some 1,400 delegates and distinguished guests from the 15-member countries gathered in the gold and cream colored Interdepartmental Auditorium on historic Constitution Avenue to hear Eisenhower deliver a keynote address at the opening session.

Worry over the Berlin crisis, combined with a drizzling rain and mist, lent a subdued air to the start of the three-day meeting called to review defenses against Soviet attack.

In the afternoon, delegates including 12 foreign ministers turned to a closed door discussion of what new proposals should be made to Russia to ease the Berlin crisis while promoting German unity, disarmament and European security.

The main item of business was a report by the U. S., British, French and West German governments on a two-day conference which ended here yesterday without agreement on what concessions to offer the Soviets.

The four main allies were reported split, with the United States, France and West Germany opposing Britain's suggestion they concentrate on solving the Berlin situation even at the cost of delaying German unity moves.

Eisenhower avoided mentioning the Berlin crisis directly in his brief address. But he pledged to "make concrete and realistic proposals" about the over-all German problem in a move to improve relation with Russia.

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter followed Eisenhower's lead in cautiously favoring negotiations. He likewise made no direct reference to Berlin but talked about the need for "A genuine resolution of the issues which threaten peace."

Two of the foreign leaders of the defense alliance, Secretary General Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium and Foreign Minister Joseph M. Luns of the Netherlands, brought out into the open their concern over Berlin tensions.

Two Students, Marine Indicted For Forgery

Two Carolina students and a Marine private have been charged with forgery of a signature on checks.

Joseph Friedberg, a senior from Great Neck, N. Y., and Frederick G. Renneckar, a sophomore from Fort Alleghaney, Pa., were arrested Wednesday by the Chapel Hill police in connection with a forgery involving the cashing of $150 worth of checks at the Bank of Chapel Hill.

Marine Private John A. Fox of Camp Lejeune and New York City was arrested last Thursday for the same case. The delay in arrest of the students was caused by their absence for spring holidays.

At a preliminary hearing Wednesday before Judge William S. Stewart, the three were bound over to the Orange County Superior Court.

Friedberg and Renneckar were released on $300 bonds and the Marine was placed in the county jail pending payment of a $300 bond.

Private Fox was brought to Hillsboro and placed in the county jail last Thursday after he confessed to cashing the checks, according to Police Chief William D. Blake.

Blake reported that Renneckar admitted Wednesday that he wrote two checks which bore the name of a UNC football player, Ed Furjanic.

Friedberg allegedly supplied the transportation to the main bank and to the branch bank to have the checks cashed.

MAKE-UP QUIZ

A make-up quiz for orientation counselor candidates will be held Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in 268 Venable.

Orientation Chairman David Parker said Friday that students who had not turned in their applications for counselors may do so before the quiz.

Students unable to take the make-up quiz have been asked to contact Parker at the orientation office at 8410.

WUNC-TV To Feature Dance Show

A special dance sequence will be featured on WUNC-TV's credit course, "Music Appreciation," Monday at 7 p.m.

Dorothy Berea Silver, Anne Betts Coxhead and Foster Fitz-Simons will present four baroque dances from "The Suite in G minor for Harpsichord" by Jean Baptiste Loeillet, choreographed by Mrs. Silver.

Formerly a member of Martha Graham's dance company, as well as those of Merce Cunningham and Pearl Lang, Mrs. Silver last appeared in Chapel Hill as Laurie in the dream ballet sequence of the Carolina Playmakers production of "Oklahoma."

Mrs. Coxhead, who teaches children's creative dance in Chapel Hill, formerly was dance instructor at the University of Illinois, Louisiana State University and Shorter College.

Foster Fitz-Simons, associate professor of dramatic art at UNC, was a member of Ted Shawn's dance company for several years. He has been associated with the University since 1942, and for the past eight years has been choreographer and associate director of "Unto These Hills," the annual historical production at Cherokee.

"Music Appreciation," televised on Channel 4 every Monday and Wednesday evening from 7 to 7:45 p.m., is coordinated by William S. Newman, professor of music at the University.

Germans Dance Stars Kenton, Four Frosh

The Germans Club will present Stan Kenton and the Four Freshmen at its annual Spring Germans April 10 and 11. Kenton will be featured at the dance Friday from 9-11 p.m.

He will perform with the Four Freshmen at the concert Saturday afternoon from 3 till 5:30.

Kenton is thought by many to be the greatest name in jazz and dance music. He is noted for his continuous efforts to reach new dimensions in jazz stylings and expression.

In 1943 the Kenton name began to reach national prominence with the release of the famous "Artistry in Rhythm." Some of his more famous instrumentals are "The Peanut Vendor," "Eager Beaver," "Collaboration," Interlude" and "Artistry in Boogie."

The Four Freshmen were given their first boost to stardom by Stan Kenton in 1950.

Since then they have had such hit recordings as "Day by Day," Graduation Day," "Charmaine" and "Whistle Me Some Blues."

$123,000 Budget Presented To Solons

A $123,000 budget was recommended to the Student Legislature Thursday night by the Budget Committee of which Charlie Gray (UP), student body treasurer, is chairman.

The budget, presented by Gray, was set up with an anticipated enrollment of 5,525 undergraduates and 1,925 graduate and professional school students in mind.

The total Unappropriated Balance was $4,477.58. This does not include wire service appropriations for the Daily Tar Heel or an allotment for the senior class gift.

The University Club was cut entirely from the budget due to the inefficient use of funds during the past year.

An increase of $1,000 was allotted the Inter-Dormitory Council. Gray said the committee felt that the IDC had been quite effective the past year and deserved the added appropriation.

From a request of $1,300, the Graduate Club was given $150. The Club wanted the added amount to sponsor a series of speakers of interest to graduate students. However, the Budget Committee felt that this paralleled the activities of the Symposium and Carolina Forum too closely and therefore was an unnecessary request.

The Carolina Quarterly was appropriated $2400 to publish two issues per year. According to Gray, the Committee felt that the magazine is merely to promote UNC's reputation off campus and that two issues per year should be sufficient.

The entire budget will be debated by the solons at the next session of Legislature.

Speaker Ralph Cummings urged legislators to bring up any suggested changes through the Finance Committee, so as to minimize the discussion next week.

Ann Harvey's (UP) bill to ablish the system of having oral interviews to select jurors for the trying of honor Council cases was tabled.

MANAGER

The business manager for the Carolina Handbook will be chosen by the Selections Board of the Publications Board Thursday at 4 p.m.

Any interested persons may appear at this time for an interview in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

Further information may be obtained by contacting Harold O'Tuel, chairman of the Publications Board.

GMAB Co-Chairmen Announced By Duff

New co-chairmen of Graham Memorial Activities Board committees were announced Friday afternoon by GMAB President Angus Duff.

The new co-chairmen for 1959-60 were approved by the Graham Memorial Board of Directors Friday.

Six committees have co-chairmen this year so as to combine the experience of two qualified persons, Duff said.

Listed with their committees the co-chairmen are as follows:

Calendar Committee, Bob Grub and Louis Gump; Social Committee, Hal Miller and a coed to be announced later; Films Committee, George Grayson and Stan Black; House Committe, Cynthia Grant and Stewart Priddy; Publicity Committee, Randal Etheridge and Ed Riner, and Star Series Committee, Russell Link and Rudy Walldorf.

The Star Series Committee was organized from the former Student Entertainment Committee.

Other new chairmen of GMAB committees are Jerry Stokes, Current Affairs Committee; Sally Pullen, Drama Committee; R. V. Fulk, Music Committee, and Warren Jackson, Tournaments Committee.

"I am looking forward to working with these new co-chairmen in order to have a successful year," Duff said. He added that majority of the chairmen are fraternity and sorority members "giving a wide span of experience which will be necessary for next year's work."

There will be a compulsory meeting Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the GMAB office for both old and new chairmen, Duff emphasized.

GM Committees Sponsor Original Student Opera

The Music and Drama Committees of GMAB are sponsoring an original-student written opera in the latter part of April.

The opera, "Whatever Passes Along the Paths of the Sea," by Thomas Rice, graduate student in the Music Deparmtent, and Russell Link, a graduate student in the Drama Department, will be presented April 18-19 in the Playmakers Theatre at 8 p.m. It will be preceded by a short chamber cantata, "Fully Clothed in Armor, With Her Shield and Spear, Athena Emerged From Zeus's Forehead," also by Rice and Link.

The opera is based upon the Medusa-Perseus legend with variations.

Ethel Casey, soprano from Raleigh, will sing the role of Cassiopoia, Rebecca Carness, Chapel Hill, will sing Andromeda; James Gibbs, tenor from Asheville, will sing Cepheus; Marilyn Zachau, mezzo-soprano from Raleigh, will sing Medusa and Hunter Tillman, baritone from Roxboro, will sing Persaus.

Martii Preston, Raleigh, will perform the Casual Woman and the King's Mistress, and Darwin Solomon, Kernersville, will dance the Snake Master.

Also in the cast will be Chanault Spence, Carolyn Meyers, Margaret Starnes and James Tedder.

The opera is scored for an instrumental ensemble and will be conducted by the composer. In the ensemble will be Martha Halliday, flute; Bill Evans, flute; Eddie Bass, trumpet; Fred Rieser, trumpet; Jim Lambeth, trombone; Bill Kellam, tuba; Joanne Gouldon, percussion; Nancy Walker, piano-celeste; Daniel Gore, guitar; Ted Quest, violin; Don Fouso; violoncello.

Russell Link is directing the opera, and sets and costumes are designed by Robert LaVine, New York. John Sneden has adapted and executed the designs for the productions.

Marilyn Zachau, as Hera, and Wayne Garber, as Zeus, will sing the contata. Ted Quest will accompany on the violin and Don Fouse, violoncello.

The production will be presented free of charge.

University Party, Student Party Candidates Air Views

Young Will Continue 'To The Last Minute'

Davis Young, sole remaining candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, yesterday announced that even though he is without opposition in Tuesday's election he will continue campaigning "right up to the last minute."

Young said, "I want to acquaint as many students as possible with my plans for the paper. Even though these plans have already been discussed at length, I know that there are many students who can only be reached through personal contact."

"I fully intend to keep the promise that I have consistently made throughout this campaign to stay out of partisan politics. I repeat that as editor, I will not be a participant in the activities of either political party.

"However, I will comment vigorously on issues confronting both of the political parties and the Student Legislature.

"I would like to take this opportunity to thank the many people who have worked so faithfully for me during this campaign. I owe thanks to a large number of people in both the University and Student parties, as well as a great many independents.

"I would particularly like to single out my two campaign managers Art Shields and Hunton Tiffany, whose aid and advice throughout the past few weeks has been a constant source of strength.

"There are of course a large number of others who have contributed to my campaign in some way. I would like to extend my gratitude to Jan Cobbs, Jo Carpenter, Jey Deffell, Al Goldsmith, Bill Norton, Roger Foushee and the many others who have expressed confidence in me.

"I sincerely hope that I will be able to produce a paper that is of service to the students and which reflects credit on the University. It is my hope that The Daily Tar Heel during the next year may help in solving many of the vital problems and issues which are so important to students."

Candidates' Expenses Are Due

Itemized expense accounts of candidates in the April 7 elections are due in to the Elections Board before 6 p.m. April 6.

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Board, said Friday that failure to submit an account of expenditure would impose a $5 fine on the candidate on the condition that the account be turned in within 24 hours.

If the candidate fails to pay the fine within 24 hours, he would be disqualified. Patterson said disqualification would also result if a candidate failed to submit the expense account in question.

Expense accounts may be obtained in the student government office or from the chairmen of the University and Student parties. The completed expense accounts may be turned in also at the student government office.

Committee To Continue Rush Study

The Faculty Committee on Fraternities decided Friday to continue its study on deferred rushing throughout the next academic year.

George Esser, chairman of the committee, said the Faculty Council at a meeting Friday, took no definite action on fraternity matters.

Speaking of new fraternity courts, Esser indicated that they "did not consider" it at the meeting. "The Faculty Council does not have jurisdiction on this matter and only listens to recommendatins on locations," he said.

Public Rally Attended By Few Students

John Minter predicted a five candidate University Party sweep in the spring elections at the Public Rally held last night in Gerrard Hall.

University Party candidate for president Charlie Gray declared that although he was opposed to deferred rush, he would accept it, if the faculty of the University established it.

Student Party candidate for president Norman Smith pledged himself to a program of action in meeting some of the critical needs of the University.

Smith cited some of those needs as adaptation to a growing campus of student government so that it does not lose ties with the people of the campus. He pledged assistance to the University in providing for itself adequate funds for maintenance of continued high standards.

Gray cited problems in both dormitory and fraternity areas, and pointed out that he was opposed to mixed honor councils, but was in favor of combined IDC-IFC co-operation in helping plan campuswide events.

Gray in response to questioning said that he was a citizen of the United States and hence would respect and uphold the 1954 Supreme Court decision on segregation.

John Brooks explained that the Student Party candidates are a team dedicated to continuation of solid, progressive student government.

Both David Grigg (UP) and Jim Crownover (SP) pledged their help in maintaining good attendance records in the Student Legislature and for establishing legislation to require legislators to meet with their constituency.

Grigg advocated a government of "study" in which committees were formed to analyze the many student problems.

Crownover spoke in favor of judicial revision including the mixing of academic honor council cases and opening trials to the public if the defendant so desires.

Experience was cited by Erwin Fuller as a crucial factor in determining who would serve as treasurer the next year. The Student Party candidate cited his three year experience in student government.

Bob Bingham, University Party treasurer candidate, described his professional financial experience, and cited interest as the important

Forum Will Present Beckett's 'Endgame'

"Endgame" by Samuel Beckett will be presented in cooperation with the Freshman Forum on April 30 and May 1 according to co-producers Freeman Bayley and Leonidas Capetanos.

Tryouts will be held tonight at 7:30 in the YWCA.

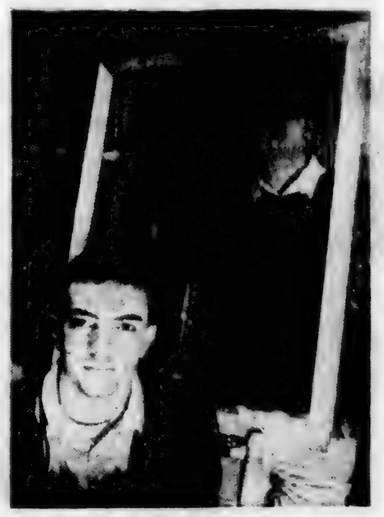
Douglas McDermott, a graduate student in dramatic arts will direct the play. He is a graduate of Pomona College in Claremont, Calif., and has directed several plays previously.

This is the first time a Beckett play has been produced in the South.

Capetanos commented, "This is not a commercial venture, but an adventure into the soul of genius."

Author Beckett has been writing for small audiences for many years. Saturday Review has called Beckett the "most remarkable writer to emerge since World War II."

Beckett was born in Dublin and now lives in Paris, writing most of his works in French. He prepares his own translations for the English audience.



CAPETANOS AND BAYLEY

Diplomacy

Sometimes American diplomacy goes from the sublime to the ridiculous

Such a case is illustrated by the retaliatory decision of the State Department to close the avenues of travel to Russian diplomats so that their presence in the United States is restricted to Washington and New York.

This followed close on the heels of a similiar Soviet decision to restrict travel of Americans in the Soviet Union to Moscow and Leningrad.

The issues involved are too serious for the U. S. to play cry baby about the whole thing.

The United States is supposed to be the bastion of freedom, where nothing but the most needed defense secrets are hidden from its public. Restricting travel, thus, is contrary to what the U. S. stands for, and is setting up a new Red, White, and Blue curtain over its own affairs.

The extreme pettiness is only a further indication that the United States is following Russia's lead in the field of diplomacy, and this following has often led the United States into ways contrary to its stated principles.

The time spent in deciding whether to restrict Soviet travel in the United States might have been more profitably spent ascertaining the reasons for the Soviet action, for that action is indicative of a new attitude shift in the Soviet Union which has been manifest for several months.

The cold war is getting colder, and the Berlin deadline is getting closer. The United States had better think of extricating itself from the problems it has in Europe, the Middle East, and Southeast Asia before it pursues any further retaliatory policy.

The time for thought is now.

Honor Council

After a long struggle and a surprising outcome, the Pi Phi sorority finally got a chairman of the Women's Honor Council.

With all kidding about sorority politics aside, Sandy Trotman is to be congratulated, and the Pi Phis are lucky to have such a capable girl.

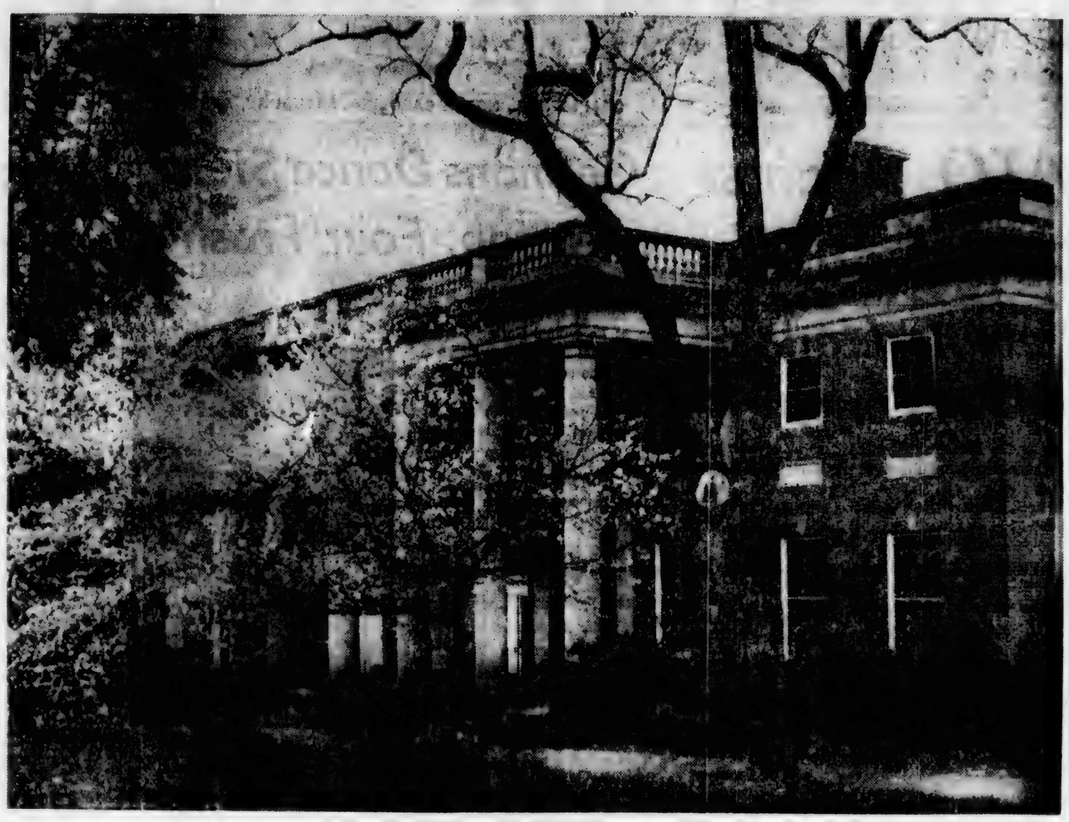
Student Government Report

Don Furtado



As the 1958-1959 Student Government term comes to an end. I feel that it is proper to submit to the students of the University of North Carolina a brief report of the accomplishments of Student Government during the past year. It is my hope that this report will provide valuable information to the students and will serve to point up various problem areas which must be confronted in the coming year.

(1) Dormitory Visiting Agreement—An agreement was reached with the Dean of Women's Office to allow visiting in dormitory social rooms by women guests. This agreement has been needed for a number of years, and, though it is presently not as extensive as we hope it will be due to a lack of proper dormitory facilities, it should serve as a long stride toward the creation of a mature dormitory social atmosphere.

(2) Parking Meters—In the spring of last year, the town announced its intention to place parking meters along fraternity and sorority areas on Columbia and Franklin Streets. A protest was made, and subsequent appearances were made before the Merchants Association and Board of Aldermen. The results were only partially satisfactory, for, though it was decided not to place meters in front of fraternity or sorority residences, some parking places were lost to the students. The response of individuals residing in these areas to Student Government's request for numerical support at appropriate meetings was generally disappointing.

(3) Student Associate Director on Merchants Association Board—Out of the parking meter controversy came an agreement between Student Government and the Merchants Association to place one student on the Board of Directors of that group. Gordon Street, who was a great aid in previous work with the merchants in the parking meter debate, was appointed to this position. Subsequently, a Student Bad Check Committee has been established by Student Government with Gordon as head. This committee is not judicial in any form but is merely a notification service for the merchants by Student Government. Presently several extensive plans are being discussed by the merchants, and student representation has been assured. In the coming year, it is felt that the Associate Director will be able to build extensively on the foundations of cooperation begun this year.

(4) Wall Telephone Booths—Numerous dormitory phones have been damaged both intentionally and accidentally during the past year. Much of this was due to the lack of privacy, the inefficiency, and the construction of most dormitory wall phones. In an effort to correct these conditions, Student Government approached Mr. J. S. Bennett, of the Operations Department, concerning the installation of wall phone booths of the nature of those in Graham Memorial and the Y.M.C.A. As a result a number of these have been installed, and their success assures expansion as finances allow.

(5) Codification of the Student Government Statutes—In order to provide a source of reference to all laws previously passed by the Student Legislature, the staff of the Attorney General has codified all statutes passed in the twenty-five sessions since the Student Legislature's organization.

(6) Class Attendance—In an effort to get University professors to abide by the intent of the unlimited cut provision instituted last year, a letter from Student Government was sent to each member of the University faculty. Certainly, the results of this communication were far from being entirely satisfactory, for though the overwhelming majority of professors have illustrated a sincere desire to establish a mature absence policy, there are a few who still insist upon wholly irrational attendance requirements.

(7) Publications—In an effort to set down publications policy and to remedy various unsatisfactory publications practices as extensive revision of bylaws of the Publications Board, the body responsible for supervision of the eighty thousand dollars expended by various publications, was adopted. This document, which clarifies such areas as composition, financial procedures, awarding of contracts, selection of editors and business managers, etc., should be of great service in the future. Credit should be given to Harold O'Tuel, Chairman of the Publications Board, for his efforts in this field.

(8) Conduct at Football Games—Conduct by some students at our first two or three football games was ungentlemanly, to say the least, and was discreditable to the student body as a whole and the University. In an effort to remedy this, Student Government initiated a campaign for more appropriate conduct. Student Council action was taken in several cases. At the request of the student delegation, the Athletic Council has decided to enforce conduct regulations at future football games. Though there is nothing wrong with drinking per se, when it infringes upon the rights of others to enjoy athletic contests, appropriate action must be taken. In the future, all persons, students and otherwise, who cannot conduct themselves properly will be required to leave the stadium.

(9) International Student Board—In past years, students at the University have not illustrated proper attention to our students from other lands. These students have all shown outstanding ability in order to come here to the University, and, by not realizing the full potential for mutual understanding and knowledge which they offer, our student community has missed a great deal. As a result, an International Student Committee has been established by Student Government along with an advisory board of representatives of the Cosmopolitan Club, Y.M.C.A., N.S.A., Graduate Club, Campus Christian Council, etc. This board will concern itself with assisting the University's foreign student advisor, foreign student orientation, publicizing available exchange scholarship, administration of the Goettingen Scholarships as well as establishing programs to allow more contact with all elements of the campus with those foreign students who may wish to participate.

(10) Foreign Student Leadership Project—For the second straight year, the University of North Carolina has been one of the fifteen campuses selected to participate in NSA's Foreign Student Leadership Project under which student leaders from other countries are brought to American campuses to observe and take part in Student Government and campus activities. This year's participant is Jose Lopez from Bolivia.

(11) Open Stacks—In an effort to alleviate congestion at the circulation desk, the Student Library Committee recommended that an open stack policy be used by the library on an experimental basis. This is now being done, and results have thus far proven satisfactory.

(12) Attorney General's Staff—In order to guarantee better separation of powers for complete investigation of all cases and less demand on Student Council and Women's Honor Council members, the Attorney General's Staff now investigates all Campus Code cases in addition to Honor Council cases which was its sole responsibility earlier this year.

(13) Scuttlebutt in New Dorms—The Student Campus Stores Committee, under Jim Crownover, was successful in convincing the administration of the need for a Scuttlebutt in the new dormitory area. This has already been installed and is functioning, and plans are under way for the construction of a larger separate facility of the nature of the Scuttlebutt across from Peabody Hall.

(14) Date Tickets—In past years arrangement for reduced price date tickets for football games were not made until the fall which sometimes resulted in unsatisfactory planning or no date tickets. A meeting has been held with Mr. Chuck Erickson, Athletic Director, and the following tentative dates have been set on which one-half price date tickets will be available: South Carolina, October 10 (This is Band Day and Dad's Day.); Tennessee, October 31 (This is Homecoming.) One-half price tickets will also be available to UNC students for the Duke game in Durham on November 21. It will be impossible to arrange date tickets for the Clemson game on September 19, because it is only two days after school opens. The game with N. C. State, on October 3, is Consolidated University Day, and State College and WC will be here in force presenting a seating problem. There is a possibility that date tickets could be made available for the Virginia game on November 14. All these arrangements are tentative to the action of the Athletic Council in early April.

(15) Self-Liquidating Dormitories—A committee was established to study dormitory construction policies in other colleges, and Norman Smith was appointed Chairman. A lengthy report was compiled, presented to the administration, and later to the Trustees. The Trustee report is devoted largely to this area. In the recent recommendation of the Advisory Budget Commission of this State, partial self-liquidation (which would cause no room rent increase) is recommended. The efforts of Dean Fred Weaver and Smith are to be highly commended.

(16) Study Areas—A committee was established to study the adequacy of various study facilities on campus. Subsequently three classrooms were opened as all night study rooms, and a list of needs of study rooms in women's dormitories was prepared. These needs were presented to the Director of Operations and have been partially alleviated with the assurance that further efforts will be made as finances permit.

(17) Student Government Personnel—Several years ago, the employees of Graham Memorial, who are paid with Student Activities Fee Funds, were declared to be State employees by the Attorney General. This decision has resulted in much confusion over the relationship of these employees to the University, over their salaries, over whether or not they fall under the State Personnel Act, etcetera. The complications would require pages to explain, but it may be sufficient to point out that it is the feeling of many that the decision could possibly pose a threat to the traditional autonomy of Student Government. In an effort to gain a clarification of the decision, various documents have been presented to the administration, and the Attorney General of the State is now in the process of re-considering the previous decision, this time including other student employees who work in the Student Activities Fund Office and in the Student Government Office. A decision is expected within the next few weeks.

(18) Audit Board—The Audit Board is the student group which is responsible for the management and supervision of the $1,900,000 passing through the Student Activities Fund Office. In past years, it has often not functioned as it should. This year, it has succeeded in clarifying various financial policies, in formalizing employee benefits and policies, and in exercising more adequate supervision of student monies.

(19) Committee on State Affairs—Realizing that this year is an important budgetary year for the University, a Student Committee on State Affairs was organized.

Loss Of False-Face

Criticism

Bill Bailey

There are many puzzling facets to our modern social order, of which, the most oblique is the criticism of the critic. Our culture is a nice flat-bed boat in the middle of a serene lake of complacency; anyone who splashes or makes waves is immediately pinioned by the state, the church, and the indignant populace. There are three basic complaints that the social plaintiffs hurl: (1) that the attitude is flippant; (2) that the content is merely repeating the obvious; (3) that they are not "constructive."

As to (1), I shall refer to a rather famous quotation for an answer: says Russell, "This serious purpose inspires them even if, at times, they seem flippant, for those who are solemn and pontifical are not to be successfully founght by being even more solemn and even more pontifical." In relation to (2), certainly the obvious must be pointed out before the intricate is even attempted; and also what is obvious in hindsight is hardly so in foresight. But it is (3) that most of the spittle is flung upon, and it is (3) that I will most concern myself with.

The common retort that the destructive critic receives is that well-known and insipid, "If-you-are-to-tear-something-down - why-don't-you - build - something-better-in-its-place?" statement. This is today, it seems, the fashionable reply to the critic; it is now in vogue; it is Ivy. They apparently stand by the argument that everything worthy of being torn down is worthy of having something built in its place. I think that this is due more to our poverty of imagination, than anything really rational. Could you actually think of anything really "constructive" to say of the poetry in the belated SPECTRUM? I think not; it would be sheer stupidity to try to evaluate it as anything more than palpable rubbish. Why, its not even a poor imitation of Pound or Cummings . . . One may as well praise the aesthetic merits of a dictionary. Can the idea of patriotism really be of any value to the mind of man? Again, I think most certainly not. Goosestepper, drum beaters, rabble-rousers, all. Patriotism is nothing more or nothing less than a direct appeal to the mob instinct, which is to say, one of the most ignoble instincts extant in Christendom. If there is anything here more than brazen hypocrisy, then the glitter of it all has certainly blinded me . . . It is extremely well hidden. However, people will continue to load their critical guns with the ammunition taken from the "constructive" stockpile; it doesn't bother them if someone points out that these bullets are blank . . . its enough just to fire them for the noise that they produce. It must be then, that these persons are deluding themselves with that cronic Hope that is imbedded deep inside; the same Hope that clings to the idea of Happiness for mankind through democracy and religion. There seems to be no way to convince these hopers that they are doing no more than pumping water out of a ship wrecked on the reef of insolubility . . . and they want to go down with the ghost ship.

Now, let my claim not be misunderstood. I feel that there certainly are praiseworthy institutions both intellectually and ideally, and the critic should come to their aid as aid is needed. But the worthy causes have a tendacy to be crowded out as the useless ones grow and linger. Instead of heaping plant-grower on the worthy causes, I think that the garden should first be weeded of the many undesirables. Human nature is a queer bird that attaches itself to almost any convenient and irrational chicanery, and to dislodge it is the job for a task force in itself. There is something uncanny about the tenacity of the human claw to this ghost-cause . . . and when there is rubbing about the sensitive areas, howling occurs. And to control the resulting noise, the fashionable set needles the critic with the "constructive" argument . . what they want is free-wheeling, easy-going, and soothing criticism, one that neither makes waves, nor bites deeply enough to ruffle the feathers.

Howsomeever, there is very little chance any kind of criticism will really provide much philanthropic aid to society; the machinery is kept too well oiled. The Pontiffs who hold the controlling strings of mankind always manage to give the gears and pinions a regular grease job to grind over opposition with little more than a bump or a slight let-up in speed. The complacent are safe . . . they are flies in a land where there is no flypaper.

THE FADED IMAGE

By Wade Wellman

The first time we saw him,
He seemed like a god;
And his voice struck our minds
Like a powerful rod.
Square-shouldered and mighty,
And strong in his pride,
We felt that the campus
Bowed under his stride.

The next time we saw him,
And heard his strong voice,
It roused our excitement,
It made us rejoice;
But something was missing—
Now something was dead.
And something was lacking
In all that he said.

The third time we saw him,
We only could think
That his image had faded
From scarlet to pink.
His stature seemed smaller,
His strength had declined;
And the voice which once gripped us
Had fallen behind.

At times yet we see him—
He walks on his way;
And he's just like the others
We meet every day.
In him there is nothing
Save that which we spurn;
And the image of power
Will never return!

O PRESIDENT'S POST

APO Elects Etheridge

...ndal Etheridge was elected ...sident of Carolina's Rho Chapter Alpha Phi Omega at a meeting ...sday night.

...theridge, a sophomore, was ...ted by acclamation to follow re-tiring president Harold Johnson.

The late Joseph Lank had been elected recording secretary, but the chapter did not receive word of his death until after the election.

Elected treasurer was Pat Morgan; corresponding secretary, Don Marshburn; alumni secretary, Allan Spader; sergeant-at-arms, Al Johnson and historian, Neil Murphy.

Larry Hayer, chairman of the Parents Day Committee, discussed plans for Parents Day to be held May 3. Hayer pointed out that postage to send notices to all parents of students would amount to over $280 and that additional financial support from the University administration would be needed.

Press Women Meet

TO ADDRESS PRESS WOMEN—Author Betty Smith and editor Jonathan Daniels are featured speakers for the North Carolina Press Women who are holding their annual spring institute here this weekend. Miss Smith, Chapel Hill resident who wrote "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn," is scheduled to speak at the opening session this afternoon. Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, will address a banquet at 7:30 p.m. today at the Carolina Inn. Some 100 women are expected to attend the meeting, which will end Sunday with an election of officers and presentation of press writing awards.

Law School To Hold Separate Elections

The Law School will hold separate elections Tuesday to name officers to the Law Students Association.

The election officials expect a "large turnout" after last night's rally held at 7:30 in the Law School Court Room. Last year only two law students did not vote.

Running for president of the association are Linwood Peoples, Jim Burrows, Bob Farmer and Lyn Hobbs.

Candidates for vice president are Bill Stagg, Bob Page, Dwight Cranford and Hilary Doughtery.

Secretarial candidates include Louis Singleton and Lynwood Thompson. J. C. Moye, John Barnhardt and Frank Brown are running for treasurer. Candidates for chief justice of the Honor Court are Harold Watters, Tom Ray and Duane Johnson.

Polling Places will be maintained in the foyers of the Law Building.

SYMPOSIUM PROGRAM COMMITTEE

A meeting of the Symposium Program Committee will be held Monday at 4 p.m. in Di Hall, third floor New West.

factor in selecting a treasurer.

Smith added on the question of deferred rush that he was at first startled but soon elated by the decision of the faculty committee on fraternity and sororities to postpone consideration of deferred rush until a later time.

He said that this would give student government a chance to study the problems surrounding deferred rush and have solutions ready so that deferred rush can be brought into existence with greater ease.

Davis Young, unopposed editor candidate, Sue Wood, UP secretary candidate, and Ann Lucas, SP secretary nominee, also spoke.

Coming Events

All permits to take examinations to remove grades of "Exc. Abs." or "Cond." must be secured from the Central Office of Records prior to the exam. No students may be excused from a scheduled examination except by the University Infirmary, in case of illness; or by his General College Adviser or by his Dean, in case of any other emergency compelling his absence.

Covering The Campus

STATISTICS COLLOQUIUM

Two mathematical statisticians of UNC, Dr. R. C. Bose and Dr. S. S. Shrikhande, have solved a problem concerning pairs of Latin squares. The solution will have a bearing on the art of designing efficient agricultural and industrial experiments.

The problem, its solution, and applications to experimental design, will be described by Dr. Shrikhande at a meeting of the Statistics Colloquium Monday at 4 p.m. in Room 206 Phillips Hall.

Dr. Bose has been Professor of Mathematical Statistics in Chapel Hill for the past nine years, and Dr. Shrikhande is now Visiting Associate Professor of Statistics. His topic Monday will be "The construction of pairwise orthogonal Latin squares."

INTRAMURAL COUNCIL

There will be a meeting of the Joint Intramural Council Monday night in Woollen Gym at 7 p.m. All managers must be present because all spring intramural events will be discussed and entries accepted.

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

The Philological Club of UNC and The Erasmus Club of Duke University have a joint meeting on Monday, April 6, at 8 p.m. in the Green Room of the East Duke Building (Duke Woman's College Campus).

Professor Raymond Adams of the Department of English, UNC will present a paper entitled: "Whitman's Strange Lapse."

All faculty members, graduate students, and members of their families are invited.

Harding Pitches Tar Heels To 4-2 Win Over East Carolina

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels took advantage of five East Carolina errors here yesterday and parlayed the mistakes into a 4-2 victory.

Ben Harding went the route and got the win for Carolina. Harding allowed six hits, but had a one-hitter until the seventh inning.

The victory moved Carolina's season record to 6-1. Monday they take on defending ACC champ Clemson at Clemson.

Two in First

Carolina jumped on ECC starter Larry Ellen for two runs in the first inning. Carroll Bolick crashed a long double to supply the power, but was called out when he tried for an extra base. Russ Hollers was called out at home but the catcher dropped the ball, allowing the run to score.

ECC came back with a run in the third. Burl Morris slapped a single to score Jerry Carpenter ahead of him.

The Tar Heels added another in the fourth when Harold Workman singled, went to second on a wild pitch and 3rd on a passed ball, then came in on an error by the second baseman.

Carolina got its last run in the seventh. Larry Craver walked and was advanced to second on Gerald Griffin's sacrifice. He galloped in when pinch-hitted Dave Dale clouted a single to left center.

Harding in Trouble

Pitcher Harding was in bad trouble in the eighth inning, but escaped allowing only one Pirate run. ECC nicked Harding for three straight singles, but Jim Martin grounded out with the bases full and two out.

Harding, who boosted his won-lost record to 1-1, struck out 10 Pirates and walked only three. Both runs against him were unearned.

East Carolina got the same number of hits as the Tar Heels, six, but couldn't put them together at the right time. The Pirates committeed five miscues and the Tar Heels two.

Carroll Bolick, a sophomore catcher batting in the cleanup slot, had a perfect 2 for 2 day in addition to two walks. Both of Bolick's hits were doubles.

Palmer Leads Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. — (AP) — Arnold Palmer, a golfer with little regard for golf's traditions, made his bid Friday to become the first player ever to win two Masters tournaments in succession.

Palmer, one-time Wake Forest star, took over the lead at the halfway point with rounds of 71-71—141 on the wind-toughened, 6,980-yard Augusta National course. Then he calmly said he wasn't concerned about the tradition that the Masters' winner doesn't repeat his victory.

"I'm just concerned about winning the tournamet," he said.

Palmer flouted one Masters' tradition when he won last year with a solid 284. He was the youngest player in more than 20 years and he showed that years of experience aren't necesary to tame the beautifully fearsome Augusta National course.

More than a half dozen others had torn par to tatters Friday before Palmer, a strong-armed son of a veteran Latrobe, Pa., professional, finally established himself as the leader.

High School Clinic Held Here

Thirty four high school baseball teams and their coaches have registered for the first annual North Carolina high school clinic at the University of North Carolina Saturday. Sessions will be held at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Carolina coach Walter Rabb, who has organized and will direct the clinic, said the invitation is still open to all the state high schools, and coaches and teams may come without previous registration.

Assistant coach Harry Lee Lloyd, freshman coach Pat Earey and Henry House, a former assistant and freshman coach, will assist Rabb in instructing at the clinic, which will be held at Emerson Stadium. Members of the Carolina squad will participate in the demonstrations.

The clinic's agenda calls for instruction and demonstrations in pitching and catching, base running and sliding, infield and outfield techniques, hitting and bunting, and play situations.

Rabb said the purpose of the clinic is to generate interest in both college and high school baseball in the state.

Netters Stop Maryland Team By 8-1 Score

The Carolina tennis team swept past Maryland yesterday afternoon 8-1 for its second win of the season in five decisions.

The victory over the Terps gives the Tar Heel netters a 1-0 ACC mark to take into today's match against Virginia.

In the only match of the day which required three sets to settle, Maryland sophomore Chuck Abelson tripped Carolina captain Geoff Black 7-9, 8-6, 6-2 for the lone Terrapin victory.

Bruce Sylvia, playing in the number two spot for Carolina, continued his winning ways by defeating Al Citenbaum 6-2, 7-5. The Tar Heel sophomore remains undefeated in singles play so far this year with a 5-0 record.

Coach Carl Rohmann's Cavalier squad which faces the Tar Heels here this afternoon boasts five lettermen returning from a team which was 8-2 last year.

The Summary

Singles—1. Abelson (M) defeated Black 7-9, 8-6, 6-2. 2. Sylvia (C) defeated Citenbaum 6-2, 7-5. 3. Keys (C) defeated Beall 6-2, 6-1. 4. Happer (C) defeated Palmer 6-3, 6-0. 5. Lockett (C) defeated Capozello 6-1, 6-0. 6. Ricks (C) defeated Scobel 6-0, 6-1.

Doubles — 1. Sylvia and Happer (C) defeated Palmer and Citenbaum 6-1, 6-0. 2. Ricks and Lockett (C) defeated Beall and Scobell 6-1, 6-4. 3. Keys and Causey (C) defeated Capozello and Lackey 6-1, 6-3.

MURAL SOFTBALL

This spring, there are 12 more teams entered in the Intramural softball action than there were last year. The total number of entries this year has reached 74 compared to 62 entries last year.

The entries by division are: 18 teams in the Dormitory division, 12 in the Fraternity White division, 26 in the Fraternity Blue division and 8 in the Graduate division.

With this field of entries it is hoped and expected that the race for the division championship and even the campus championship will be a very strong and healthy one.

The winners last year were: Cobb in the Dormitory division, PiKA in the Fraternity White division, Kap Sig in the Fraternity Blue division and Med Sch in the Graduate division. The all-campus winner was Med Sch.

MANAGERS' MEETING

There will be a managers' meeting Monday night at 7:30 in room 301-B Woollen Gym. This meeting will be very important to all managers. It is urged that if a manager cannot attend that he send an alternate to represent him.

Topics for discussion will be the Big 4 Rod and Gun Meet and the Big 4 Sports Day.

Also it will be the deadline for entries in golf, tennis, badminton and water polo.

FROSH GOLF

All those students interested in trying out for the freshman golf team should report to the golf course Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday for qualifying purposes.

Golfers Beat Michigan 18-12

Number one man Ed Justa fired a three-under par 69 for medalist honors, in addition to defeating his opponent 3-0.

There were seven matches played instead of six, as Michigan brought the extra man.

The summary:

Ed Justa (C) defeated Ray Lowell 3-0

Don McMillan (C) defeated Chuck Blackett 2½-½

Best ball—Carolina 3-0

Pat Keese (M) defeated David Sloan 2-1

Joe Brissom (M) defeated Bob Galloway 3-0

Best ball—Michigan 3-0

Hugh Goodman (C) halved with Larry Markman 1½-1½

John McKee (C) defeated Dick Youngberg 3-0

Best ball—Carolina 2½-½

Don Coker (C) halved with Larry White 1½-1½

Clemson Tracksters Here Today

Two blistering duels at 440 and 880 yards between UNC's Dave Scurlock and Clemson's John Dunkelberg will highlight today's initial varsity outdoor track meet at home as the Tigers, coached by Banks McFadden, invade Chapel Hill for dual combat with the Tar Heels, which begins at 3 o'clock.

Scurlock, ACC outdoor champion in both races, will have his hands full with the lean, smooth-striding Dunkelberg who just last week followed a 49-plus quarter with a 1:53 and a fraction half in a meet against Wake Forest.

Other Tiger stars who bear watching are Paul Snyder, who threw the javelin 220 feet in the Wake Forest meet, hurdler Wilbur Simmons, sprinter Bob Ervin, and distance man Walt Tyler.

For Carolina, slender Wayne Bishop will run and should have little trouble winning both the mile and the two-mile; Ray Stanley, who scored 6.37 points in last week's Florida Relays, may have trouble with Snyder in the javelin, but should be all alone in the broad jump; and pencil-thin Lyndon DeBorde is a good bet to cop both hurdle events.

In the running events, John Sylvester may push both Scurlock and Dunkelberg in the 440, Cowles Liipfert and Bob Foxworth may do the same in the half if they don't go the mile, and Alex Coffin and Bing Somers will back Bishop in the two mile.

In the sprints, Carolina's hopes rest on Wally Graham, Bob Eubanks, Danny Droze, and Tony Arey; and in the hurdles, DeBorde is backed by Charlie Sowers.

Shinning in the field events for the Heels are Ward Sims in the pole vault and broad jump, Fraser Smith and Jim Shumate in the discus, Don Kemper and Jerry Phaup in the shot, and John O'Neal in the javelin.

Tops in the high jump are Wally Graham and Bob Sherrill, and in the broad jump, other than Stanley and Sims, there are Eubanks and Ed Brawley, which makes this one of Carolina's strongest points.

Rounding out the meet will be the mile relay as always, and the likely Tar Heel foursome will be Sylvester, Benjy Seagle, John Fox, and Scurlock.

Senior Class Candidates Speak Out

SP Candidates

Student Party candidates for senior class officers outlined several plans for a class program in a statement released Saturday.

George Grayson, candidate for president and spokesman for the other officers, presented a five-fold program including the following ideas:

"1) a top-notch graduation speaker.

"2) a meaningful class gift.

"3) reduction of senior apathy toward campus life.

"4) inculcation of meaning into Senior Day, and

"5) more extensive senior planning in the preparation of senior functions."

In addition to Grayson, the other SP senior class officer candidates are: for vice president, Dave Evans; secretary, Martha Morgan; treasurer, John Crotty, and social chairman, Bunky Jester.

Commenting on his candidacy, Grayson said, "I should very much appreciate the opportunity of lending my energy, past experience and speaking ability to this job. I have explored the position quite thoroughly and have on three occasions discussed its functions with the present class president."

UP Candidates

Several plans for the senior class of 1960 were presented by University Party candidates for senior class officers in a statement Saturday.

The UP candidates proposed (1) the continuation of the present scholarship award, (2) a class gift to the University which will be useful. (3) a class weekend with a "well planned" schedule of activities and (4) a class project to be part of the class weekend.

For the class project, the UP candidates have specifically in mind holding a benefit baseball game between two major league teams. The game would be held in the spring of 1960. Proceeds would be turned over to a reputable charity as selected by the senior class at large.

The University Party candidates for senior class offices are as follows: Wade Smith, presidential candidate; Dick Pattisall, vice president; Cynthia Grant, secretary; Jim Crawford, treasurer, and Marion Hays, social chairman.

The candidates said, "We want to try our best to cooperate with our fellow seniors in making the coming year one that will be long remembered and treasured."

KAPPA SIGMA ELECTS

Colin Frazer Smith, a rising senior from Southern Pines, N. C. was chosen President of Alpha Mu Chapter of Kappa Sigma for the coming year in elections held recently. Assisting Smith next year will be Reginald Fulton Johnston of Concord, Mass. as Vice President, James William Thompson of Dunn, N. C. as Secretary, Michael Stewart Lanham of Fayettville, N. C. as Treasurer, William Carroll Jacobus Jr., Raleigh, N. C. as Grand Master of the Ritual, Robert Whitworth Cunningham of Wilson, N. C. as Pledge Trainer, and James Sparger of Mt. Airy, N. C. as Intramural Manager.

Gray Describes Type Of Student Government

A final statement Saturday from Charlie Gray, University Party candidate for president of the student body, described the type student goevrnment he would run if elected.

This type student government would mirror the students of all areas of the campus and of both political parties who have been supporting him when they go to the polls to vote Tuesday.

Retracing some phases of the current political campaign, Gray said, "During the campaign, both presidential candidates have mentioned 'returning student government back to the student.'"

Gray explained that he had not meant that statement to imply backward motion of student government by the present administration. "I have highest regard for the present administration, especially since I have been a part of it.

"I meant by my statement that I hope to bring the average Carolina student much closer to the actual operations of student government. I believe this is a necessity for a representative student government which I hope to be able to give the campus."

Talking about deferred rush, Gray mentioned he was pleased the Faculty Council decided to wait another year before making any decision on the issue.

"If I am eleted, this will give student government the chance to help the IFC in improving the present rush system and academic phases of fraternities. If this can be done, I am confident fraternities will be allowed to continue with early rush," he said.

Gray also stated that the UP executive candidates have attempted to conduct a clean campaign and "have succeeded in doing so. We have had much mud that could have been thrown, but felt the students should vote on the qualifications, plans and personal character of the candidates."

The UP candidate said student government "must have a president who understands every phase of student government, as well as every phase of campus life."

Gray again pledged that he would give the campus a progressive, realistic and representative student government.

UNC Radio Will Carry Rally Excerpts

WUNC-FM Radio will broadcast highlights of the Friday night UP-SP political rally Monday night at 11:30.

The broadcast can also be heard at 6:45 a.m. in Joyner, Alexander, Connor and Winston dormitories.

This special program will include speeches by Charlie Gray and Norman Smith, UP and SP candidates respectively for student body president. The speech by Davis Young, candidate for editorship of The Daily Tar Heel, will be included in the program.

"This is an experiment in collegiate broadcasting," said Jack Mayo, WUNC student manager. "We are interested in receiving comments from listeners to this special broadcast."

This is the first time WUNC has presented such a program to the students on the campus.

Bob Bingham Coordinates Youth Week

Several Carolina students will be in charge of the annual Youth Activities Week at the University Methodist Church for students in the seventh through the twelfth grades.

The days for the program will be April 19-24.

Bob Bingham, who is coordinating plans for Youth Activities Week, said the program is held to provide religious inspiration for junior high and high school students.

The program will begin Sunday night, April 19, with a movie. The schedule for the other days of Youth Activities Week will include recreation, supper with a speaker, discussion groups and a worship service.

The theme, "Chose Christ, Chose Life," will be carried out in the speeches and discussion groups.

Speeches during the week will be given by Dr. Bernard Boyd and Marvin Berry of the UNC Department of Religion.

Leading discussion groups will be Chuck Gerke for the seventh grade, Danny Lotz, eight and ninth grades; Webb McCracken, tenth grade; Diana Johnson, eleventh grade, and Wade Smith, twelfth grade.

Harvey Salz and Pete Range will be in charge of recreation. The worship service will be conducted by Peggy Brown, Betsy Fitch and Kermit Sigmon. Monty Milner will also assist in carrying out Youth Activities Week.

Advising the UNC students who are in charge of the program are Mr. and Mrs. Albert Graham, heads of the youth departments at the University Methodist Church.

Chi Omegas Honor N. C. Woman Jurist

Judge Susie Marshall Sharp of Reidsville and UNC coed Joann Darlene Wallace of Durham were honored Friday night with awards presented by the local Chi Omega sorority.

The awards were given during their annual Eleusinian Banquet at the Carolina Inn.

Judge Sharp, "scholar, lawyer, judge, administrator," is the recipient of the North Carolina Distinguished Service Award for Women in 1959.

The Sociology Award, given annually to the best women student in that field, was presented to Miss Wallace, a senior.

Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House presented the award certificate to Judge Sharp, a UNC law graduate who is the only woman to hold a special Superior Court judge's post in North Carolina.

The citation stated: "Because her unique accomplishments represent a high elvel of achievement for womanhood, Susie Marshall Sharp has been selected unanimouusly as the recipient in 1959."

Signed by chapter president Decia Jeanette Elder of Siler City and by Chancellor William B. Aycock, the citation mentioned high points of Judge Sharps career: her admission to the bar in 1928 and practice with her father's firm from 1929 to 1949; her service under three governors as Special Superior Court Judge.

It also noted that she is the only woman member of the committee for the proposed revision of the North Carolina Constitution, and commended Judge Sharp, "who by her sincerity and personal integrity in her chosen field has promoted the cause of justice."

JUDGE SUSIE SHARP

Huntington, Carter Endorse Norman Smith

Norman B. Smith, Student Party candidate for president of the student body, drew endorsement statements Saturday from Charlie Huntington and Bob Carter.

Huntington, who has been acting as campaign adviser to Smith, commented that the president of the student body, "the most responsible position on campus," is charged with two major responsibilities.

These responsibilities, he said, were:

"1. On every question, he must necessarily and infallibly consider what is best for the University at large. To do this, he must think objectively on every matter confronting him. Objective thinking is undoubtably the most challenging part of his job.

"2. He must then formulate and initiate the action necessary to accomplish the best possible results in light of his decision. To bring about these results, he must do his utmost, as well as lead his associates to do likewise in their respective roles."

Huntington said he was "convinced" Norman Smith embodied the characteristics mentioned. "Norman is fully aware of what the job will entail and I know he is well qualified for the position.

"He has worked tirelessly for the students of the University this year. A persual of his work this past year clearly indicates that Norman is a man of accomplishment."

A man who will think objectively is what the University needs, Huntington believes. "The University is changing at a tremendous pace. Student government must keep abreast of this progress to remain and maintain the role which it has played in the past."

Bob Carter, president of the Graham Memorial Activities Board, emphasized that the student body president has an important job as a member of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors.

"During the coming years there will be a great need for experience and wise leadership in the student union area. We are going to have to continue to work toward acquiring a new union building and this necessitates working with the campus and, in many cases, the state," Carter said.

The person who will do the better job, Carter said, is Smith. "His interest and experience in research into student needs and his work with the administration, Board of Trustees and State Legislature qualify him for the task ahead in the student union field, as well as in other areas of student government."

Patterson Recognizes Printing Error

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board, said Saturday the name of Martha Custis had not been printed on the ballots for the Tuesday spring elections because of a "clerical error."

Miss Custis is an independent candidate for president of the Women's Athletic Association.

Patterson said she contacted the Elections Board about her candidacy after reading in the newspaper that there was only one candidate for WAA president. When she notified the Board, the balltos had been printed.

Miss Custis also told the Elections Board she had submitted a petition of her candidacy. Patterson said her petition could not be located.

He said Miss Custis' name has been stamped on the ballots under the name of the other candidate for WAA president, Catherine Bolton.

Candidates Reminded Of Expenses

With election day drawing near Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board, reminded candidates of their expense account and the student body of ballot counting and of graduate voting.

He stated that an itemized description of any campaign expenses and expenditures must be turned in to the Elections Board by each candidate on or before 6 p.m. Monday at the student government office in Graham Memorial.

"Failure to submit an account of expenditures by Monday at 6 p.m. shall cause a fine of $5 to be levied against the delinquent candidate," he said.

And failure to pay the fine within 24 hours of its occurence shall result in disqualification. Expense account forms may be obtained in the student government office or from the party chairmen.

Patterson also reported that the ballots will be counted Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock on the second floor of Graham Memorial. He urged all students to come to Graham Memorial and help count votes.

Election results will be posted in the main lounge in Graham Memorial.

Graduate students are eligible to vote in this election, the chairman said. "Usually grad students are not aware that they may vote in campus elections," he continued. Polls will remain open until 7 p.m. for grad students.

SP Endorses Davis Young For Editor

Davis Young, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, has received the endorsement for that office from the Student Party.

John Brooks, SP chairman, said Saturday the party's Advisory Board made the endorsement Thursday because "we feel it to be our responsibility to endorse the most qualified candidate in the field for the editorship."

Brooks further commented that the Board made the endorsement in anticipation of possible write-in candidates at the last minute. "Of the possible field that could develop, we hartily give our support to Davis Young," he said.

Fraternity Initiates Professors

Two economics professors, Lowell D. Ashby and Paul N. Guthrie, have been initiated into the local chapter of Alpha Kappa Psi, national professional fraternity in business administration.

Professors Ashby and Guthrie were honored at a dinner following the initiation ceremonies, held at the Alpha Tau chapter house. Faculty members are chosen by vote of the chapter's student members and receive all privileges of full membership.

Ceremonies were conducted by Ed adkins of Wilson, master of ritual for the local chapter.

Alpha Kappa Psi, the first professional fraternity in business administration, was founded at New York University in 1904. UNC's chapter was chartered in 1925. Laurence Wilson of Mt. Olive is chapter president.

Professor Guthrie is chairman of the UNC Departmet of Economics and a member of the UNC faculty since 1946. He is noted for his work as a labor relations mediator. For nine years he taught economics and sociology at Randolph Macon Woman's College, and during World War II he worked for government agencies in labor and wage stabilization.

Professor Ashby, on the faculty here since 1947, has done studies on tax revenues on the national economy. Before coming to Chapel Hill he worked for the Minnesota Resources Commission and for Navy and Air Force research agencies, and taught at the Universities of Texas and Wisconsin. During 1953-54 he studied at Harvard and MIT as a faculty fellow of the Fund for the Advancement of Education.

Henry Snow Announces As Tar Heel Write-In

Henry Snow has announced his candidacy in a write-in campaign for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel.

Snow is a pseudonym for seventeen journalism and other interested students. The students are running for the post as a corporate body under that name. The name was chosen as a single simple name which can be written on the ballot easily and for its legendary significance among journalism students.

The Elections Board, in a meeting Friday, rendered an opinion that this candidate would, in all probability, be ineligible. The Elections Board was pondering yesterday whether they could count Henry Snow ballots.

Hank Patterson, chairman of the Elections Board, said that any decision of the Elections Board could be appealed to the Student Council. At this meeting, Charlie Sloan announced Snow's candidacy.

The students who have assumed the pseudnym of Henry Snow include Thurman W. Worthington Jr., Roy L. Lucas, Stan Brennen, James R. Vance, T. Parker Maddrey, Neil F. Murphy, J. Stanford Fisher, Charles E. Flinner, Alan D. Resch, John W. Hubbard, George Hord, and Charles Sloan.

The students under the name Snow are seeking to produce a college newspaper which is completely independent of any party affiliations, according to campaign manager Charles Flinner. Flinner said "Snow is capable of putting out an independent and responsible newspaper." His experience, or the aggregate of experience among the students running under his name is sufficient to put out the best of college newspapers anywhere."

"The Daily Tar Heel is a student newspaper and not a political fact sheet," Flinner added.

Snow's platform consists mainly of two points. Snow is opposed to deferred rush as an infringment on the rights of students. "Students are primarily responsible to themselves and their parents for their academic standing, not the university," said Sloan, a spokesman for the group.

The other major point the Snow campaign originally tried to make, according to Flinner, is the foolishness of attempting to elect a competent editor by popular vote.

The Snow campaigners feel that deferred rush is the only real and important issue of the present campaign. The editorship campaign itself is a different kind of importance according to the group. "The ability and responsibility of the editor is and this is the issue of the editorimportant to the student newspaper ship campaign," said Flinner.

He added, "If the students are really interested in a responsible and worthy newspaper they will write the name of Henry Snow on their ballots."

Businessman To Be Honored Monday Night

Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity will honor their Outstanding Young Businessman of North Carolina for 1958 at a special banquet Monday.

The Delta Sigs scanned the state with the help of 128 Junior Chambers of Commerces and selected the young man who they believed to be the most outstanding ing business for the year 1958.

He will be honored by the fraternity Monday at 7 p.m. in the Carolina Inn ballroom.

The speaker for the banquet will be George R. Herbert, president of the Research Triangle Institute.

Members of the fraternity, faculty members and officers of the University and special guests will attend.

MODEL ASSEMBLY

There will be an important meeting of the Parliamentarians of the United Nations model assembly at 4 p.m. Monday in the Y.

Bill Schneider, Ed Levy, Curtis Gans, Gary Greer and John Brooks have been asked to be present.

DOUG MOE

Moe Drops Out

Doug Moe, star UNC basketball player, was notified by the administration Saturday that he had been dropped from school because of "excessive class cuts."

Moe said he had no immediate plans for the future.

The 6-5 sophomore from Brooklyn, N. Y. was a key player for the Tar Heels as a first year man last winter and a potential All-America candidate.

He participated in all 25 games the Tar Heels played in compiling their 20-5 record early in the season won a starting berth. He led the team in rebounds with 179 and in free throws with 104 in 164 attempts. He had a .400 shooting average from the floor and finished with 316 points and a 12.6 average.

Moe's high was 32 points in the game with Duke at Durham when he led a rally to bring the Tar Heels from behind with an 89-80 victory.

Honor Council Hands Down Suspensions

The Men's Honor Council placed three students on indefinite suspension and one student on indefinite probation for collaboration and cheating on a geology quiz last month.

Three other students, who were questioned concerning the incident, were acquited.

The council, in action taken during a period between March 5 and April 2, also placed a student on indefinite probation for keeping a car illegally on campus and improperly using a parking sticker.

Another student was indefinitely suspended for cheating on a geology final exam.

Charges were dropped against two boys who had been brought before the council for cheating on a summer school English final exam.

Two boys were found not guilty of cheating on a math quiz.

One student was placed in indefinite suspension for stealing and selling a book to another student. Another student was acquited of the same charge.

The report of action taken by the Men's Honor Council was released Friday by Angus Duff, clerk of the council. Council chairman is Hugh Patterson.

Press Club To Hear John R. Riley

The UNC Press Club will hear a talk on the public relations field in journalism, elect new officers and discuss the annual awards banquet at their 7:30 p.m. meeting Monday.

John R. Riley, director of publicity for the Carolina Power and Light Company, will deliver the featured talk of the evening at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norvil Neil Luxon.

Riley is a former UNC journalism graduate and teacher.

Other businesses at the Press Club will be election of new officers and discussion of the annual awards banquet and softball game.

Club members may get rides to the dean's house by coming to Bynum at 7:15 p.m. Monday.

N.S.A.

There is an old motto; "Don't believe what you hear, and believe only half of what you see." It gives rise to the question of which half, but without going into that question, the motto has relevance to a certain plank of the University Party platform.

This plank calls for a more representative N.S.A. delegation. There is nothing wrong with this plank if taken at its face value, except that this plank is unnecessary, but unfortunately this plank was put in the platform because of a patently false, and totally vicious issue that has been raised in certain quarters.

Before examining the totally false issue that underlies the party plank, one must take a gander at the plank itself. Taking last year as somewhat typical example of the type of representation the campus has had at N.S.A., one finds that of the twelve man delegation, six were the six campus-wide elected officers that the student body had just elected in the Spring. One can also find that the representation was slightly more favorable to the University Party than their showing was on a campus-wide basis last spring, although the amount is hardly enough to quibble about.

The delegation included that noted radical Ralph Cummings, as well as that noted arch-conservative Gary Greer. It included that man of positive decisive liberal action Don Furtado, as well as that foe of all Greek letter interests, Diana Johnson, president of Pan Hel. It included that notorious extremist who has threatened to radically alter the campus judicial system, Paddy Wall, and that staunch champion of the status quo Curtis Gans. It even included that factional candidate of the Student Party currently running for President of the Student Body, Charlie Gray. Indeed, the group represented the most diverse interests, even if they are not exactly the ones attributed them in the above. So, it would be very hard to make the delegation any more representative.

The underlying charge is more serious. The underlying charge is that N.S.A. is a subversive or Communist organization. This charge is a fairly broad one, and if N.S.A.'s structure is examined carefully, it is a charge that the students of America are Communist or subversive, for N.S.A. is no more or less than the national union of students as represented by their elected and appointed leadership. There are close to 300 colleges and universities represented in N.S.A., and last year these colleges and universities sent over 1100 students to the National Student Congress at Delaware, Ohio. The people carried views from extreme segregationist of the Orval Faubus stripe to the farthest left Democratic Liberal of perhaps the Wayne Morse stripe. The resolutions that were passed at the Congress were somewhere between these two, as they have been in all previous Congresses. Then from the structure of N.S.A. and from its established policy as created and voted upon by the students of America, N.S.A. clearly is non-communist, non-subversive, but it is rather an organization dedicated to the fostering of democratic representation of American studentry on the national level. That it is still weak and in its formative stages is true, but the potentialities are immense.

How then does such a rumor arise? The source of this is simple. One summer day last year, a senator who does not like the policies of N.S.A. had a statement entered into the Congressional record, which is the prerogative of any senator to do. The statement was made by J. B. Mathews, former staff member of the House Un-American Activities Committee. The statement created the impression that Mr. Mathews thought the N.S.A. was Communist or subversive, but the text of the statement simply said that N.S.A. was the type of organization open to Communist influence. It further noted that some of the persons connected with the association in the past had been people who were noted for their civil rights orientation—such people as Elenor Roosevelt, to name one. The statement was reprinted by the American Mercury Magazine.

For the time being, it is not necessary to note the numerous replies that were subsequently registered in the Congressional Record to Mr. Mathews' statement, nor is it necessary to recount the numerous replies sent to the American Mercury Magazine which that magazine thoughtfully decided not to publish, thus preserving their editorial position because they would allow no opposition. It is necessary to know a little about J. B. Mathews, so that you the students can judge as to the bias in his statements.

Mr. Mathews is a holdover from the Mccarthy-Velde era when everybody was chasing Communists in government with the surprising result of many firings and only one real Communist turned up—and that case is doubtful also. Mr. Mathews was a small cog in this machine. His job as Louis Budenz's job was to put the finger on the "Communists" or "subversives" that he knew. That he netted not a single one is of some import, but what is of more import was the circumstances surrounding his being fired as a staff person by the House Un-American Activities Committee. This committee has, to say the least, not been a liberal committee, but when Mr. Mathews accused a large percentage of the Protestant clergy of being subversive and condemned this same group by saying that it was one of the largest single forces open

Candidates Comment On Issues

(The following was compiled by Dee Daniels, legislative reporter of The Daily Tar Heel. It was impossible to reach every candidate for legislature, and hence there are some omissions. If these candidates who were left out would answer the questions for their district, they may turn them in tonight, Sunday, to The Daily Tar Heel office and they will be published in Tuesday's paper.)

Dorm Men's I

"Do you think that the drinking rule should be enforced more strictly or not?"

"Are you for or against deferred rush?"

Swag Grimsley, SP candidate for the year seat open in the district, answered as follows: "The drinking rule should be enforced more strictly, especially in the dorms. I do not feel that possession of liquor in the dorms should be a violation, but its use should be controlled.

"The pending resolution submitted to the Student Legislature by the Drinking Rules Committee should go a long way in clarifying both my stand and that of Student Government on drinking at Carolina.

"I am for deferred rush, but only when it becomes practicable and will not cause a loss of autonomy for individual fraternities. I do not think immediate deferred rush is necessary or practicable, but I do forsee deferred rush in the future of Carolina.

Taylor McMillan, SP candidate for the six months' seat open, said as follows: "Of course I can only speak for Cobb Dorm. We often hear of the so-called "liquor problem" at Carolina. I, living in Cobb for three years, have been aware of no such problem. Creation of unnecessarily strict rules often aggravates violations of the same rules. Until conditions call for stricter rules, I would be in favor of the, present liberal interpretation of the drinking rules.

"I am not qualified to answer the question on deferred rush. I am not a fraternity man; neither have I been through "rush." This would seem to be a problem to be solved by those people involved with it."

Dorm Men's II

Candidates in Dorm Men's II answered the following questions:

1) Do you feel the "liberal" cut system adopted last year has been beneficial?

2) Should the fines for campus parking violations go to Student Government or to the town of Chapel Hill?

Allen Simpson, UP candidate for the one 1 year seat in Dorm Men's II replied by saying that he felt the liberal cut system adopted last year has been beneficial, although he felt that improvement could be made in the English I and II area.

As for campus parking violation fines, Simpson feels they should go to Student Government, since campus parking is largely a problem of Student Government.

Bill Norton, SP candidate for the same seat from the same district stated:

"By allowing the faculty to set the number of cuts at their individual discretion, some classes have unlimited cuts while others have none at all. I personally feel that class attendance is essential to good college scholarship; however, I also feel that this should be left somewhat up to the individual student. Therefore, I am in favor of a standardized system of liberal cuts.

"Another important issue of interest to me is the relationship of Chapel Hill, the University, and the students concerning fines for traffic violation. At present the University maintains most of the streets on campus and the parking areas for the students.

"However, the town of Chapel Hill collects all fines for the violations in town and on campus. I contend that the University and preferably Student Government should receive the money collected for violations made on University property. Since the campus "cops" now issue a different type of ticket from the Chapel Hill police it would be very easy to distinguish to whom the fines would be paid. I would propose a policy of set fines for certain violations to be paid automatically to the Cashier's Office without the process of a court hearing. Also, however, there would be an appellation court to hear special cases. This court might be organized under the Traffic Committee. This system is employed at several other colleges and I think it would be effective here."

Big Game Hunting

Dorm Men's III

The questions posed to candidates for Legislature in Dorm Men's III were:

1) If in the last extremity, students were unable to get a new Student Union, would you be in favor of a full student self-liquidation plan for a Student Union?

2) Do you think class officers have accomplished anything?

Bob Smith, SP candidate for the one year seat in Dorm Men's III: stated:

"I would be willing to support a plan to acquire a new Student Union through a self-liquidating policy as a last resort. I would do so because of the great need for such a structure. The Student Union plays a vital role in the life of the University by facilitating many actvities which enrich the lives of campus residents. Thus, due to the present inadequate facilities of Graham Memorial, I would strongly support such a measure.

"I do not think that the present class officers have accomplished a great deal through their endeavors, with possibly the exception of those holding Senior Class offices. However, I feel that I am not familiar enough with their responsibilties to make an intelligent analysis of the work which they have carried on while serving in their respective positions."

Ron Millican, UP candidate for one of the two 1 year seats in DM III replied:

"I feel that after every probable solution has been tried and proved unsuccessful that a self-liquidation plan should be put before the students. If the students were willing to back a self-liquidation plan, then the program should be carried out over a certain period of time.

"The accomplishments made by class officers usually depend upon the individual in office. I feel that most of the students at Carolina who have held class offices have been successful in accomplishing many things. If serious and willing students were always elected then there would be no question about the accomplishments made by class officers."

Vince Mulieri, the other UP candidate for a one year seat in this district answered:

"Make no mistake about it, Carolina need a Student Union." Mulieri feels it could be financed through state aid, and that this is the right method.

"Let us not forget that this is a state supported school, not a student supported school. The second means would be through the self-liquidation plan. Essentially, this means that the student, over a period of years, would pay for the Student Union through higher tuition; higher rents, etc.

"We all know the financial condition the school is in. If we get any money at all from the state, it must go for hiking professors' salaries, to the library, and to other essential needs — not toward a student Union. Thus, the financial requirements will be left up to the students. Should the students pay for the Student Union through the self-liquidation method? I voice an emphatic No!

"Whenever you make an investment, you must consider the risk. Suppose a war comes along and student enrollment drops. Who pays then? In my mind self-liquidation is not financially wise on this campus. Right now, the students in BVP are paying toward expenses of accommodation of a new self-liquidating dorm such as Parker. This is not entirely fair. We must wait until the climate is right, and let the state build our Student Union.

"Since last fall, our class officers have been going through a test period, so to speak. The argument then was that class officers were nothing more than figure heads serving no purpose whatsoever. The Junior Class officers were not incuded in the argument.

"During the past year the class officers have accomplished a great deal. The Freshman Class has done much to improve Freshman Orientation. The sophomore and junior class officers have combined their efforts in establishing a scholarship fund that will be given to a worthy senior each year. The name of the scholarship will be released shortly.

"Just by existing, the class officers manifest an inherent good. No class distinctions are recognized here on campus. The class officers can provide a needed feeling of cohesiveness.

"Each class, through the coordinating efforts of its class officers, can work as a unit toward essential goals. The class officer forms a nucleus from which springs the leadership effort and finally the goal. We have good leaders on the University campus—let's use them. With class officers each class can become an "entity;" without class officers it is a non-entity."

Roy Goodman, SP candidate from Dorm Men's III said:

"Although I see the necesity for a new student union, I feel that the student is now paying for enough projects. Without cooperation from the state we must look for other accesible means of meeting this problem.

"The class officers at Carolina have been mere figure-heads. I feel that the officers, if properly filled, could serve a good purpose. However, unless the class officers this year take a more active interest in their duties, these positions should be done away with."

Dorm Men's IV

Candidates in this district were asked the following questions:

1) How do you feel about mixed honor councils?

2) How do you feel about NSA?

Ed Cox, SP who is running for a one year seat, answered:

"I feel that honor councils composed of both men and women students are basically good. Mixed councils definitely should be considered by the student government administration, but it like so many campus proposals, must be planned with careful deliberation and foresight toward problems that would certainly arise. To achieve and maintain the utmost in proper judicial process, there must be a system whereby equal, not separate, privileges of justice are granted to all students. With such a system the entire student body can be guaranteed fullest equality in judicial matters which most assuredly concern them as a body, not separate groups of students.

"The National Student Association is one of the most important organizations in the American colleges today primarily because it furnishes a means of the students of the country to combine creative ideas to solve problems common to all colleges and universities. The work of the NSA should definitely be continued, promoted by the best student leaders the campuses have to offer. Only through diligent work and complete organization can the NSA be kept at the high level on which it is supposed to operate."

Ward Purrington, UP, also seeks a one year seat. He answered:

"I see no need for mixed honor councils at this time. The separate men's and women's groups have done a fine job in the past; there is no reason to expect that incorporating the two could improve the administration of the honor system.

"NSA has the potentialities of becoming a worthwhile organization, but at this time it is unrepresentative of the student body and therefore unqualified to speak for all of the University's 7,000 students. As its membership becmes more representative it might possibly become a unifying rather than a factional force.

Dorm Men's V

Candidates for Legislature seats in Dorm Men's V replied to the following questions:

1) How do you think the editors of the Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack, as well as the Head Cheerleader, should be chosen.

2) Do you think the drinking rule should be enforced more strictly or not?

Charles Carroll, SP candidate from this district stated:

"I think that the editor of the Daily Tar Heel and the Yackety Yack, as well as the Head Cheerleader, should be chosen from the students that are on those particular staffs and by those staff members. This would enhance the chances of the right person getting the position and at the same time alleviate the problem of a person being elected simply because he is the most popular with the students or because he is the better politician. I think the status quo has done much to enhance this problem while at the same time possibly keeping the more capable person from the position.

"I am in favor of our present policy regarding this matter and do not think that the drinking rule should be enforced more strictly than it is now. True, there is a problem, but this is not the way to meet this problem. Such decisions as drinking should and must be left to the descretion of the individual. College students are capable of making the right decisions concerning themselves and their own actions. To take this freedom from them would, in my opinion, add more to a problem which is already large enough."

Dorm Men's VI

Prospective student legislators from Dorm Men's VI were faced with the follwing:

1) Are you for or against deferred rush? Why?

2) Do you feel the "liberal" cut system adopted last year has been beneficial?

Al Cronenburg, candidate for one of the 1 year seats in this district said:

"On the question of deferred rush, I stand in the opposition. It seems that the main emphasis of deferred rush is on allowing the Freshmen to adjust to college life and thereby make good grades. However, since the primary objective of beloning to a fraternity is to fraternize, it is only logical that the freshmen should go through the fall rush, pledge, and proceed to make and enjoy the friendships that are found within fraternities.

"A great deal can be gained from having such close friends which are gained by fraternal association. I can think of no one better qualified to help a freshman get his feet on the ground than a friend who has experienced the entrance into college in the past. All this lends itself to making the necessary adjustments.

"The 'liberal' cut policy was designed for a good purpose—to place more responsibility toward class attendance on the individual's shoulders. If a student is doing superior work and feels that he can do the same level of work without being in class every day, then that student should be able to take a liberal number of cuts, say three or four.

"On the other hand, those student, who really have to dig hard to pass, ought to feel the necessity of attending class regularly. From my observation it does not appear that all of the faculty has adopted this 'liberal' policy; they are requiring students to attend every class period. If we are going to have such a system, let us at least keep it consistent."

to subversion in the United States, the committee had about enough. The editor would be proud to go on record as saying that neither the Protestant Clergy nor the National Student Association is subversive, Communist, fellow travelling, pink or the like. The editor would daresay that Mr. Mathews' statements about the Protestant Clergy would not keep you from church onSunday. Let his statements on N.S.A. not keep you from the most active participation in N.S.A.

However, this argument must be carried one step further, and that is a reply to the charge that N.S.A. is open to subversion. N.S.A., like the federal government, or the state government, or the student government, operates on a democratic framework in Justice Holmes traditional characterization of a democratic frame work. This allusion is to a marketplace in which the buyers are the mass of people and the sellers are those persons with ideas. Those ideas which are accepted or bought by the people are the practices of their government. It could happen that the idea bought by the people is Communism, but thankfully this has not happened in America, at the National Student Congress, at the University, or in the state. It could happen, but as long as there are people who can articulate the idea of democracy, the editor deems it highly doubtful that it will. Democracy's strength comes from the inner belief that the people will make the right choice.

To bring this discourse to a close, a quotation from someone who is not now or ever has been a Communist should suffice. The following is President Dwight D. Eisenhower's telegram to the students assembled at ast year's Congress of the Nationa Student Association:

—GREETINGS—

Representing a vast and lively constituency, your organization has done much to direct the traditional energies and free spirit of students toward constructive interest in community, national, and international affairs. As you enter your second decade of service I am sure you will continue to advance the building of good citizenship and responsible government, the foundations of freedom and world peace.

Dwight D. Eisenhower
President of the United States

North Carolina has exercised leadership in the N.S.A. almost from the time of its inception 12 years ago. The University should be proud of that leadership, and should continue to try to strengthen the organization by providing new membership from the poorly represented South, and by developing the type of individual leadership of which this state, the University, and the nation can be proud.

The Campaign

One question that has been left entirely out of the election campaign is the question of representation. Couched simply the question asks, "How come that with 7,500 students on this campus, and only 15% of them in fraternities, fraternity men hold over 50% of all offices on the campus."

There is an obvious answer to this in one sense—that dormitory men are unwilling to organize for their rights an privileges unless backed into a corner. So, they let the fraternities dominate their affairs, and unless the ballot boxes are taken out of their dorm, they do not seem to mind.

There is, however, a second factor. This is the factor of the drive and zeal of fraternity men to protect their own interests. It is a natural drive which leads them to fight with more zeal than the dormitory man whose living interests are somewhat more stable. Yet, in the name of campus-wide government, the dormitory man is often forced to serve under fraternity interest government in various areas.

A third factor in this picture is the block vote, which is an especially effective device in election for non-big four or editorial offices. Most students are able to pretty well keep track of the names of the big four candidate, the editorial candidates, and perhaps his legislators, but other choices are often made at random, while the fraternities are all too acquainted as to who the fraternity men are, and they block vote in their own interest.

Thus, from a combination of natural circumstances, fraternity men have been able to thoroughly dominate student government. It is up to the dorm men and women to assert their initiative and make student government a truly representative one—one which will provide leadership for the entire campus. Vote wisely, Tuesday.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication board of the University of North Carolina. There is published daily except Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N. C., under the act of March 8 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

The Daily Tar Heel is printed by the News Inc., Carrboro, N. C.

Eight Paintings On Display In Morehead

Eight recent paintings by Robert Broderson, assistant professor of art at Duke University, are showing on the campus in Morehead Building's North Gallery in an exhibition running through April.

This is the fifth in a series of one-man shows of the work of artists on the faculties of colleges and universities throughout the State sponsored by the University Art League.

Broderson, a native of Connecticut, took up painting as a career after World War II, in which he served with the Air Force. He came to Durham after a brief stay at Emmisburg College, and received his B. A. degree in fine arts from Duke University.

In 1952, after completing a master of fine arts degree at the State University of Iowa, he joined the staff of Duke's Department of Aesthetics, Art and Music. He has taken time out for travel abroad and a year as visiting instructor in painting and drawing at the University of North Carolina in 1955.

Broderson has been exhibiting his paintings since 1949 in North Carolina as well as in regional and national shows throughout the East and Midwest. His "representational" paintings, which have indentifiable objects but tend toward symbolism and abstracte expressionism, have won many awards and purchase prizes.

Critics Praise Book By UNC Professor

Critics are praising another potential bestseller by Prof. Floyd Hunter—Top Leadership, U. S. A.

The ambitious man will benefit more from Prof. Hunter's book than from the popular books of Norman Vincent Peale and Dale Carnegie, declares a national-syndicated book reviewer.

Describing Prof. Hunter as a "back patting and shin kicking author" Clark Kinnaird of King Features Syndicate declares that the book can "be more helpful to the man of ambition than "The Power of Positive Thinking" or "How to Win Friends and Influence People."

This is the second book by Hunter who is a member of the faculty in the School of Social Work at Chapel Hill. The book is published by the University of North Carolina Press. His first book was "Community Power Structure," revealing how top leadership in a large city weilded its power; it attracted widespread attention.

Dr. Hunter names 100 top leaders in the United States. One of the leaders, Robert M. Hanes of Winston-Salem has died since the book went to press. Hanes was the only North Carolinian, now living in North Carolina, mentioned as one of the "finalists" in the Hunter sweepstakes of top leadership in the nation.

Another Tar Heel, Gordon Gray, now living in Washington, D. C. where he handles security matters in the Government and has his office in the White House, also is on the final list of Americans adjudged to be foremost in leadership.

Prof. Hunter has sought to find out the persons who have the most determing influence on national government, commercial, educational and other key policies.

Some big leaders in their conversations with Hunter downgraded their influence, while others fluence than actually they seem seem to think they have more into possess, in Prof. Hunter's opinion.

"Paid employees" of national associations who have lobbying and public relations functions sometimes give the impression of having paramount influence. But the real leadership is often "behind the scenes" and not reposed in the professional workers who are executive secretaries of national organizations. "Some national leaders—not a majority—look upon the associations and their secretaries with contempt," writes Prof. Hunter.

Committee Interviews 12 For Scholarships

Twelve North Carolina boys who are seniors in high school were interviewed here Saturday for the Herbert Worth Jackson scholarship valued at $2,400 for four years.

The coveted scholarship will be awarded to one of the boys on the basis of scholarship and character. The name of the new Jackson scholar will be announced later this week.

The University Scholarship Committee recently selected the 12 finalists from 120 applicants. The award winner was chosen Saturday by a special committee composed of Herbert Worth Jackson Jr., Prof. James R. Caldwell of the Social Science Department and Edward French, assistant to the director of admissions.

The interviews were held by the committee in the Institute of Government.

Current scholarship holders here are the following: Kenneth Hall, senior; Everett James, junior; Ferg Norton, sophomore, and Don Miller, freshman.

Vying for the four-year scholarship Saturday were the following 12 North Carolina boys, seniors in state high schools or preparatory schools: Byrons Ballou from Lumberton, Winston Burroughs from Wadesboro, Bill Brandon from Hickory, Cleve Cherry and Ed Dunn from Rocky Mount;

Manager Explains Water Bills

Some 250 persons working in the field of waste disposal heard Gen. James R. Townsend explain two bills Thursday that are expected to be enacted by the General Assembly to regulated the state's water resources.

General Townsend, city manager of Greensboro and chairman of the N. C. State Board of Water Commissioners, spoke at a luncheon held in connection with the eighth annual Southern Municipal and Industrial Waste Conference. The conference is being sponsored here by the School of Public Health.

The keynote address of the two-day conference, which began Thursday, was delivered by Thomas J. Powers of the Dow Chemical Co. of Midland, Mich.

Townsend explained that under the present setup in this state, no one of the dozens of organizations in this field could establish a statewide policy.

"My conclusion is that there must be a strong central state agency to exercise supervision over the state's water resources. This is the first step toward administration—the setting up of a single state agency to deal with water problems," Townsend said.

The general explained that at the present time there were two identical bills before the General Assembly: Senate Bill No. 20 and House Bill No. 33. These two bills call for the creation of a State Department of Water Resources governed by a seven-member board.

The functions of the State Board of Water Commissioners, the State Stream Sanitation Committee, Division of Water Pollution Control and the principal functions of the Department of Conservation and Development which pertain to water resources are to be transferred to the new department.

"Thus the principal state agencies," the general said, "which are now dealing with water resources will be unified into one agency. The bill is the result of an intensive study and a lot of hard work on the part of the Commission on Reorganization of State Government. A public hearing has been held on the bill, and at this time, all persons who spoke were in favor of the bill and no one appeared to oppose it."

The Greensboro city manager said there was a need for a continuing collection of water data. He pointed out five critical areas such work should be accelerated. These were: 1. The need for topographic maps that are essential to any water program. 2. The need for more knowledge relative to ground water. 3. The need for more knowledge relative to water quality. 4. The need for more information as to stream flow, particularly with reference to those smaller streams where there is a heavy population density. 5. The need for more accurate information on water use.
